Emergency supplies stockpiled in Athens by relief agencies made possible the immediate relief of hardship among earthquake victims. Some of the relief goods actually were being distributed when the later shock hit the area.

Athens' newspapers were unanimous in paying tribute to the example of Christian solidarity provided by American seamen of a vessel at anchor in Volos harbor when the earthquake hit. During the disaster the destroyer beamed its powerful searchlights on the town and provided lanterns which enabled rescue operations to be carried on.

On Dec. 5, 1954, the enlarged church house of the Cloverdale congregation was dedicated, marking the completion of a year's building project. New Year's Day had seen the breaking of the ground for the new educational unit; on April 25 the cornerstone had been laid. The church was ready in December to serve the community

Library of Congress Displays Unique Bible Manuscript

A 1600-year-old Aramaic manuscript, said by several Biblical scholars to be the oldest known copy of the New Testament, went on special display at the Library of Congress. It is a manuscript of the whole New Testament in Christian Aramaic, commonly called Syriac.

According to John Shapley, professor of archeology at the Catholic University, the Yonan Codex, as it is called, is in excellent preservation. The manuscript is dated between the fourth and fifth centuries. This is the first public exhibit of the manuscript since it was brought to America in 1930. It has been reposing in a Washington bank vault where it has been made available occasionally to Biblical scholars. It is valued at $1,500,000.

Congregationalists Propose Improvement in Ministers' Salaries

The department of the ministry in the Congregational Christian Church has recommended the improvement of ministerial salaries on the basis of a recently completed nation-wide study. Recognizing that national averages of ministers' salaries do not provide a good yardstick of what a particular church should pay its minister, the department recommended several ways of improving the take-home pay of ministers.

These included a comparison with the change in the cost-of-living index between 1939 and 1954; comparison with remuneration given persons of comparable educational training and experience; an inventory of all the kinds of support given a minister; giving greater attention to small town and country churches, in order to attract qualified ministers; providing for state or national support for ministers of churches where the membership is small. The department wants to prevent a minister "penalizing his family because he chose to serve in spiritually significant but economically weak parishes."

Capitol Prayer Room In Use Daily

The United States Capitol prayer room has been used every day since it was opened late in March. Members of both the House and Senate are making increasing visits to the room. The highest number of Congressmen making use of it in a single day has been ten. Congressmen have been given the privilege of showing the room to visiting clergymen, but only during morning hours if it is not in use.

Typical Protestant Minister Sketched in New Survey

A typical Protestant minister in the United States is between the ages of thirty-five and forty-four, is married and has two children. He serves a church of about 400 members, lives in a medium-sized Midwest city, owns a car and has a rather slim bank account. He is the best educated preacher in American history, but he faces a far greater multiplicity of problems than did the ministers of previous generations. His job demands that he be a combination of pastor, administrator, counselor, priest, educator, organizer and social actionist.

This picture of an average clergyman results from a study made by Dr. Samuel W. Blizzard, visiting professor at Union Theological Seminary. It was based on questionnaires sent to around 1,600 ministers.

People from all walks of life will pay tribute to Helen Keller, shown above with her dog, on the occasion of her seventy-fifth birthday on June 27. Blind and deaf before she was two years old, Miss Keller is known throughout the world for her efforts to aid the blind. She is president of the John Milton Society, which is sponsored by more than fifty Protestant denominations to render service to the blind

Russian Churchmen Invited to England

The British council of Churches has invited a representative delegation from the churches in Russia to visit Britain during the first two weeks of July. If the invitation is accepted it is expected that the members of the delegation will be the guests of the Archbishop of Canterbury while they are in London and that they will also spend several days in Scotland.

Right to Send Missionaries Defended by Indian Church Council

The right of the church to send missionaries from one country to another has been defended in a statement issued by the National Christian Council of India. The church of India "seeks the assistance and comradeship of Christians belonging to other nationalities." The council attributed the agitation against missionaries to "a religious and cultural reaction" which seeks to identify national culture with Hindu culture.

Only one per cent of the Japanese rural communities have a church. There are only about 200 churches out in the grass roots in Japan. One of these churches, at Imorino, serves twelve surrounding villages because some church in America sent their missionary there a station wagon. It is used to take laymen out to conduct meetings in farm homes.

Agricultural missionaries in Angola, Southwest Africa, conduct "moveable schools." In addition to teaching, preaching and healing, they help villages get a water supply, build an oven for making brick and tile, purchase a village plow cooperatively and put glass windows in the houses.

It is now illegal for children's publications in France to contain anything likely to inspire or preserve racial or national prejudices.

Enough persons have signed a petition to call for a referendum on the proposal that the Swiss government transfer to relief projects half the amount spent normally in one year for the military budget. The Federal Council will now debate the measure and set a date for a popular vote on the question.

A shipment of 35,000 newly hatched chicks was flown to Athens under the joint sponsorship of Heifer Project and Church World Service. It was the first "chicklift" to Greece. At Washington, D. C., Mme. George V. Melas, wife of the Greek ambassador, participated in the ceremony marking acceptance of the 300,000th chick contributed by American church people to aid farmers overseas.

A shipment of three quarters of a million vitamins and sulfadiazine tablets was sent to the Philippines, where they will be used to combat under-nourishment and disease among the many thousands made homeless by recent earthquakes. The shipment was sent by Church World Service in response to urgent requests from the quake-stricken areas.

Ernest A. Gross, former U. S. ambassador to the United Nations, has sounded an urgent call for the United States to join in direct negotiations with Communist China to settle the Quemoy-Matsu dispute. Mr. Gross said failure to negotiate "will continue to undermine our position and, as a direct result, to undermine free world unity."

A Roman Catholic welfare official stated that millions of Americans approve of "millions for relief" despite what the critics, the nationalists and some politicians say. He said, "After twelve years of continuous overseas relief effort, we must continue to exercise our generosity in a testimony of love."

Some 200 delegates attending a Methodist youth conference in Malaya joined in a prayer that Communist terrorists operating in the Malayan jungle would experience "a change of heart."

The United Nations Children's Emergency Fund expects to care for about thirty-two million mothers and children in 1955, compared to the twenty-eight million who benefited from UNICEF disease control and nutrition programs in 1954. Plans call for the vaccination of 15 million children against TB; 1,700,000 children and mothers are expected to be treated for the tropical disease, yaws; nearly 9 million will be protected from malaria.

In April the Japan Bible Society had a threefold celebration: the eightieth anniversary of the Society, the 150th anniversary of the United Bible Societies and the publication of the complete Bible in colloquial Japanese. Representatives from many countries attended this service.

Why Does the Church Concern Itself With Social Problems?

"WHAT kind of a church is this, Miss Williams?" asked Mrs. Greene, when Jimmy's teacher made her first visit to the home.

"What do you mean, what 'kind of church,' Mrs. Greene?" Miss Williams replied. Though the Greenes had attended a church of another denomination before coming to Millville, they knew it was a Church of the Brethren.

"Well, I mean — the other Sunday Jimmy told me his church school lesson was about the United Nations, and he was supposed to find out during the week what the United Nations was doing about health. I don't see what this has to do with religion."

"Yes," added Mr. Greene before Miss Williams had time to reply. "In his sermon last week the minister said we should welcome Negroes and foreigners in our church and in our community. And one of the men at the shop tells me the men's group is going to have a forum on public housing. That's getting into politics. Why don't they stick to the Bible?"

"Oh, I see what you mean," Miss Williams responded. "Our church does have a wide range of concerns. But we do not feel these things are really foreign to the interests of religion. After all, does not the Bible have a great deal to say about peace and brotherhood and justice and human welfare?"

"It does?" Mr. Greene was startled, but interested.

"Why certainly, Mr. Greene. You know, Old Testament prophets like Amos condemned the well-to-do who exploited the poor and the powerful who took advantage of the weak. Isaiah counseled with kings and held out the hope of world peace as part of the purpose of God. And you will recall that the books of Exodus and Leviticus are full of regulations covering buying and selling and the payment of wages, the protection of the worker and the foreigner, and the punishment of social injustice."

"I guess you're right there, Miss Williams," Mr. Greene conceded. "But that's the Old Testament. Jesus did not attempt to legislate for a modern government, did he?"

"True enough," she replied. "Jesus did not write any textbooks on government or draw the blueprints of an ideal economic system. But he left no doubt as to what sort of principles should prevail in our society. Do you remember what he said about love of neighbor, about the danger of riches, about despoiling the poor and devouring widow's houses, about the evil of selfishness and the importance of looking out for the other fellow's interests?

"You see," she went on, "it is basic in our Christian faith that God has a purpose for this world, an interest in man's welfare—a concern for the whole of man's life in the world. One of the precepts treasured by our denomination teaches us that with our whole life we should show our thankfulness to God for his blessing — and that includes our personal and social life, in business and politics, as well as in church and home."

"That sounds pretty reasonable," admitted Mr. Greene. "I suppose what a man believes ought to make some difference in the way he lives all through the week. But, tell me, Miss Williams, why do we have to take up those questions in church and Sunday school—especially with children?"

"Now, Mr. Greene," she smiled,

God did not plan for us to live to ourselves without seeking to help each other. Children need to learn early how to act in everyday relationships. Thus such areas as race relations, love of neighbor, danger of riches, political action, etc., should not be ignored

Bill Smith

"don't we all have to deal with these questions? Sooner or later Jimmy will have to make up his mind whether he is going to work for world community or against it. Even his little sister needs to think about how she should act in her everyday relationships. You and I surely are helping to decide whether Millville is going to be a good place for everybody who lives here. Would you want the church to ignore problems which may make, or destroy, our chances of happiness—our chance of life itself—in our community and in our world?"

"But," broke in Mr. Greene, "could not the church simply teach the essentials of Christian doctrine and general principles of right living and let everybody apply these for himself?"

"Of course," agreed Miss Williams, "in the last analysis everybody has to be responsible for making his own decisions as to how he will seek to serve the Lord and do his will. But God did not plan for us to live to ourselves without seeking to help each other in our efforts to obey Him. Why do you suppose he planned for families?"

"We would be quite lonely without them," Mrs. Greene admitted.

Her husband added a practical observation, "A youngster couldn't survive without someone to look after him."

"Right. People don't normally grow to their fullest without a home. And didn't he give us the church for much the same reason—because we need the fellowship of the faithful—those who believe and are committed—in order that we may explore together what our Christian discipleship requires of us, how we can best fulfill the purpose of Christ and witness to him?"

"But that isn't easy," lamented Mrs. Greene.

"That is just the point. In the church we can consider what difficulties we face and find mutual support and strength to overcome them. Our decisions ought to be more wise and firm because we have the church, the community of faith, to help prepare us to meet them."

"Do you mean," asked Mr. Greene thoughtfully, "the church is interested in the problems we face on the job?"

"And what we need to do to have a better community for our children —and everybody else's?" Mrs. Greene added quickly.

"Yes," Miss Williams assured them, "and how we behave as parents and children, as neighbors and citizens, in every relationship we enter."

"You mean that's why our women's work president advocates writing to our congressmen!" Mrs. Greene exclaimed.

"Yes, that's part of our responsibility, too. Christ is Lord over the whole of life. Everything that touches man's life is of concern to him and his church."

"Well," said Mr. Greene slowly, "I don't quite see where it all fits in, but I guess it's much better than once-a-week religion. That's the kind of church we have needed for a long time."

That Fifth Man

Ellis Shenk

AS ONE walks down the street of a German village or city he may not be aware of it, but every fifth man whom he meets has been or is a refugee. Germany is a land literally filled with refugees, even though this fact may not be too apparent. Imagine everyone in the United States living in the four states of North Dakota, South Dakota, Nebraska and Kansas. Then you will have some idea of how people in Germany live. All of these people live in a country which has been ravaged by war, with cities in which over half of the homes were destroyed. Now, almost nine years after the war ended, large numbers of these dwellings have been rebuilt or replaced, but in the meantime masses of fugitives have come into the country. During 1953 alone, about eighty thousand people emigrated from the country, but at the same time 300,000 poured into Western Germany from East Germany.

Who are these people and where do they come from? Many at present come from Eastern Germany to escape hardships there. They hope to find religious, political and economic freedom in Western Germany. Often they become discouraged and return. Still other of the refugees have been in this country for almost a decade. When previously there was a chance to emigrate, they were unable to do so for various reasons and had to remain in a land which is foreign to them in many ways. Other refugees are those of German ancestry whose forefathers moved to countries to the east where they established isolated communities which spoke German and protected German customs. In the early 40's these ethnic Germans were expelled or asked to return to their fatherland. Here they joined the masses dodging the horrors of war. Today they, like all the other refugees, have to live in a land which is not really their own. They cannot return to the places where they spent their childhood days, nor can they again see many of the friends they left behind. Others have left properties which they have only slim hopes of recovering. Barriers have been set up where once there were no barriers.

In spite of the fact that these people in flight have left much behind, many have nothing to look forward to. True, they are kept from starving by welfare agencies and the German government, and, really, the government has done a remarkable job in this. Compensation is offered for the unemployed and tax exemptions are extended to refugees; new settlements housing thousands of refugees have been built, camps are operated for those who still have to live in them and rooms in already crowded private homes have been opened up.

As a result, many refugees, although employed, live on a subsistence wage. Children must be educated, furniture bought, worn clothing replaced, kitchen utensils purchased, all exclusive of the day-to-day needs. This means tight budgeting with little allowance for emergencies.

What more can be done to help these refugees? The German government is helping many. For some, the only answer is to emigrate to another country where they can find employment at more than a subsistence rate. Emigration is only a chance—a chance taken by two persons on opposite sides of country borders, a sponsor who takes a chance on the refugee and his abilities, and a refugee who risks his future in a strange new homeland. Emigration will not solve all problems—in fact, it will create new ones; but thousands deserve this chance to build a new life where they can live, work and worship as human beings.

Recreation for the Family

Doris Metzler

THE family that plays together, stays together." As we grow older our happiest memories are of those times when as a family we played together, shared together and worked together. The colonial family seldom played together, but because of their great dependence upon one another and family spelling and cornhusking bees, they had a good feeling of "oneness." Today's family must plan their times together so that all members may grow into their fullest stature.

Actually little equipment is needed. Families able to afford materials beyond necessities will wish to supply their homes with some games, records and books, and for outdoor play, balls and tennis racquets. But family fun need not wait until they have the "last word" in equipment; our homes are full of odds and ends —paper sacks, muffin tins, jar rubbers and milk cartons. Families will need such materials as woodworking tools and paints and a rumpus room where the furniture is sturdy and there are shelves for hobbies. A little creativity and originality can make up in fun what one lacks in materials.

As for planned activities, family fun will often center around birthdays and holidays. When the season calls for it, the family should celebrate. If there is to be a birthday party, why not let one of the older children give the party for the honored child? All that is needed are decorations, games and plenty of cake and ice cream. Initiate some family traditions to be carried out at birthdays to add special meaning.

No other holiday offers opportunities in family sharing as does Christmas. With a little originality and early planning, the family can have a true celebration of the birth of Christ. Soon after Thanksgiving, begin to make candles, homemade gifts and decorations. Here is another place to start family traditions by making an occasion of decorating the tree, reading the Christmas story and singing carols. Make Christmas a time of sharing.

Hobbies and Family Fun

The area of hobbies offers unlimited opportunities for family fun, both individual and family hobbies. One field in which the family can take part together is photography. Photography, both taking pictures and developing them, not only offers fun but affords pleasure in the years to come in snapshots and home movies. Woodworking also is a fine family activity. Simple tools will be sufficient for some time and puzzles, furniture, and toys can be made in which the family will realize a money saving. The family ought to have an active hobby as gardening or hiking, as well as collective and creative hobbies.

Crafts have had a new awakening and there is an unlimited variety available — leatherwork, plastics, basketry, whittling, metalwork, weaving and textile and spatter painting.

Under the larger areas of family fun we might divide the activities into indoor and outdoor fun. Under homemade fun come games as ring toss over the legs of a chair, clothespins dropped into a bottle and table croquet. Outdoor fun satisfies the urge for recreation as can be done by no other means. A place in the backyard for a swing and a croquet court and a basketball goal on the garage give children opportunities to "blow off steam." Many more suggestions can be found in the book, The Family Pleasure Chest, by Larry and Helen Eisenberg. I am greatly indebted to them for much general information and some specific ideas which are found in this discussion.

Entertaining will always be a favorite form of family recreation; make it a family affair with the small children helping to set the table, making place cards and planning the after-dinner recreation.

Reading together as a family will never go out of style as long as there are children. Beginning with Peter Rabbit, the family will progress through Kim, the Heidi books, and Robin Hood stories. And never forget Tom Sawyer and Huck Finn, whose adventures are as dear to the adult's heart as to the child's.

The family making music together and listening to records can add much to family fellowship. Listening to the radio and watching television together should not be overlooked as they are indispensable in the life of many families.

Every family sooner or later will be faced with rainy days and convalescent problems. "What can I do?" the child asks. One family had an indoor picnic when their planned picnic was spoiled by rain. Indoor camping can be fun on a rainy day. Turn a card table upside down and throw over it a blanket. Happy hours will be consumed by the children in packing bedding and lunches. One father solved the sick-bed problem by having the children take a sea trip, the bed being their boat.

Many families find that mealtime is their best time to have fun. Table conversation can be a real test of a family's resources; make it a creative talk fest in which each member shares experiences of his day or play games as I See Something, answer quiz questions or have spelling bees. It is the wise family which takes advantage of the small moments.

Working Together

Ignoring child labor laws, there is much to be said for child and parent laboring together. Singing while doing the dishes, telling stories while canning peaches, talking together while gardening makes work more pleasurable. Let your children feel that they are a part of a going concern by giving them real work and then trusting and praising them for their efforts.

Breathes there a family with soul so dead that they don't enjoy a picnic out in the pasture or in the back yard? For a picnic with a real thrill to it, bake your potatoes in the open fire or cook your stew over the campfire.

If you are a rugged family and your budget is limited, make your vacation into a camping trip in one of your state or national parks. Plan your equipment, route and provisions early and plan for a not too rigorous schedule because tired travelers do not make happy campers. Stop early in the afternoon, pitch camp and begin exploring. If a vacation is out of the picture, camp out some night down by the back pasture stream.

Home is the place where one learns joy, love, fairness, respect, loyalty and leadership—where the true art of living is taught. In the words of Voltaire, "After you have sought over the wide world, you learn that happiness is to be found only in your own home."

Help Church Ushers Serve You

EARLY in the church year, the ushering staff of the Westminster church, Md., met to study The Art of Church Ushering so they could improve their ministry.

The church has a fine group of men who serve. They desire to do their best. They need the co-operation of all worshipers. Some suggestions which will help everyone are:

1. An usher is a representative of the church and he functions for the best welfare of the service and for the comfort of the worshiper. He is a host; you are his guest. Permit him to help you.

2. We have a serious problem with a much-too-small vestibule. Serious congestion develops as people enter and depart. People upon entering are urged to keep moving to avoid crowding and embarrassment. Ushers will be waiting to take you to a seat.

3. Another difficulty is a Sunday-school class in the sanctuary. However, you need not wait or be embarrassed to enter the sanctuary when the class is in session. Please enter quietly and be seated. To remain in the vestibule causes congestion.

4. Please fill front pews first. Leave rear pews for latecomers. Otherwise latecomers must go to the front after the service has begun; this is often embarrassing for them and a disturbance to the service.

5. Be courteous to an usher. If he is taking you to a seat, follow him; do not slip in somewhere behind him. Say "thank you" to him after he has taken you to a seat.

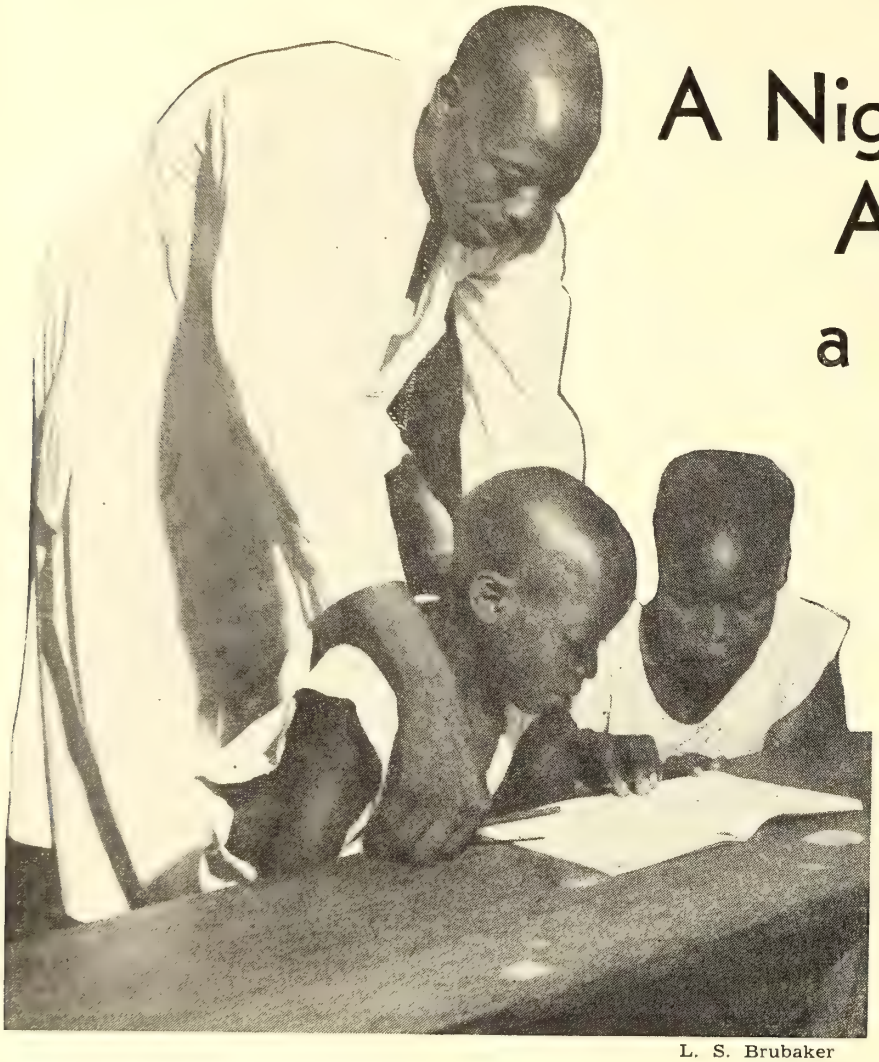
6. It is impossible to ventilate satisfactorily for 260 people, but we try. Speak to an usher about your preference regarding seating, temperature, ventilation. We will try to make the place healthful and comfortable. Dress appropriately. Don't be overly fussy.

7. The service begins with the first note of the organ. The minute you enter the sanctuary, reverence and a worshipful spirit should prevail. During the prelude, sit in silent meditation, read the poetry of a hymn or two or some passages from the Bible; relax and prepare yourself for meaningful worship. If you must whisper, make it low and brief; better still, whisper a prayer.

8. Have a friendly, warm attitude toward other members and visitors. A smile, a gesture, handing a hymnal, sharing a bulletin, helping with a coat, picking up a child's toy, a warm handshake, etc., will help.

9. Try to spot strangers and visitors. Make them feel welcome. You might ask them their names, from where they have come, or where they now live if they have moved to the community. Express appreciation for having them present and invite them to return. More of us could invite people who have come a great distance home for lunch. Don't ask too many questions, get too personal, slap their back, or crush their hand when shaking it. make sure the minister knows they are here. Give him their names and addresses, written on a piece of paper.

10. We provide nursery facilities for all children up to four years of age. We encourage their use by all parents; most of our people use them. If a mother is having a rough time with a child, unless there is something specific we can do, the rest of us can usually help the most by ignoring the child and the disturbances he causes. Don't embarrass a mother further by staring at her. If a child is behaving, don't disturb him by making eyes at him, talking or giving him things. It is understood that if a child becomes too restless or begins to cry, the parents will remove him.



11. In case of an emergency, illness, fainting, etc., unless you can help, keep your seat and remain calm; by all means avoid a panic. Nurses or those trained in first aid should get up to help immediately. A doctor will also do this.

12. The board above the radiator in the vestibule is for tracts and literature which are important in the work of the church. It is not a hat rack!

13. We will appreciate suggestions to improve our ushering and the significance of the service. Thanks for your co-operation.

A Nigerian Village Asks For a Teacher

Clara B. Harper

L. S. Brubaker

SEVERAL of the young men in the village of Puba went to the chief and older men of the village and asked if they had seen the educational progress being made in the neighboring village. The children and young people, they pointed out, were reading and writing and seemed to know what was going on in the world. They were also learning new ways which made village life more enjoyable. After some discussion the elders decided to send a delegation to the church at Shafa and ask for a teacher for their village too.

Three young people arrived at the school office in Shafa and wanted to talk. "We are the people of the village of Puba," they began "and we have come to ask for a teacher so we can learn like our neighbors."

"I'm sorry," the missionary answered, "but I cannot take care of this alone. I will call some of the members of the church committee and talk it over." The church committee and the pastor were called together and in a short time the young people from Puba repeated their request.

"You are young men of the village." The committee inquired, "Do the chief and the older men agree with your desire for a religious instruction class?"

"Yes, they are willing."

The investigation became more detailed. "How many compounds do you have in your village or in surrounding villages?" The church committee always asks this question because it has learned through experience that at least thirty compounds are needed to support a village school.

"We have forty compounds and there are three near-by villages which can send their children to our school." The young people in their enthusiasm for education had passed the first two tests in establishing a school.

"Do you know that your village will need to build a place for the classes to meet as well as a compound for the teacher?"

Not discouraged for a moment the youth reported that they had heard of this requirement and they were sure their village would be willing to do the building.

"But that's not all," the committee went on. "The children who come to school will need to pay small tuition fees. They will need to buy school supplies. Another thing we would like is for your people to find a way to support at least half the salary of the teacher. You can do this by having a community peanut or cotton farm and by bringing money for an offering every Sunday."

On these difficult matters the young representatives were not prepared to speak for the village fathers. But before they could become discouraged the Shafa pastor suggested a plan to help them. "You have heard our requirements. Now we want you to go home and call your people together and tell them what you have learned. To have a school in your village you will need the co-operation of your whole village. When your neighbors have decided they want a school and will work to support it then come back and meet again with the church committee. Bring two older men with you and if the neighboring villages want to send their children to the school bring someone from their villages too." The young men left hoping above all to get the elders of their village to sponsor a school.

If the village agrees to the things outlined by the church committee then two members of the committee will visit the village and help choose the site for the classroom and the teacher's compound. The villagers will erect the buildings with the church furnishing the doors for the classroom and the teacher's house. When all is ready Puba will get a teacher.

For two and one-half hours in the morning he will teach the children reading, writing, arithmetic, Bible and hygiene. In the afternoon the young men and women will come to be taught. The new teacher in Puba, who himself will have only a primary education, will be a very busy man with great responsibilities.

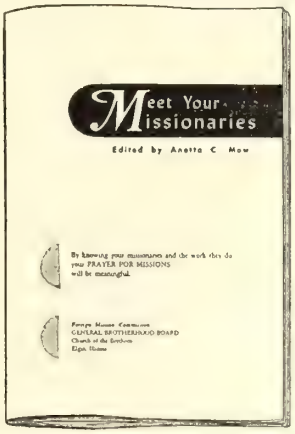
One day a month the church asks the teachers from all the villages to come to the mission station. At this meeting the teachers bring the money they have received for supplies and report on their progress and problems. The villages are also encouraged to bring their school troubles, when they exist, to the church committee and in this way the schools develop into a real community asset.

As often as possible the village classes are visited by a member of the church committee. If the village gets lax in its support, through teacher support, co-operation and fees, then the representative of the church committee calls the villagers together to remind them that education is their responsibility as well.

Puba is just one of many villages in Northern Nigeria that are asking for a schoolteacher. With every Nigerian who answers the call to teach the hope rises that another village will soon have had the minds of its youth opened to reading, writing and the truths they can carry.

FAITH MISSIONARIES

Leland S. Brubaker
Executive Secretary, Foreign Mission Commission



RECENTLY there came to my desk a note from one of our General Brotherhood Board members enclosing a letter which a friend of his, a member of the Church of the Brethren, had received in the mail.

The purpose of the letter was to make a strong appeal for financial undergirding because the sender was going to Bolivia, South America, as a missionary under a so-called Faith Board. The inference was that missionaries going out under regular mission boards do not need to exercise any faith and that this person should be financially supported because he was going out without the financial backing of a board.

The inference in this letter bothers me a great deal. Let there be no misunderstanding among our own people about this matter. All missionaries working under the direction of the Church of the Brethren go out on faith — faith that the church will not only support them with their prayers and with their substance, but also that God will bless their work. True it is that our own missionaries do not seek to raise funds for themselves. Rather they have faith in the giving of members of the church to support the Brotherhood program so that they might receive their own missionary allowances. There is great opportunity for missionary work within the Brotherhood Fund.

Let no one deceive you as to the faith of our own missionaries who work diligently and faithfully under the direction of the General Brotherhood Board. Actually some of those who go out under so-called Faith missions receive salaries much larger than do the missionaries of the Church of the Brethren. We have a very well-trained, experienced and deeply consecrated mission staff. They should be continually undergirded by our prayers and by our giving through the Brotherhood Fund.

Impressions of Puerto Rico

Charles E. Zunkel

FOR several years I have been eager to visit Puerto Rico, especially Castañer. The organization of our young church there had made me feel that Ministry and Home Missions had an interest in it as well as an obligation toward it. This visit provided the occasion to see and learn what is being done, also to plan with the church leaders for the erection of a much needed house of worship. Mrs. Zunkel accompanied me.

The Flight

This was the first occasion either of us had to travel over the ocean by plane. The flight from Miami, Fla., to San Juan, a distance of some twelve hundred miles, was made during daylight. It was a thrilling experience, a most wonderful way to travel.

By coincidence, Miss Anna Mae Swank, the new laboratory technician for Castañer Hospital, joined us at Miami and we flew together. The pilot favored us, as we neared the island, by circling considerably, allowing us to get a good view of the island and of San Juan, Santurce and Rio Piedras.

Upon landing and checking through inspection we were met by Bro. Eugene Carper, with the project's new red jeep, and Dean Kagarise, one of the project helpers.

Since it was nearly five o'clock and the trip to Castañer required four hours of time, we stayed all night at the Methodist mission school, known as Robinson School. It's warm hospitality and comfort were greatly appreciated.

Land of Contrasts

One of the early impressions of Puerto Rico, an impression which recurs frequently, is that of marked and strange contrasts. It was an impression that was a lasting one and came from many aspects of the island's life.

It came first as we saw the new modern buildings of the city and next day saw the old, old sections of it. The airport was thoroughly modern and beautiful. Scarcely had we left it until we saw the large Carribe Hilton Hotel. It was as beautiful, on the exterior at least, as any of the Hilton hotels of the States. Robinson School, too, was beautiful and spacious and equipped with the best of modern conveniences. Next day Mrs. Zunkel, Anna Mae and I roamed the streets of old San Juan for a few hours while Bro. Carper attended the last of Spanish Church leaders' conference. Many of the shops were as old-world as one could imagine, but within the same block could be found the most modern store imaginable. In the midst of old apartment houses, which had once been Spanish mansions, there would rise some new, beautiful modern structure, housing a modern bank or apartment store. One could scarcely believe his eyes, as he saw it.

Although we did not know a word of Spanish, store clerks knew sufficient English that we could make a few purchases very easily. Goods in the stores were, for the most part, imported from the States.

We were struck by the contrasts again as we walked down the streets and looked through the open windows (few windows in Puerto Rico have glass; they have just shutters) of these old, old apartment houses and saw beautiful new bedroom suites or living room furnishings.

All over the island the contrasts persisted. The homes the people lived in, the methods of work, the dreary houses and the beautiful flowers in the yards, oxcarts and automobiles, poverty and riches—all of these and more bore the same testimony — sharp contrast.

The Geography of the Island

Puerto Rico is only one hundred miles long and thirty-five miles wide, yet it has the second most dense population in the world. There are over two million two hundred thousand people — six hundred thirty per square mile. The United States has only fifty per square mile.

Running the full length of the island is a range of mountains, much like our Appalachian, covered by a rather dense foliage of coconut palms, bananas, coffee and myriads of kinds of flowering trees.

The coastal lands are flat and rather intensely farmed with sugar cane. The sugar interests in the early day pushed the native back into the mountains where their meager huts thickly dot the roadsides and hillsides.

Economic Conditions

Judged by our standards, most of the island people are poor. Eighty per cent of them fall in this category; ten per cent are middle class; and ten per cent are rich.

The homes of the common people are usually two-room huts, built on stilts, with a lean-to kitchen attached. The charcoal grate in which the cooking is done soon smudges the interior and leaves it dark. Exteriors are almost never painted. Such houses have but one small bedroom. Where would you sleep a family of ten or more in such a room? They solve the problem by using hammocks and placing them at different levels. The beautiful, modern homes of the finca owners stand in mute contrast to these.

Wages on the coffee farms usually run around $7.50 per week when the season is in full swing, but in the off-season the worker may get half of that. Even though the finca owner may provide a little house rent-free, and bananas, oranges, lemons and other native fruits, it is rather difficult to clothe and educate a family of eight to fifteen children on so little cash income. Many of the people have no shoes. With the lack of sanitation, hookworm is prevalent.

Government Developments

Beginning under the Roosevelt Administration the PRRA (Puerto Rico Rehabilitation Administration) started to improve the island's whole life economically and educationally. In recent years this has all been turned over to the insular government and they are moving ahead rapidly in slum clearance, irrigation and power dam construction, school development and health program. It is utterly amazing what has taken place and what is in process of development now.

One could write voluminously and enthusiastically of this development, but space does not permit it.

Land of Friendly People

We had read before going that the Puerto Rican people are both friendly and dignified. Both are true. Again and again we were amazed at the degree of genuine friendliness mainfested. At almost every turn of the crooked mountain roads we saw children playing, often a mother in an open doorway, and always a genial smile and the greeting Adios.

It was demonstrated over and over in acts of real generosity as well. One could scarcely admire a beautiful flower without having its owner pluck it and place it in your hand. With such seeming little to give, they always gave so much.

tament. Truly they were inspired by the Holy Spirit. They not only counted the cost, but they also made great sacrifices in order to afford it. They were eight against the world and the victory was theirs. What if they had been willing to be conformed to the existing denominations of their time? Can the Brethren of today afford to compromise? Would you sell your birthright for a mess of pottage?

The Brethren have always left the way open for interpretation of the Bible through the inspiration of the Holy Spirit. This is one of the reasons why I have chosen the church for my own.

There are those who say that the observance of certain ordinances, such as the love feast and feet-washing, are unnecessary as long as we practice their symbolic meaning in love and service to others. Yet in the observance of these very ordinances is found the source of power and strength for service. "For without me ye can do nothing" (John 15:5).

In the Great Commission after the word "Go," the next commandment to "teach." There would be no point in going without teaching or telling the good news of the gospel. The next commandment is to baptize and here is where many would compromise. But then it probably seemed like foolishness to Naaman, the great man, the man of valor, captain of the host of the King of Syria, when the prophet ordered that he must dip himself seven times in the River Jordan in order to cure his leprosy. Although Naaman knew that he was a leper and wanted to be cured, he thought it should be done his way. He tried to compromise but it didn't work.

The next commandment in the Great Commission is, "Teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you." There certainly is no room for compromise in this. Having gained members and baptized them, the work of the church does not end there. A New Testament church is a teaching church, and the teaching ministry is not only to the "little children," but for the "young men" and the "fathers" to whom the Apostle John writes. I am glad for the extensive teaching program of the Brethren church.

When the early Christians were scattered abroad they took advantage of their opportunity for spreading the Gospel. When members of the Church of the Brethren are scattered, when they move to communities where there is no church for them, there is great opportunity for spread of the church. Instead of being consumed by other denominations, they could become missionaries for the church. Perhaps the answer to this would be in financial help and encouragement from the Brotherhood.—Mrs. Margaret E. Wanner, Bethel, Pa.

Church News

Southwestern Kansas

Wichita, First—Two worship services were held Easter morning. In keeping with Holy Week, the film, I Beheld His Glory, was shown on Palm Sunday evening The women of the church conducted a prayer vigil throughout the Lenten season. Six were baptized on Easter and one was baptized the following Sunday. Thirteen have been received by letter since our last report. The women's fellowship groups have been working on comforters and other relief materials. Ten of our ladies attended the district women's work spring rally at the Eden Valley church. Also ten of our men were in attendance for the district men's work rally at the Salem church. Our local men's work group is sponsoring a displaced family from Europe and is supporting a volunteer worker in Germany. A banquet was given by the men's work for the men and boys of the church. The church sponsored a banquet for the church school teachers and workers. The eastern subdistrict rally of the CBYF was held in our church Programs and speakers for our school of missions included Brother and Sister Peters who spoke on the Brethren Service work in Europe; Isaac Grillo, a native of Nigeria and student at McPherson College, who told of the religious and political problems in his native land; Chin Kyung Cho of Seoul, Korea, who sketched the religious, political and economical life in Korea; and Bro. G. A. Zook, field secretary, who told of the work involved in promoting home missions. On McPherson College Day Bro. D. W. Bittinger, president of McPherson, was with us. A special offering was given to the college. Another important milestone in human relationships was when our choir exchanged places with a large colored choir for the morning worship.—A. B. McAuley, Wichita, Kansas.

North Dakota and Eastern Montana

Cando—Our church met in spring council with assistant Elder Byard Snyder of York, N. Dak., presiding. Our pastor and his wife, Brother and Sister Duncan, are to represent us at Annual Conference. District meeting delegates are John Wagenman and Ruth Beck. Our CBYF group has been having a professsional speaker at its regular monthly meetings. We participated with the Assembly of God and Methodist churches in union pre-Easter services with the Revs. McNutt, Kepler and Duncan delivering messages on their scheduled evenings. Our men's organization entertained the families of the church to a dinner followed by a picture of the International Olympics. On Easter evening the choir presented a program. We extend an invitation to people going to Annual Conference on highway number 2 to find overnight lodging by coming to Cando and calling the undersigned, phone 2124.—Mrs. L. R. Maust, Cando, N. Dak.

Grandview—Our minister, Bro. Emswiler, attended the district leaders' conference at Elgin, as well as the McPherson trustee meeting. In his absence Eunice Swank, district children's director, spoke to us on Christian education as related to children's work. We have had a series of Bible study and discussion classes this winter. The Easter play, The Terrible Meek, was presented by recording and pantomime by the intermediate pupils on Easter evening. A service of baby dedication was held on May 8. Our women's work group is active in furnishing our new kitchen as well as in the community work.—Mrs. Mark Emswiler, Froid, Mont.

Northern Illinois and Wisconsin

Elgin—Our treble and senior choirs presented a vesper program the evening of March 27. On Palm Sunday thirteen members were received by letter and reaffirmation of faith and twenty were received by baptism. At an evening reception for them that day they were informally introduced to the congregation. During Holy Week, services were held three evenings with Brethren J. Henry Long, Kenneth Morse and W. Harold Row bringing the messages; on another evening of that week our love feast was conducted by Bro. Kenneth Morse. Brother and Sister R H. Miller of Manchester College were our guests recently; on Saturday evening they showed pictures taken in Egypt, the Holy Land and India, and on Sunday morning Bro. Miller was the guest speaker. The first Sunday of each month a social hour is enjoyed before the morning service in order to permit a widening acquaintance and a deepening fellowship in our steadily growing congregation. A school of family living was held the last three Sundays of April under the leadership of the Wendell Rolston family.—Ora W. Garber, Elgin, Ill.

Lena—Our school of missions was held during the month of January. The district meeting will be held at our church this fall. The Clarence Yeager family presented a piano to the church as a memorial gift for Mr. and Mrs. David Yeager. The men of the various churches co-operated in a religious survey which was held in our community. A father and son banquet was held in February. Our quarterly council was held in March with Elder Paul Haworth of Rockford officiating. Our church co-operated with the other churches in Lena on World Day of Prayer. Pastor Ockerman was in charge of the service at the Mt. Morris Brethren Home on the afternoon of March 13. An installation service was conducted for our new deacon and his wife, Brother and Sister Garver Lutz, on March 13. Our communion was held on Thursday evening, April 7. Twelve were baptized, two received by letter and one was received by former baptism at Easter time. We were host church for the district youth rally in April. Our church co-operated with the other churches in Lena in the Good Friday three-hour service.—Clara Sandrock, Lena, Ill.

Milledgeville—The district young adult rally was held at our church with Bro. Byron Royer of York Center as guest speaker for the evening session. The CBYF sponsored a program with Dale Blough of Polo, Ill., showing pictures of his work in Alternative Service under Brethren Service for the past two years in Greece. Recently Brother and Sister Clarence Heckman, missionaries on furlough, talked about and showed pictures of their work in Africa. Twenty ladies from our church attended the spring rally at Elgin. The finance committee of our aid sponsored a spring frolic fellowship supper. The offering received from this supper was given to the church building fund. We have been in the process of remodeling our church since last summer. Dedication service for the remodeling and redecorating of the interior of our church and for the new church furniture was held June 5.—Mrs. Frank Livengood, Milledgeville, Ill.

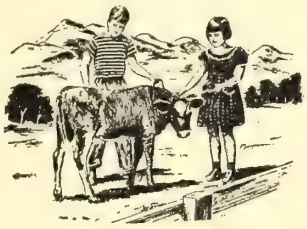
Mt. Morris—The young people of our church gave an afternoon program at the Brethren Home. Several from our church participated in the Council of Churches community Christmas caroling. The children's department gave the program entitled Song of the Star. The Beloit College choir, which was sponsored by the Council of Churches, sang in our church one evening. Marvin Sherman showed pictures of his work in Puerto Rico. During the absence of Pastor Dean Frantz, our assistant pastor, Alan Whitacre, had charge of the Sunday morning service. The film, Shepherd of India, was shown for our first session of our school of missions. Other programs for the school included Miss Hazel Messer from the India mission and Dale Blough, who showed pictures and talked concerning the work in Greece. The Wells agency conducted a canvass with the loyalty dinner being held in the Lutheran church. During the victory dinner held in our church, it was announced that $162,000 had been pledged to date. We participated in the World Day of Prayer service which was held in the Lutheran church. The spring council elected Merle and Dale Henricks as delegates to Annual Conference. We also participated in the Council of Churches Lenten services. Bro. Raymond Peters was with us for our Holy Week services. The CBYF and women's groups have attended their respective district rallies. Discipline and Discovery, by Day, is the book being studied by the spiritual research group which meets every two weeks in the homes of various members. Don Snider was guest speaker for the Council of Churches father and son banquet. Joyce Kinsley, Barbara Neismeir, Carol Rittenhouse and Joel Plum attended the youth seminar in Washington, D. C. Several from our congregation attended the convocation service at Manchester College. Our church participated in the January to Easter church crusade.—Mrs. Robert Fridley, Mt. Morris, Ill.

Middle Indiana

Flora—Our church held a New Year's watch party with a supper, games, stunts and the film, Again Pioneers. Our church also participated in the Week of Prayer services, which were held in the various churches of the town. The men's work has sponsored the redecorating of the church basement A public address system has recently been installed. Mrs. Calvin Bright spoke at our family night service. Our pastor taught a class in our county leadership training school which was held in the Methodist church in Delphi this year. Bro. R. H. Miller showed pictures and gave a lecture on his recent trip abroad. Bro. Paul Robinson and his family were with us on March 6 and Bro. Robinson spoke at both the morning and evening services. Lenten evangelistic services were conducted by our pastor. Eight were received into the church by baptism on Easter evening. Lenten prayer vigils began with Ash Wednesday and continued through March 30. Home visitation evangelism classes were conducted by the pastor. Our love feast was held on Monday evening, April 11. We joined with the other churches of Flora in the union Easter sunrise service and Good Friday services. The district men's rally, at which Roy T. Combs of Indianapolis was speaker, and the district children's workers' conference at which Mrs. Dan West was speaker, were held in our church. Our annual birthday supper was held on Sunday evening, April 24.—Esther Stinebaugh, Flora, Ind.

Northern Indiana



English Prairie—Our week of pre-Easter services were conducted by Bro. Robert Lee Kranning of Bob Jones University and by our pastor, H. H. Hendricks. Nine decisions were made for accepting Christ. Some of this number chose to join other churches. Our communion was held April 7 with our pastor in charge. We met for business meeting on April 14. Our pastor and his wife will represent our church at Annual Conference. Vacation Bible school was held May 9-22 at the Brighton school building with all the churches of the township participating. Our basement project is partly completed and we expect to finish it in the near future.—Mrs. Lydia Walters, Howe, Ind.

Pleasant Chapel—We began prayer meetings on March 22 with our pastor, Bro. Israel Gorden, as our leader. This is the first time for such meetings. Our church co-operated with three other churches of different denominations in a week of pre-Easter services. On the closing night, we used the film, All That I Have. At our April fellowship program, Mrs. Lloyd Studebaker showed pictures of their mission work in Africa.—Ocie Hamman, Corunna, Ind.

West Goshen—Our church met in regular council on April 5, with Elder M. D. Stutsman in charge. Our pastor, Bro. Harry Eshleman, held pre-Easter services. Two were baptized and two were received by letter. On Sunday evening, April 17, Mr. Lamey, a representative from the Indiana Temperance League, spoke at our church.—Mrs. M. C. Agley, Goshen, Ind.

Southern Indiana

Four Mile—On Feb. 6 we had a dedication service for the seeds of hope during the morning service and in the evening the young people showed the film, Like a Mighty Army. On the afternoon of March 6, Elder J. Calvin Bright presided at our business meeting. Bro. John E. Smeltzer was chosen to represent our church at Annual Conference and Albert Brown and Calvin Cheek at district conference. One new member has been received into our fellowship by letter. A number from our congregation attended the World Day of Prayer service at the Liberty Methodist church. Some of our people attended the area women's work meeting at Muncie on April 6. Our pastor conducted pre-Easter services beginning on Palm Sunday and closing with communion on Thursday evening. Peter and the Resurrection was presented on Easter evening. Our CBYF group has been singing for the shut-ins. A deputation team from Manchester College was with us on May 1. Our church and the Hanna Creek Congregational Christian church observed 4-H Day at our church on April 24.—Alice M. Brower, Liberty, Ind.

From the pen of the author of Brethren Story Caravan comes this new heartwarming story of the experiences of one family in raising a heifer for relief. While this is a narrative of one family's experiences, it could be a composite of all those who provided heifers. Thousands of families throughout the United States co-operated in the Christian, humanitarian and far-reaching program that provided food —and hope—to so many needy families in other countries. This is indeed a story for entire family reading. Children will be delighted with it. Beautifully illustrated. Every church library should have a copy. 88 pages. Cloth. $1.75

Michigan

Flint—We held our communion services on the evening of April 3. At Easter, King All Glorious, was presented by the choir, followed by a sermon by our pastor, David Landis. The young people of the section met at our church on April 17. The choir from the Flushing high school gave us four numbers in song. Our mother and daughter dessert was held April 30. The adult fellowship class is planning to purchase folding doors to enclose the balcony.—Ella F. Leffel, Flint, Mich.

Northeastern Ohio

Ashland City—Bro. Harl Russell talked with us one Sunday and helped us make plans for our every-member canvass. Bro. Russell V. Bollinger of Manchester College was guest speaker at our church for the district youth rally. A school of evangelism was held on Sunday evening. Bro. Clayton Berkshire, secretary of the missionary board for the First Brethren church, gave an illustrated lecture concerning his recent deputation trip to Africa and Europe. The annual school for Christian service for the churches in the western part of our district was held in our church on Tuesday evenings. Race Relations Sunday was observed with Rev. Lafurd Young of the Negro church in Ashland bringing the message and a choir from the same church giving a number of selections. Bro. John D. Long of Lancaster, Pa., was our evangelist for a week of meetings in March. Sixteen new members were received by baptism and six by letter and rebaptism. Communion services were held on Thursday night of Holy Week. The Manchester College choir gave a concert in our church one evening. The women of the church made a number of comforters and friendship packets to be sent to New Windsor for relief. In February the ladies sewed for Bethany Hospital and in April they had an afternoon and evening work meeting to sew for the Ashland Samaritan hospital. The men's work promoted the district project of supporting Wendell Flory on the India mission field. The men also worked with the community sale which was held May 7 at the Ashland fair grounds by subdistrict one. The proceeds were given to the new mission church in Painesville, Ohio.—Mrs. Glen Roberts, Ashland, Ohio.

Eastern Pennsylvania

West Greentree—Visiting ministers since our last report have been James Daughty of Elizabethtown College and John Shuman of Annville, who held a series of pre-Easter services at the Greentree church. As a result of these meetings one person was baptized. The Elizabethtown College a cappella choir presented a program at the Greentree church on Feb. 13. At our March council meeting Walter Shank was licensed to the ministry. Paul Eugene Hollinger and LeRoy Hawthorne were elected as deacons. Several of our men attended the spring men's work fellowship at the Hatfield church. Five of our women ironed and mended at the Neffsville orphanage.—Mrs. LeRoy Hawthorne, Rheems, Pa.

Southern Pennsylvania

Marsh Creek, Gettysburg—A special program for the 150th anniversary of the Marsh Creek congregation and the 50th anniversary of the Gettysburg church was held April 29—May 1. Bro. A. Stauffer Curry was with us for the evening meeting on April 29. A musical program was held on Saturday evening and Bro. Roy K. Miller, a former pastor, was with us for the Sunday morning service. An informal meeting was held on Sunday afternoon. A play, written by Pastor Robert Knechel, depicting the historical facts, was presented by the young people on Sunday evening. On April 4 ten new members were baptized into our church.—Ruth Leer, York Springs, Pa.

Welty—On April 3 in the absence of our pastor, Bro. William Kinsey of Greencastle, Pa., had charge of our worship service. During Holy Week services were conducted by our pastor, Bro. J. E. Rowland. On Easter evening our church choir presented the cantata, Portals Everlasting. The choir also gave the cantata at the Fahrney Memorial Home on the evening of April 13. Our regular business meeting met April 14; at this time Bro. Rowland was re-elected pastor and elder. Bro. LeRoy Wastler was accepted by the church as a volunteering minister. The church also called two of our young men, Brethren Kenneth Eshelman and Barry Stevenson, who will be licensed in the near future. On April 17 Bro. Gray from Elizabethtown College was with us for a two-session Bible institute. Our love feast service was observed on May 7.—Esther V. McCormick, Highfield, Md.

BUILT UPON A ROCK

EVERY one then who hears these words of mine and does them will be like a wise man who built his house upon the rock; and the rain fell, and the floods came, and the winds blew and beat upon that house, but it did not fall, because it had been founded on the rock. And every one who hears these words of mine and does not do them will be like a foolish man who built his house upon the sand; and the rain fell, and the floods came, and the winds blew and beat against that house, and it fell; and great was the fall.

Summer Pastoral Program

The summer pastoral program has proved its usefulness to the churches, to the pastor and to district mission work. It is coming to be a growing part of church work. Personally, I am wondering about its first trial, when and by whom? Here is my earliest recollection:

About the close of school at Bridgewater College in June of 1907, Elder E. D. Kendig asked me about spending the summer months at the Concord church (near Staunton), if he would make arrangements with the members to care for me and make some donations for my time in the work. I gladly accepted his plan and prepared to go as soon as the commencement exercises were over. Bro. Kendig had asked some of the heads of families how much they would give toward my summer work and one said she would give ten dollars, if she liked me. Having always loved boys, at the first service, I sat down by an eleven-year-old boy and put my arm about his shoulders. This boy was the son of that sister who had made that offer. I had not known of her conversation with the elder. My home was in any home in the congregation, though some more than others.

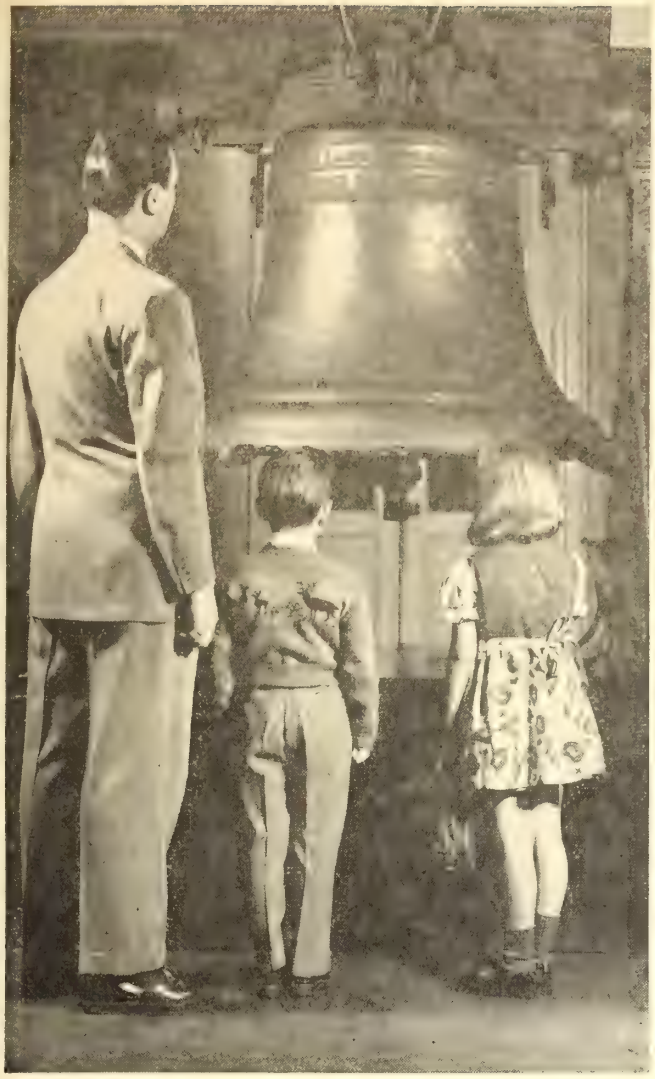
My work in sermon-building in the class at Manchester College with Bro. P. B. Fitzwater came in good place and here was an opportunity to build up that part of my ministry. In looking back over the experiences I feel sure the congregation did not benefit any more than the summer pastor did.—James H. Morris, Tampa, Fla.

Fitly Spoken

Attending a little party with individuals of different faiths I overheard my church mentioned and involutarily I asked, "What's that?" A newcomer to town, to whom our church was quite new, answered, "Yes, that's right. A member of the Christian Science church told me that members of the Church of the Brethren never run down other churches." I quickly brushed aside any negative reaction and spoke my sincere feelings: "That is the most wonderful compliment I have ever had for my church." Deep within me I resolved that I would try to live up to this good thing I had heard and do all within my power to make my church praiseworthy.

How praise builds us up! Often have I thought of my daughter who studied the violin for many years. When she was still quite small how well do I remember her reaction to her teacher's mood. If she had had praise for the merest progress she came home happy and in hours of practice the ensuing week she strove for perfection that she might win more praise from her teacher next lesson. But sometimes there was only dour criticism throughout the lesson and a little girl came home in tears vowing she would never take another violin lesson. This was the end! How about changing over to piano lessons? Practice was shunned for a few days until the sting of criticism was eased and her subsequent youthful decision, "There is so much more music in a violin," sent her back to the instrument which became very dear to her.

How wise old Solomon was when he said, "A word fitly spoken is like apples of gold in a setting of silver." —Icel Keim, Wenatchee, Wash.



In All Churches

We need food for thought in order to grow in grace and in favor with God and our fellow believers. How can it be otherwise if we are to contend earnestly for the whole counsel of God! The purpose for these differences of opinion in the churches is made evident by 1 Cor. 11:19, using Weymouth's translation: "For there must of necessity be differences of opinion among you, in order that it may be plainly seen who are the men of sterling worth among you."

There are those who have striven for the high calling in all churches. Why did Jesus speak in parables? He said, "That seeing they might see and still not perceive, hearing they hear yet do not understand."

To the disciples were given the mysteries of the kingdom but the parables were for those on the outside. Why? I sincerely believe it was to pick for himself a body to rule and reign with him in his kingdom. Only those who sincerely sought to know the truth would be eligible.

To those who merely cry, "Lord. Lord!" he said, "Depart from me for I never knew you." I am sorry to say we have both types in all churches and more perhaps who cry, "Lord, Lord," than those who diligently seek the truth.—Gladys Woods, El Cerrito, Calif.

The Crack in the Liberty Bell

Dean L. Frantz

When we force everyone into the same mold and require everyone to think the same and to act the same, we are free no longer.

IN AN alcove of Philadelphia's Independence Hall, there is an object of which every school child in America has heard—the Liberty Bell. Standing out in bold relief on the bell are these words, taken from Lev. 25:10: "Proclaim liberty throughout all the land." But the smooth exterior of the bell is marred by a great crack.

It is not easy to cast such a large bell so that it will not crack under the pounding of its huge clapper. The Liberty Bell was recast twice and still it cracked under the strain. That bell is symbolic of the difficulty of maintaining a freedom which will not crack under the pressures and strains of life. It also points up the fact that something has happened to our own heritage of freedom and liberty here in America.

This is a time for sober thinking. It is so easy to mislay the meaning of great events. This is particularly true of Independence Day, when we may give our attention to merry-go-rounds, fireworks and picnics, but may miss the real reason behind this national holiday. Some of us may be like that individual who went to hear a political speech. He shouted himself hoarse in cheers for the speaker. Someone asked him what he thought of the speech. He answered, "I didn't come here to think; I came here to holler." As we celebrate Independence Day this year, let us do so, giving serious thought to freedom and its implications for us.

There are some indications that there are some cracks in the freedom which is America's heritage. Last year, one of America's leading churchmen was subjected to an excruciating experience. Bishop G. Bromley Oxnam, one of the former presidents of the World Council of Churches, was questioned by the Senate Investigating Committee. As one who reads the verbatim report of the hearing, I was astounded by some of the procedures which were used in his case. Since then, Bishop Oxnam has written a book, I Protest, in which he protests against the reckless and irresponsible procedures of investigating committees.

We have also read of good men in government service, men who have had their character defamed and their employment

The deepening atmosphere of suspicion and fear is making us afraid to speak out; when we begin to weigh our words and become cautious with our speech liberty vanishes threatened, because of unproved charges made against them. What we are seeing now is trial without jury in many cases and the use of the assumption that accusation constitutes conviction, regardless of the truth or falsity of the charges.

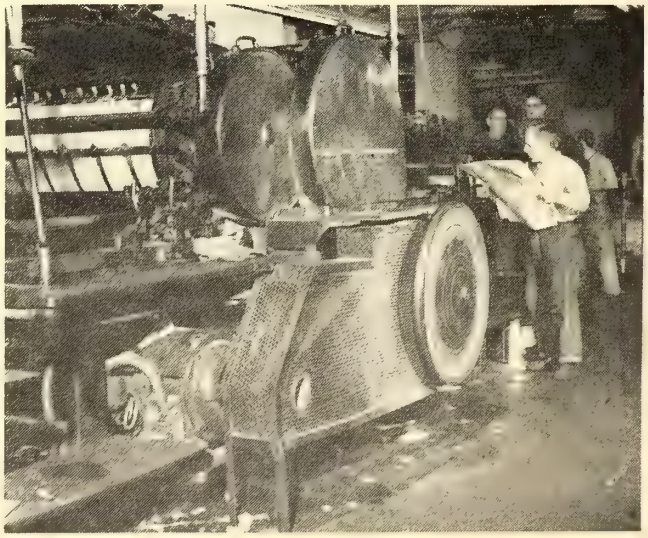
But there is an even more subtle aspect to this crack in our freedom. Academic freedom is being threatened in some quarters. There is an attempt to limit what professors may teach in our institutions of public education. A visitor to one state university asked his guide whether the facts about communism were taught in this university. The guide answered, "Certainly, we teach the facts about communism. We also teach the facts about cancer, but we don't advocate either one of them!" The loyalty oath is demanded of the professors in some educational institutions. To many people, the requirement of a loyalty oath appears to be a perfectly logical procedure. However, loyalty cannot be determined by oaths and oaths only invite falsehood. Loyalty oaths are just another evidence of our fear.



Of whom are we afraid? Do we attack communism because we must find a scapegoat for the weaknesses of our own way of life? Another evidence of the danger confronting us is that some publications from abroad are being banned. Recently, a thousand copies of Peace News, a British publication, were stopped at Boston. Peace News is a publication which advocates pacifism and neutralism in the current international dilemma. But who has the right to decide what Americans should or should not read? Again, of whom are we afraid?

But the deepest crack in the bell of freedom is the deepening atmosphere of suspicion and fear in our nation. Our faith in one another is being undermined. We are beginning to withdraw within ourselves. We are afraid to speak out. As Ralph McGill of the Atlanta Constitution says, "We have lost, and let none think that this isn't true, the very essence of America and of freedom, that of not being afraid to speak our mind."

Thomas Jefferson once said, "Eternal vigilance is the price of liberty." The first step toward a solution of our problem is to be aware of the problem. There are a great many people who go blithely about their business each day, assuming that all is well with the world, taking for granted that freedom is intact. But the price of liberty is careful watching and eternal vigilance. I shall never forget what Elton Trueblood said some years ago, long before the heyday of congressional investigating committees—"Our danger will lie in those who use the Communist scare to bring in their own form of danger. Watch out, not for the things everybody is attacking, but for what the attacker brings."

Those who would destroy America's freedom are sleight-of-hand artists. When you watch a magician, you will always be mystified if you keep your eyes fastened where he tells you. While you listen to his patter and concentrate on what he is doing, the most important thing about his act is what is happen-

Alternatives to Catastrophe

NO MATTER how our readers may feel about the accomplishments of the United Nations, we believe they will be interested in the articles in this issue, appearing on the tenth anniversary of the signing of the UN Charter at San Francisco in 1945.

We call special attention to the article by Kermit Eby, which was given originally at a model UN assembly held on the Manchester College campus. Two editors of local newspapers in towns not far from North Manchester commented editorially on the speech. One editor made several unfair and false accusations which were later retracted. Someone—he failed to say who—had warned him about the speaker and had urged him to speak against his appearance. So the editor rebuked the speaker and the college, concluding that teenagers should not be exposed to the ideas that our readers can read for themselves in this issue.

But the other editor, who was also warned against the speaker, ignored the advice to make an issue of his appearance before high school students. Instead this editor thought that peace "is a timely subject. It needs exploration by everyone." He quoted the speaker on several points, commenting that such ideas should stimulate thinking.

We mention these editorial reactions because they represent two common attitudes toward controversial subjects. Some persons seize every opportunity to discredit those with whom they disagree, using loaded words and phrases, innuendoes and outright falsehoods to make their point. Others believe in justice and fair play. They are willing to hear each man state his case. They regard open discussion of debated issues as the best method of helping men and women—and also high school students—think their way through to sound conclusions.

We are happy that Manchester College made it possible for high school students to consider the alternatives to catastrophe that Kermit Eby proposed. He has taken his Brethren heritage seriously and demonstrated that it has something to offer in these confusing times. We hope the college pays no heed to the threats of misguided citizens who want freedom of expression only for their own ideas. We believe not only peace-minded church people but all good Americans will support an institution that stands up for the right to hear an informed speaker discuss a timely subject. If teenagers are old enough to be faced with conscription, they are certainly old enough to consider some alternatives to national suicide. —K.M.

Second Thoughts for Travelers

THE travel folders are tempting. Give them a second glance and soon you will be fishing a mountain stream, sunning yourself on the deck of a tramp steamer, gazing from super-dome dining cars at snow-capped peaks, relaxing on the beach at Waikiki, listening to waltzes in Vienna or riding a camel before the Pyramids. The adventures of armchair travelers are always so rewarding that even if you never get beyond reading road maps, timetables or the recommendations of Duncan Hines, you catch the excitement of faraway places and strange-sounding names.

Suppose you do travel this summer. Will you be merely a tourist, guided deftly from one comfortable hotel to another, or will you travel with eyes and ears and heart attentive to see how others live, to listen when they speak, to respond to their needs with understanding?

The travel folders are usually misleading. Everyone knows that a government-sponsored tour of Russia reveals only one viewpoint on life in the Soviet Union. But how many travelers, free as a bird in their choices of where to go, really see an American city, slums and all? If your driving is limited to superhighways and boulevards, if your overnight stops are at the best motels, if your motive in traveling is merely to escape reality and to avoid unpleasantness, then your money is wasted on a partial view, though indeed it may be a lovely one.

When you proudly show your colored slides and exhibit your acquisitions this fall, will your comments indicate that you met real people—not only waiters and guides and fellow vacationers, but persons so different from yourself that your world was enlarged? Can you report that you ate with and worked with people of another race or class, so that you learned what they thought, what they hoped for, what they desired for their children?

Many of our church folks who can afford foreign travel wisely plan to spend part of their time helping out in Brethren Service or foreign mission projects. Others who cannot go so far away plan weekend visits to work camps where they share in the chores (and the insights) that come to the campers. But even if you cannot take more than a few one-day excursions around home, the opportunities to learn and serve while you visit are always present.—K.M.

TODAY'S CHURCH in History's Stream

The church must be a lighthouse to guide waiting humanity to a continued awareness of God's salvation through Jesus Christ, to a radiant, buoyant fellowship among Christians, to a concept of something that transcends time and history

A. Stauffer Curry

TWENTY years ago, after making a trip through Russia, E. Stanley Jones said "Amid the shock of things I emerged from Russia with two things: (1) an unshakable kingdom and (2) an unchanging Person." He has been reminded of two scriptures from Hebrews: "We receive a kingdom that cannot be shaken," and "Jesus Christ is the same yesterday and today, and forever." These scriptures were full of meaning to one who had just seen all the manifestations of a dialectical materialism at work. These Biblical gems are just as significant to us now as we observe a vast and complicated world full of all sorts of currents and crosscurrents moving around today's church in history's stream. Let us look at some of the currents and crosscurrents moving around today's church.

First, there is the current of a rapidly growing population. According to reliable sources, our population will grow from 165 million this year to 200 million in 1975. Presumably this rate will hold for the Church of the Brethren. If we hold our own, we will grow from 200 thousand currently to 270 thousand in 1975. In fact, if we do not gain about 70 thousand members, we will actually be losing for the church our own offspring. In addition to holding our own, we are responsible for at least some of the forty per cent of our population who are not now church members.

To do all this will require 350 new churches in 20 years—an average of 18 per year—or a comparable growth in size of existing churches.

Who will knock at the door of the church in the next twenty years? One sees first some thirty to forty thousand children at his very moment growing up n our homes. Will they be of-ered the pure bread and water of life, or will they find thrown n some sand consisting of curi-ous mixtures of religion and secularism, parents at times saintly Christians and at other times emotionally immature pagans? Or homes guided more by "What will they say?" than by the seeking of God's will in all situations?

One sees also, according to the best statistics, several times as many of our youth in colleges as at present. They are seeking bread. Will they find bread in our schools to nurture their minds, personalities and spirits, or will there be some stones of poor facilities, underprivileged faculties, insufficient resources, or desultory spiritual climate because the church was not aware of the place of the colleges in an expanding population and did not support them.

The New York Times informs us that half of the capable youth of our country never go to college at all. It seems certain this is true in the Church of the Brethren. These youth literally knock, seeking bread by the very act of God-given talents and abilities. Will we offer stones of insufficient scholarships by local churches to these students, or by absence of insights by parents who cannot understand the value of a Christian college education? The unconverted man across the street is knocking for bread, as is the unconverted fellow office worker, buddy in the factory or hired man in the fields. Do we give them the stone of an uncertain witness or perhaps even throw stones by never speaking for our Lord?

Thousands of church school pupils will knock for bread. Will they receive it, or will they be handed a bread and sawdust concoction of poor content, poor methods, weak message, inability to cope with the disappearance of youth from church school at the junior high or intermediate age?

Every pastor knows how loudly the great mass of inactive members knock on our doors. For some reason the food has lost its flavor, and they are doubly difficult to feed.

Part of our answer to those who knock at our door will be constant prayers for them; constant prayers for the Christian educators in our colleges; prayers for our general Christian educators in the local church, district and Brotherhood; for our evangelists and home mission workers in the isolation of the mountains or the confusion of the large city. We will pray for the work of the Christian Education and Ministry and Home Mission commissions of our board. Not to pray and serve is to offer sand and stones to those who knock.

Today's church is also in a current of rising national consciousness around the world. Many nations recently won independence and have their own sovereignty. Several things happen. They react against many things foreign within their borders. Included is the relief and missionary work of the churches. In the May 15 New York Times there appeared another article describing the precarious state of missions in the country of India. Missionary and relief workers are called on to demonstrate that their work is under no foreign influence, and they have only the welfare of those they serve in mind.

A second thing that happens is the extension of Communist influence. The Communists capitalize upon prejudice and frequently these nations themselves hardly know, even though they are throwing off one foreign influence, that they are embracing another foreign system far more evil than anything they formerly experienced. It is in the swirl and churning of this situation that our foreign missionary and relief workers find themselves.

In those areas of the world where physical and spiritual needs are equally acute and where one can not be filled without filling the other material aid and spiritual ministry should go hand in hand

Religious News Service

Already two decades ago E. Stanley Jones said there is a race on in China between communism and Christianity and communism is leading! How right he turned out to be. It is quite apparent this same race continues today in the Middle East, in Southeast Asia, in Africa and elsewhere. The future is grave, as these nations make their choice.

We have every confidence to believe that Christianity will not be on the losing end of this struggle, if proper steps are taken. To begin, Christianity has to prove the inherent goodness of its way of life. Unless it can, why should any Moslem, Hindu, Buddhist or spirit worshiper turn to the Christian faith? Second, material aid and a spiritual ministry should go hand in hand. Over the past six years I have heard Agriculture Department officials say repeatedly they cannot ship our vast multimillion dollar surpluses overseas lest it interfere with our markets abroad and with the markets of foreign businessmen. Therefore, billions of dollars worth of food rots while millions starve around the world.

It seems this whole problem of the church's relationship to rising nationalism raises the question of the relationship of missions and relief. Because spiritual and physical needs seem equally intense and acute in many parts of the world, and where one need cannot be filled without filling the other, it seems obvious that in many parts of the world relief and evangelism must be operated hand in hand. Perhaps temporary shifts and adjustments need to be made. In places, perhaps, missions should expand independent of a relief program; in still others, it is probable relief should expand independent of missions. In some instances relief should be withdrawn and missions should move in; or in some circumstances missions should temporarily withdraw and relief activities should carry on until the people are nourished sufficiently to be receptive to an evangelistic message.

Thousands of church school pupils will be knocking on the door of the church in the next twenty years and the church needs to be preparing better curriculum, well-trained teachers and adequate facilities to meet their needs

Today's church is in the cross-current of power to build greater military weapons than ever before, and at the same time a growth in awareness of the futility of war. The destructiveness of modern bombs is, in the words of Representative Cole, "absolutely terrifying." The next war will be the end of humanity, not only civilization. Even non-pacifist church leaders are admitting that force of arms will never prevent the spread of any ideology. But yet the world continues the maddest armaments race in history. As a church we have done much to uphold conscientious objection and to oppose UMT. Our efforts have been quite successful. But it is doubtful if these efforts have sufficient breadth in themselves as peacemaking activities. Some years of observing various church groups in Washington lead me to the conviction we should be doing as much on a dozen or more additional peacemaking programs as we are doing on behalf of the conscientious objector and in opposing UMT.

There is a genuine concern among many lest our country become a military dictatorship. This does not seem immediately probable, but there is the inherent danger. Just several weeks ago both parties in Congress applauded long and loud the fearless colleague who had the courage to accuse the Armed Services Committee of taking their orders from the Pentagon. The spontaneity and volume of applause indicated clearly the anxiety lest our legislative bodies are forced to take orders from the military—obviously signs of military dictatorship.

An outstanding characteristic of this point in history is a trend toward more religious thinking and activity on one hand and a growing secularism on the other. The same daily papers which report that religious books are among the best sellers also report that juvenile delinquency is at its greatest peak. The same statistics which show that more people are attending church than ever before also indicate that more are patronizing places of secular entertainment.

Perhaps this strange mixture of facts is due to people becoming interested in one segment or phase of religion, but not comprehending the meaning of faith to the whole of life.

Take, for example, the emphasis on "peace of mind." Everyone rightfully deserves it. But the focus of peace of mind is of utmost importance. Some people experience it when they can sit on the lawn in the shade even during church time. Some attain peace when they can drink "philosophy's sweet milk," but not to be disturbed with a Christian morality. Others feel peace when they utter a few appropriate phrases about their salvation and confuse it with the actual receiving of God's grace.

There is true peace of mind when it grows out of a satisfied sense of divine urgency to save the souls of others; to visit the sick and needy; to clean up the filth and degradation of slum communities; to offer one's life in service at home or abroad. But always, of course, this peace of mind must be undergirded by a saved relationship and a sense of personal fellowship with our Lord, Jesus Christ.

Let us thank God for the great increase of interest in things religious, the wide reading of religious books, the production of religious drama, attendance at religious services. Let us also pray God for grace and power as a church to capitalize upon this interest in the direction of a deep and vital mass religious experience which will give God the praise and bring salvation to all men.

As the church stands in history's stream attempting to perform its function, it needs some absolutes to offer the world. To continue the figure, there are several lighthouses which we must allow to shine brighter and brighter to guide a waiting humanity. First of all, there is the lighthouse of a continued awareness of the salvation of God through Jesus Christ. We may never forget the true nature of our Lord Jesus, as well described by Hastings: "Christianity from the first viewed its founder as a super human being, as one who had become incarnate, who thus as an incarnate divine personality, exercised all the functions of an exemplar, revealer, and redeemer distinctly and with ideal completeness, and who met the fundamental needs of man for moral harmony with God, for victory over evil, and for eternal life." God through Jesus Christ gives to us eternal salvation.

I shall never forget the Moslem conscientious objector who expounded to me in prison his Moslem beliefs. I shall not forget the group of Communist youth on a boat returning from Europe who fervently defended the Marxist doctrine. It seems non-Christian groups are succeeding in developing a community of the followers of Moslem, of Marx or of others. Can the Christian community have the radiant buoyant community spirit among its followers which will shine as a brilliant light in a world of darkness? If so, the world will be redeemed and the course of history will be changed as it flows on through the generations and centuries.

Third, there is the lighthouse of God's eternity, beyond the stream of history and time. By the word eternity, we do not mean simply an unending extent of time. But in the words of Mackenzie, it is "that which includes time, but somehow also transcends it." This is the concept of eternity that has moral significance. Psychiatrists, for instance, know that to be cured patients need a concept of something beyond themselves—beyond time and temporal and physical relations. Religionists know that to have a faith and to have salvation itself men must be aware of something which transcends time and history.

Sometimes we cannot explain our guidance in life; we cannot give a rationale or logic behind it. But we are sure the guidance is present. We literally move in the spirit of Beery's great hymn, "Lo, a gleam from yonder heaven shines upon our starless night. Like a kindly hand it beckons."

We recognize the twofold nature of God's kingdom. In the words of the text, "it is a kingdom that cannot be shaken." In it, "Jesus Christ is the same yesterday, today, and forever." It is a kingdom on earth that requires that we take off our coats, roll up our sleeves and seek God's guidance, and work to fulfill in all of its implications. It is also a kingdom in heaven, which we contemplate amid our daily joys, cares and service.

Right Path

MILDRED ALLEN JEFFERY

Lord, thou hast marked a path for me—
A path which I can only see
When I walk very close to thee.

I dare not let one footstep stray
For it might lead me far away
And grieve thy Spirit night and day;

But guided by thy Word I'll know
Thy plan for me, which way to go—
Why thou hast led me thus and so.

And when at last thy heaven I make
For thou hast shown which path to take—Receive me, Lord, for Jesus' sake.

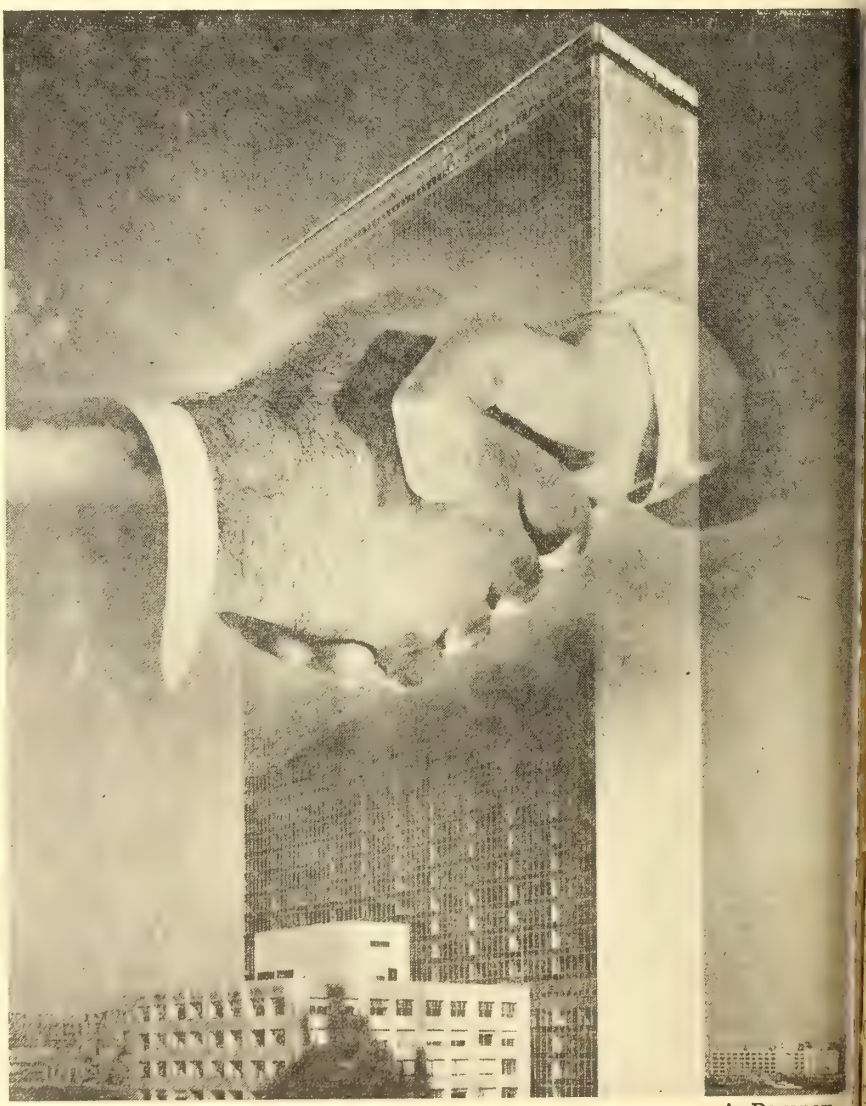
Kermit Eby

I WOULD like to believe that man is rational and humane and can achieve his ends by rational and humane means. And then I look about, read the nearest newspaper, listen to the radio in the next room and my faith sinks, for on every page, on every voice, there is the announcement of ever-present violence, ever-present death. And this death we face is man-induced.



Certainly, it is called upon man born of woman to die. As C. M. Forster said, the two most significant events in life, birth and death, we experience alone. No dictator can regiment death. It is, as the course of the sun in the sky, destined to be our end. There is also the hope that between birth and death, life run its course. Children are born to continue the stream of life where their parents end it. Thus it always has been and, thus, I would like to believe, it will always be, and then I am reminded that we are living in the age of the H-bomb; in the age of the possibility, yes, probability of generic death—the death of the species known as man.

This is a fact that few of us care to face. The mere examination of the idea taxes our minds beyond endurance. Contemplation of it can drive us mad. So we push it out of our consciousness and go about our daily work. We are apathetic because of our own numbness. We feel that there is nothing we can do, that our destiny is in the hands of a few men in positions of great power. "Since there is nothing we can do, let us enjoy the moment," is our cry!

But there are things we can do. As Americans we can begin by understanding that war can come to us! You see, Americans do not really understand what war is. To us, it is something that is fought on foreign soil, over foreign cities. We need to understand that bombers destroy houses and that people live in houses, people like us.

Let me tell you how I felt when I stood on the streets of Hiroshima some six months after the bomb fell and realized that on this spot thousands died as innocent of the causes which produced their death as you or I. On those streets I reaffirmed my Brethren heritage, my inherited conviction that war is the transcendent evil from which all social evil springs. Further, I resolved that it was my responsibility to help create an ethic to match the weapon. And then it occurred to me, how foolish! The ethic exists in our Judeo-Christian heritage. All we are called upon to do is to give it meaning.

Probably, to spell it out, you can understand how I felt if you can picture in your mind's eye the little schoolgirl who pointed

A. Devaney

A government of law through the larger and more powerful collectivi of the United Nations will achieve a greater security for all at her devastated school, then to the sky, and said, "One plane, one bomb." (Formerly bombers came in waves, one plane was usually thought of as on a reconnoitering mission and likely without bomb load.)

Some months later I was in Washington at a briefing session by the "brass" in the Pentagon. They told us about Hiroshima, the destructiveness of the weapon and predicted fifty per cent casualties in the next war. At this point we paused for questions, and Jerry Voohees, former congressman from California, asked, "General, which half will it be in?" Of course, the next question follows: What will the half which is left do? And that is the question today. Except I would prefer to begin answering it before there is only a remnant left.

It seems to me, we would best begin by seizing and maintaining the moral initiative. This is what Jesus taught when he asked us to "return good for evil" and to "turn the other cheek" if we are struck. Today, as I tried to explain to Senator Jenner in our brief meeting and in a letter, we are permitting the Communists to seize and keep the initiative for peace. We denounce the Stockholm Pledge as if it were of the devil and forget the hunger for peace of the millions of Russians who signed it, for Russian mothers love their children and Russian lovers, too, prefer life to death.

This is another obvious fact which needs to be understood. All men, including Russians, are God's creation, and God can work through other history than our own. Remember how Amos chided the Israelites when they forgot the universality of God:

'Are you not like the Ethiopians to me,
O people of Israel?' says the Lord.
'Did I not bring up Israel from the land of Egypt, and the Philistines from Caphtor

The children of the United Nations secretariat read the Charter of the UN

and the Syrians from Kir?'"

I might add, parenthetically, if any of you ministers are inclined to preach on this text, you had better stick to Philistines and Ethiopians, not substitute Americans brought out of Europe seeking a better destiny through revolution, and Russians and Chinese, likewise rebelling against reaction, as I once did! And now let us be specific. I have a plan.

My plan is simply an elaboration of the Christian ethic through a universalization of the heifer program. A wonderful program, indeed. As far as we can ascertain, not a single Brethren cow has refused to give milk for political reasons. Probably, because no children behind the curtain are born flying the hammer and sickle. And I assure you mine were not born figuring compound interest. Could we not be as wise as cows, understanding the universality of man and his needs?

Budgetary choices are moral choices. Each year we spend thirty to forty billions of dollars to insure our security and with each bomb we are less secure. This being true, why not try an alternative plan? Why not spend, say one fourth of the amount spent for direct defense, say ten to thirteen billions, to train young people, Americans and others to bring food, technical know-how, agricultural advance, to the people of the world. Let us do this completely separate from any political consideration. Do it as the Brethren do it, face to face and with love in our hearts. Most certainly we could do more to stop communism by relieving hunger and misery than we can by forever threatening man's extinction with the bomb.

Now for those who do not think we should give up our armaments, I have another suggestion. Each year our gross national products expands our living standard from eight to fourteen billions of dollars. Instead of raising our standard of living by such amounts, why not agree to live at present levels and use our unearned increment for peace? Certainly this would not be too much to give, particularly by a people who are always afraid they will eat too much and gain weight. Have you ever thought how paradoxial it is? We worry about too much to eat when eighty-five per cent of the world goes to bed hungry every night.

Incidentally, in 1933, I discovered as I hitchhiked through Asia, what Arnold Toynbee confirmed, namely that the masses of the people of the world no longer accept hunger as inevitable, and most certainly they are rejecting all forms of imperialism. In a word, we are living through an age of revolution, one which the Communists did not create but which, through our default, they are successfully exploiting.

It is because I believe that our security no longer rests in force that I suggest this alternative, preferring always, if I must die, to do so on my moral terms, rather than my enemies'. And now let us move from economic to the legal; from considerations of bread, to the rules by which men live.

May I state almost as a truism that the evolution of man as a civilized being has been marked by the substitution of law for force? Anthropologists tell us that man was once completely free and completely afraid. He stalked the forests alone and cowered in his cave at night. Finally, because of biological differences and social necessity, the family was born. With it came the first division of labor. The clan, an aggregate of families, was the next in the evolution of human institutions governed by rules for the in-group. After that, there was feudalism, the city and city-state followed by the kingdom and now the nation. Each became more inclusive, and in each the security of the whole depended increasingly on a government of law.

Today, we are on the brink of a new era, one which will see the world become one as nations give up their right to act unilaterally. Believe me, unilateral action on the part of nations is as anarchistic and as dangerous as it was for a single man. As I said at the outset, we face generic death—the possible death of the species through weapons that once released no man can recall. I realize it is a gruesome reminder but the H-bomb is a democratic instrument: it cremates all equally, has no respect for capitalist or Communist.

So in the words of Leyton Richards, I insist "we can only have peace when the enforcement of the law is removed from the hand of the litigant (nation) and placed in the hand of the court" (United Nations).

Now, I know the UN is weak; I know what needs to be done to strengthen it, but in spite of its limitations it is the best institution we have created for the purposes of achieving and expressing the collective will.

Today there are many small and physically weaker nations who do not want to be caught in either the Russian or American orbit. Many of them have experienced war and are exceedingly anxious not to be caught in its maelstrom again. There are others, like you and me, who do not like to be backed into history, do not like to feel that our very lives are dependent on the fact that since wars cannot be won, general staffs are going to be unwilling to attempt them. Perhaps Winston Churchill expressed the dilemma when he said that "the increasing security of the last few years is derived from the awareness of the awfulness of atomic warfare" or to be exact, "security is the sturdy child of terror, and survival the twin brother of annihilation."

Small nations and many individuals are like the little man who bumped the truck. The angry driver jumped out of his cab brandishing his monkey wrench. Cowering beside his car, the little man wondered what his fate would be? He was too small to fight and too frightened to run. Fortunately, before any damage could be done a police car drove up and the law intervened. For a brief moment it appeared as if we were to revert to the law of the jungle, of government by a single man. Then the "law" intervened. Behind the police were the courts and behind the courts the law, and behind the law the sanctions of society.

Imagine, if you please, what a great city would be like without traffic regulations or stop lights. Here we literally give up our freedom to drive as we please, so that we have the freedom to move at all.

When I was a student at Manchester I used to have the freedom to call nine girls for a date each Saturday night. They also had the freedom to refuse me. Later, I asked one girl if she would hold her time every Saturday night for me, a sort of modus operandi. I gave up the freedom to call nine others for the security of having one answer yes! Thus it has ever been in the evolution of man under law; to gain freedom we must give up anarchy. We have th

CHARTER DAY — 1955

Frances Fenner

JUNE 26, 1955, is Charter Day. The City of San Francisco is the scene of extensive preparation and elaborate activity, in commemoration of the tenth anniversary of the signing of the Charter of the United Nations in 1945.

Throughout the world the attention of men of goodwill is focused on the City of the Golden Gate, where representatives of the UN's sixty member governments have met together during the weeks of June 13-26 to participate in the various phases of the observance. The programming of the meetings is in the hands of the UN which is represented by a special committee consisting of Belgium, Canada, China, Czechoslovakia, Ecuador, France, India, Lebanon, Turkey, U.S.S.R., United Kingdom and the United States, under the chairmanship of the secretary-general, Dag Hammarskjold.

The General Assembly of the UN by resolution, called upon the governments of all member states to give all appropriate support to programs in their own countries designed to commemorate the tenth Charter Day. In participating in these worldwide observances, people cross national boundary lines and join hands in tribute to the international organization that offers man's best hope for cooperation in building a warless world.

When Mayor Robinson of San Francisco issued his invitation to hold commemorative ceremonies in the birthplace of the United Nations, delegates remembered the warm hospitality and convenient arrangements provided by the city a decade before.

After several visits to arrange for details of the meet, which in its various phases covers some two weeks before the final June 26 services, the events finally unfold before a waiting world. In addition to scientific, cultural and social events, seminars, panel discussions and large public meetings are featured on the program. Civic leaders plan to print a commemorative volume consisting of the speeches and proceedings of the meetings, in the conviction that the expected contributions will be of wide and general interest.

The classic architecture of the San Francisco City Center, facing the Opera House, where most of the 1945 meetings were held, makes fitting framework for the State House upon whose mall an honor guard stands at attention within the hollow square made by the staffs of the flags of the sixty member nations. The traditional architecture of these buildings symbolizes the accumulation of the best that history has to offer in seeking solutions to the problems of mankind.

The graceful dome of the State House, as it overlooks the scene, seems to point upward to the Fatherhood of God, its windows looking far and wide, embracing the brotherhood of man. It reminds us that no wilderness is so wild, no savage so untamed as to live without the fundamental institutions of government. From the simple jungle chieftain and his warriors to the elaborate, complex parliamentary systems, men have found that the institutions of government are necessary and desirable to meet their needs in living together in an orderly and peaceful fashion.

That the world community still lacks an established authority to transcend the unbridled will of nations is one of the striking paradoxes of our times. That men of goodwill—who constitute the vast majority of law-abiding citizens of the world—are willing and eager to accept the institutions of law and order in their world community is amply demonstrated by the fact that already sixty national governments have signed the Charter that is honored on its tenth birthday. Public sentiment for membership is running in increasing waves in many other countries, not now listed on the roster of membership of the UN.

The work so far accomplished in the UN, and let no one minimize its value, together with the great humanitarian services of the subsidiary agencies, emphasizes the willingness and desire of people to co-operate and live at peace with one another. Why then, wars, and still more wars?

Look again at the City of San Francisco, made up as it is of all ethnic groups, all religions and all colors, living together in peace. Conflict, crime, disorder, when it occurs, is the exception that illustrates the rule that the majority live out their quiet, law-abiding lives in good order. What is the potent binding force that enables the residents of San Francisco to live their lives without fear of organized annihilation by their neighbors?

Churches, schools, civic and fraternal institutions, true. But these may be found at work in any civilized community, have reached advanced stages of development in the very countries most vulnerable to exchange of the hostilities that we call war.

One thing more is there and that is government. The residents of San Francisco, too, have a "charter." But it is a legal document, in effect since January 1, 1900, providing an executive branch, headed by the mayor, a legislative branch consisting of the board of supervisors, and a judicial branch, in which a system of courts dispense justice to the individual citizen.

The residents of San Francisco elect their supervisors, and so are governed by representatives of their own choosing. A system of checks and balances, written into the charter, operates on the executive and judiciary. The laws are binding upon all residents, equally, who find in the regulation of their community, advantages and protection that compensate for any transient personal inconvenience. This community, like other cities, states, and nations, has learned that government is better than anarchy, the rule of law better than lawlessness.

The lesson is here for the world to read. Will the handwriting on the wall be seen, translated, heeded, in time?

UNations

The Opera House, left, where most of the meetings of the conference which drafted the Charter of the United Nations were held, faces the Civic Center, right. The State House, center, towers above the scene

Within the stately walls of the Opera House there was enacted a scene of starkly simple drama. Before the global emblem of the United Nations Organization, the encircling flags of the members, the delegates signed on that historic day, June 26, 1945, the solemn pledge, "to save succeeding generations from the scourage of war . . ."

The Charter provided that, like any living thing, it could grow and develop to meet future needs. Under Article 109, it could be amended; a review conference is to be considered by the tenth General Assembly which meets in October of this year. If the peace of the world is to be maintained and secured, if mankind is to experience a new birth of freedom, this review conference provides a great hope and opportunity.

If the Charter of the United Nations is to become fundamental law, if the United Nations is to be given the powers and prerogatives of government, then we who are to be governed must be willing to accept the responsibilities of citizenship and discharge our obligations.

A variety of means for political action are open to the concerned citizen. The first one is the sincere desire to inform himself and to act with the courage of his conviction.

The eyes of the world are on San Francisco, on the domes of State Houses everywhere. Let not government of the people, by the people, for the people, perish from this earth!

ing somewhere at the side of the stage. Those who speak most loudly of the dangers of communism today may be more dangerous than the dangers they describe.

There are some cracks in the bell of freedom in America, some very obvious, others more subtle. What can we do to help repair these cracks? The very first thing that each of us can do is to speak the truth in love and without fear. Dr. Frederick K. Stamm tells of a minister who was being considered as the pastor of a large Midwestern church. Six men came to interview him. They said, "We have looked up your record and it's good. We would like to have you as our minister. We are the six men, however, who tell the preacher things. There are two things you must not preach about—the racial question and labor." The minister replied, "All right, I won't. I won't come." The freedom of the pulpit must be maintained at all costs. This is the first place for truth to be spoken in love and without fear. Any minister who is limited in what he can say from the pulpit might as well resign, for his ministry is finished when the pulpit is not free.

The same thing applies to each one of us. We must never hold back the truth for fear that someone will misunderstand. When we weigh our words, and become cautious with our speech, freedom vanishes.

Let us make no accusations without foundation. It's a relatively simple matter to pin a label on a person and, once that has been done, the damage has happened. Even though the accused rids himself of the charge, the label often sticks. The Jews pinned the label of blasphemy on Jesus. Of course, it was not true. But it sounded good and the mob took up the cry, until they crucified him on a false charge. Wild charges and accusations without foundation in fact strike at freedom.

We must uphold the principle that a man is innocent until he is proved guilty. Our whole legal system is based on that idea. Today, we have often reversed that, and accusation often carries with it the connotation of guilt. Sometimes we are irked by the long, legal processes and elaborate safeguards which are set up to handle criminals. When a well-known gangster is brought before the bar of justice, we wonder why he could not be quickly convicted and thus save the taxpayer's money. But this must be done, in order that the same process which applies to the gangster may apply to us in case of necessity. For our freedom depends on this principle, that a man is innocent until he is proved guilty. It is only under totalitarian governments that a man can be jailed without an opportunity to prove his innocence.

We must also insist on the right of nonconformity. Someone has said, "There are two freedoms, the false—where a man is free to do what he likes, and the true—where a man is free to do what he ought." When a man says, "I ought," that is the voice of his conscience, and it must be respected at all costs. From the time of Shadrach, Meshach and Abednego, who refused to conform, even though it meant the ordeal of a fiery furnace, until this day, we have a tradition of nonconformity. The individual who has a conscience must be respected, or freedom disappears. I remember a line from the film, Martin Luther, in which Luther said, "To go against one's conscience is neither right nor safe." It is unsafe, because the submerging of conscience means the loss of freedom. When we force everyone into a mold and require the same thinking and the same actions we are free no longer. We must always be careful to protect the rights of the individual who must, because of conscience, differ from the majority.

If, as has been suggested here, there is a crack in the bell of our freedom, then let us be alert and "proclaim liberty throughout all the land."

KINGDOM GLEANINGS

The House Post Office Committee unanimously endorsed a bill authorizing use of the slogan, "Pray for Peace," on mail cancellations.

There are 3,547 weekly newspapers in the United States that refuse all alcoholic beverage advertisements. In addition 584 accept beer advertisements only, and 772 accept only beer and wine advertisements.

Pastors of the United Lutheran Church in America get an average salary of $4,392 a year, according to a survey conducted by the denomination's Board of Pensions. There are 4,300 pastors in the denomination.

Chinese Christian churches in the United States have shown rapid growth in recent years but 90 per cent of the 117,000 Chinese in this country still are non-Christians, according to a report at the first nation-wide conference of Chinese churches in America.

A call for international control of H-bomb tests was submitted to the Church of Scotland's General Assembly by its Committee on Church and Nation. The committee said, "The unpredictable effects of radiation and 'fall-out' make this a matter of acute concern for mankind."

Practical application of scientific Christianity is "building a mighty bulwark for individual, national and universal liberty," the Christian Science Board of Directors said in a special statement presented to about 7,500 Christian Scientists from many parts of the world.

Seventh-day Adventists donated more than 3,800,000 articles of clothing to the needy last year. In addition, more than 1,800,000 food baskets were distributed and more than 1,000,000 treatments given without charge in private homes or at Adventist health and welfare centers.

Six American Quakers are spending the month of June on a goodwill visit to Russia sponsored by the American Friends Service Committee. The Quaker party "hopes to express religious concern for world peace to Russians in many walks of life." The party will include an economist, an editor, a professor of Russian and two members of the staff of the American Friends Service Committee.

Announcements of the national assembly of United Church Women to be held at Cleveland, Ohio, Nov. 7-10, are being sent to local presidents of women's work and district women's work officers. Any Brethren woman is eligible to attend this meeting. For those interested in lodging, the Cleveland Hotel is conveniently located to the auditorium and a number of Brethren women will be staying there. Send reservations directly to the hotel.

A beautiful Guernsey heifer, Pansy, contributed by Mr. and Mrs. Earl Beard of Westminster, Md., was the star of the Federation of Women's Clubs convention held recently at Philadelphia. Three thousand delegates looked, petted and cooed, but there were some city folks who sideslipped by. Pansy spent the week in a specially constructed stall on the eighteenth floor of the Bellevue-Stratford Hotel. Her picture was in all the city's newspapers and on TV too.

A laboratory school for children's workers, sponsored by Middle Iowa for the churches in the three Iowa districts, is being held July 4-8. Pastors and superintendents will find it helpful also.

All participants in the 1956 Olympic Games will be given a copy of the New Testament by the Australian Council of the British and Foreign Bible Society. Some 6,000 athletes from 70 countries are expected at the quadrennial games at Melbourne.

"Give Them a Faith to Live By . . . Worship With Them This Week" will be the theme of the seventh annual Religion in American Life program next November. In scores of cities and towns across the nation, religious leaders and laymen will join forces to plan for their local programs next fall.

Quakers in Great Britain have declared that the use of nuclear weapons in war is a sin. Quaker leaders warned that if war breaks out, the temptation to use these weapons will be very great. They added that scientists have said their use will involve "not only the most terrible sufferings now but unknown consequences for succeeding generations."

Racial prejudice and discrimination "as illustrated in the American pattern of segregation . . . is a sin," said the Committee on Economic and Social Relations of the Mennonite Church. The statement was the first comprehensive pronouncement on racial relations by an official agency of the church. It called upon all insitutions of the Mennonite church to end any segregation they may be practicing.

A program of newspaper advertising has been launched by the United Lutheran Church in America. Each church is expected to buy advertising space to run the ads in local daily and weekly newspapers or in co-operation with other Lutheran churches in the community. The series will answer such questions as "What is a Lutheran?" and specific questions about the Lutheran beliefs.

W. Harold Row will serve as chairman of one of the twenty commissions appointed to make twenty separate studies of the extent of church aid to the sick, needy and troubled. These studies are being made in preparation for the National Conference on the Churches and Social Work to be held at Cleveland in November. Each commission will have ten members. Bro. Row is chairman of the commission on the Role of Volunteers in Church Social Work.

American college students are showing more interest in religion than they have for decades. This is the consensus of the leaders of the University Christian Mission, which last year reached 60,000 students on 22 U.S. college campuses. Dr. John Oliver Nelson, chairman of the mission, attributed the increased interest of students to "general world uncertainty and a recognition that science has not measured up" in providing the answers to the questions students are asking. Nearly 300 college campuses have been reached by the UCM visitation program.

American Protestant and Eastern Orthodox denominations working together through Church World Service expect to distribute a total of 142 million pounds of U. S. government surplus foods free to needy persons overseas during 1955 under the Share Our Surplus program. This vast amount of foodstuffs — loaded in boxcars it would make a train more than forty miles long — is scheduled to go to hungry, homeless, and destitute people in twenty-nine countries in Europe, Asia, Africa and South America. Total value of the shipments for 1955 is $49 million. Commodities include milk, butter, cottonseed oil, cheese, shortening, butter oil and holiday food packages. Brethren through the Brotherhood Fund have contributed $9,330 during the current fiscal year to the Share Our Surplus program.

Juniata College

Thirty-five student volunteers from the college participated in a work project sponsored by the Juniata Christian Association in April. They raked and cut grass for old people of Huntingdon and collected magazines, games and cards for the Hollidaysburg state mental hospital. The project was organized by Dorothy Stricker, a sophomore from Lansdale.

Dedication of the new residence hall for men was held on June 4, alumni day. The dedicatory address was given by Albert M. Cole, administrator of the Housing and Home Finance Agency, Washington, D. C. Others participating in the program were Congressman Richard M. Simpson; Henry B. Gibbel, chairman of the board of trustees; J. Alfred Hamme, architect; John C. Yenter, contractor; the Reverend John C. Middlekauff, Huntingdon; John W. Swigart, trustee committee chairman, and President Calvert N. Ellis of Juniata College.

Dr. Clarence W. Cranford, pastor of the Calvary Baptist church in Washington, was the speaker at the commencement of seventy-eight seniors who received degrees at the ceremony on June 6, in Oller Hall.

Juniata College's debate team entered four tournaments this season with a total of fourteen wins and twenty losses. Miss Miriam Dickey, assistant librarian, coaches the team.

The college choir, a mixed voice group of thirty-two, made a fifteen-minute "live" television appearance on WJAC-TV, Johnstown, on May 8. The choir is under the direction of Donald S. Johnson, professor of music.

A freshman at the College, Robert D. Reader, Tyrone, has won a state-wide oratorical contest sponsored by the WCTU. He may represent Pennsylvania in the national finals at Long Beach, Calif., in August.

Recitals in the spring of 1955 have included those given by: Miss Marie Jaeger, instructor in piano, piano recital; student recital by Judith Gearhart of Philadelphia, voice, and Jacquelyn Hayes of Ebensburg, piano; joint piano and voice recital by Jean Baker, Waterside, and Allegra Forney, Martinsburg. An advanced organ recital included: Elaine Aitgen, Colver; Jacquelyn Hayes, Ebensburg; Richard Livingston, Johnstown; Marlene Sterner, Hanover; and Mary Helen West, Huntingdon.

Ministers and high school seniors day was held on May 7, with approximately 121 persons attending. Paul Robinson, president of Bethany Biblical Seminary in Chicago, was the speaker for the occasion.

The men and women's work of the Middle District of Pennsylvania sponsored the appearance of Mrs. Rosa Page Welch, mezzo-soprano, at Oller Hall, on May 13.

Churches to Send Refugee Aid Team Abroad

Church World Service has announced it will send a team of twelve special emissaries to Europe to help get the Federal government's "limping" refugee immigration program into motion. The team will interpret the friendship of U. S. churches and the desire of American church people to provide resettlement opportunities. The team will head for Germany, Austria and the Netherlands, where the bulk of refugees are now housed in some 4,000 camps.

Dr. Kagawa Resumes Activities Against Doctor's Advice

Dr. Toyohiko Kagawa, noted Japanese Protestant evangelist and labor leader who collapsed from overwork on March 27, has resumed his preaching and other activities. He admitted that his doctor felt he should rest longer, but the churchman said his responsibilities would not permit him to remain idle.

The sixty-seven-year-old clergyman has been working late many nights to raise money to transport American relief supplies to Japan. Besides spending at least half of each month in evangelistic campaigning, he has worked incessantly for years on disaster relief and slum rehabilitation projects.

Quotes From the News

Dr. Walter W. Van Kirk, Department of International Affairs of the National Council of Churches: "The United Nations with all its defects and shortcomings could put an end to the cold war tomorrow. What is lacking is not structure, but spirit, the spirit of the living and eternal God. It would be a catastrophe if the United States were to go isolationist on the economic front or become so preoccupied with building military defenses that it lost sight of attacking the hunger and poverty upon which communism thrives."

Dr. James Winston Crawley, secretary for the Orient of the Southern Baptist Foreign Mission Board: "Most Asians feel America is concerned with the Communist angle and not really concerned with helping the people of Asia to have a better life. What is happening in Asia is basically like what happened in the United States during the Revolution. I don't expect Asia to be calm within our lifetime, but I do feel it is moving in the right direction."

Mrs. James D. Wyker, president of United Church Women, reporting on her trip around the world: "New governments are struggling with the problems of stabilizing their young nations. They need help in planning for sanitation, health measures, better nutrition and soil conservation. If we could provide a more vigorous policy of government aid, or helping people help themselves, we would immeasurably strengthen our foreign policy."

Clarence P. Shedd, professor at Yale Divinity school: "Students today furnish more grounds for hope than discouragement. They are the most intelligently responsive student generation I have known; they are seeking to come to grips with the basic problems of faith and living. They are not asking superficial but ultimate questions and they will not be satisfied with easy answers. They want to find grounds for ultimate loyalties."

James H. Robinson, pastor of the Church of the Master in New York City: "There is no loneliness anywhere equal to the loneliness of a man lost in the crowd at Times Square or the Loop or Wilshire Boulevard. There is more extensive hunger in the midst of the city's plenty than anywhere else in our society."

J. Ernest Wilkins, Assistant Secretary of Labor: "Life achieves significance only in relationship to our creator. Otherwise, it is only the Christmas tree on which to hang the ornaments of our pride."

William T. Gossett, vice-president and general counsel, Ford Motor Company: "The truths of the Declaration of Independence that find concrete expression in the rights guaranteed by the constitution are not mere luxuries or 'extras' for lucky Americans to enjoy; they are the essence of our society and its very justification for being. One of the most important of these rights is the right to dissent. The test of tolerance—and the beginning of understanding—lie in our willingness to listen to ideas completely repugnant to our own convictions and prejudices."

Dr. William Culbertson, president of Moody Bible Institute: "Paganism has made many efforts to disrupt the Christian faith, but never a more insistent or a more insidious effort than it is making today. The center of the controversy between belief and unbelief, between fundamentalism and modernism is whether we have the complete and final revelation of God in the Bible."

Billy Graham: "I met and talked with Communists near the Iron Curtain on my recent tour. I can assure you they know Karl Marx and Lenin by heart. How many of us read the Bible as zealously and study it every day? The problem of the world today is not the hydrogen bomb. It is not poison gas. It is not bacteriological weapons. The problem is human nature."

W. Russell Shearer, president of the Methodist Conference of Great Britain: "Christians have every right to proclaim that the use of the hydrogen bomb is completely indefensible and have no right to maintain silence. We cannot commit ourselves to a diabolical form of destruction which aims at the final blasphemy, the blotting out of the human race."

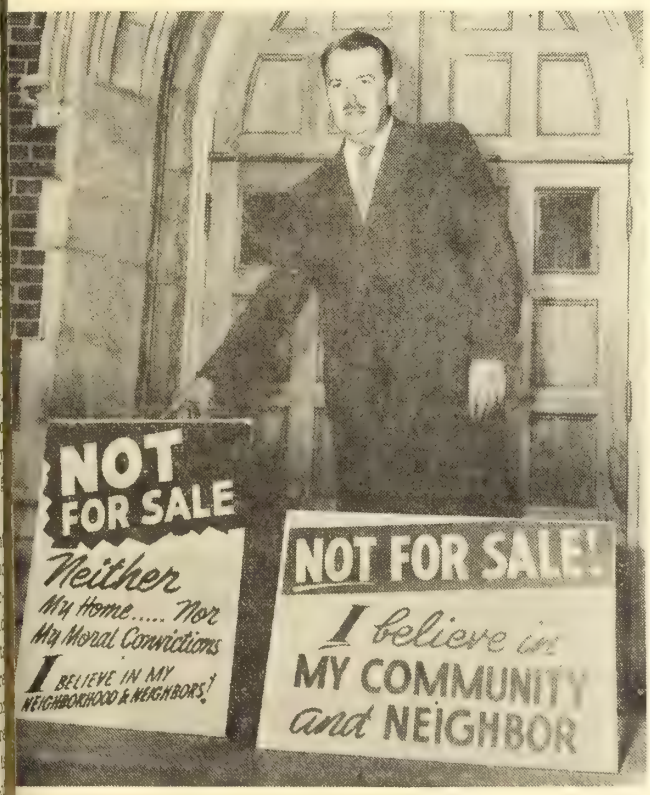
Hazen G. Werner, Methodist bishop: "Religion needs the family, for to have power in religion we must have prayer in our homes. If people do not pray in their homes, they will not pray in church. There is no future for the church or for organized religion unless we grow persons in our homes who have learned to trust God, live for Christ and shun compromise."

Richard Reid, editor of the New York Catholic News: "Freedom of the press is one of several rights guaranteed by the Constitution. It does not have priority over other rights, and where there is a clash over the right of freedom of the press—which is an extension of the natural right of freedom of speech and other rights—there must be adjudication of those rights by the courts in the traditional American way."

Eugene Carson Blake, president of the National Council of Churches: "If a man wants a faith sufficient to live by in all kinds of circumstances, it must be a faith which he can die by, too. Jesus Christ, who rose on the first Easter Day, calls upon men to trust in him for life and death, and for all that lies beyond."

Dr. O. M. Solandt, chairman of the Defense Research Board of Canada: "We have now reached a stage in history where we can foresee the possibility of having weapons available in the world in numbers capable of destroying our civilization. This means that our attitude toward war must be fundamentally changed if we are to ensure survival."

Lord Beveridge, speaking in London to organizations discussing a revision of the UN Charter: "There is no doubt that it needs revision, since it gives an exceptional position in world affairs to five nations just because they have great killing power."



Sir Anthony Eden: "I am reluctant to mention the fact that I have now been more than ten years Foreign Secretary...But if there is one conclusion which more than another has come to me over that period it is never to allow...international difficulties of any particular problem to convince you that an attempt to solve them is not worth making."

Ambassador Jefferson Caffery, who retired in February after forty-four years of diplomatic service: "The first principle which American diplomats should practice is to always tell the truth. The personal element in diplomacy is more important than ever before."

The Migrant Children

Jewell Ferguson
Osceola, Florida

WHEN I mention the word migrant what comes to your mind? What does the word really mean? I wish I could tell you what these people are really like. I wish you could have been with me on the Friday night before Easter when I had four of my most active Sunday-school girls spend the night at the nursery. I would like to tell you about it.

The previous Sunday I had gone home with the children and asked their parents if they could come. There was a joy in my heart as most of those parents gave their permission with such faith and confidence in us. They seemed to say, "I trust my child in your care. I think the experience will be good for her and whatever you want to do, go ahead."

Friday night promptly one-half hour ahead of time, four bright-eyed and enthusiastic girls arrived all ready for the occasion. One had a new pair of pajamas, and all of them had such a beam of joy that I was glad I had planned this activity.

It is amazing what nine-year-old girls will do when you turn them loose in a playroom with a housekeeping corner and old clothes. At seven-thirty, at their own suggestion, they were ready for bed after having a good splash in the bathtubs. This was a grand treat for them, as they have only showers in the camp bathhouses. We then had a bedtime snack of popcorn and lemonade while Ruth Griggs told them a story. Then they wanted to "say their prayers" and by eight o'clock they were all in bed for the night.

They awoke next morning almost too excited to eat breakfast. We had an Easter story about why we have eggs at Easter... that they represent new life. Then we had an egg hunt and an egg roll which was lots of fun. Then they went back to their dress-up play again. They did everything imaginable... playing store, hospital, Sunday school, parties.

By eleven o'clock it was time to put things away. They asked to have another bath. We had a friendship circle and they went home. Who had the most fun, the girls or I? I do not know.

These girls were all from migrant families and such a wonderful group they were. They are just little saplings that need the proper weather conditions and soil to grow into strong and sturdy trees. Their parents love them as you love your children. They want the best for them that they can give and know how to give. But they will not grow up as your children will unless you and I help make the right conditions possible. They have no community roots. In a few weeks they will be going north again, in many cases before school closes, and then in the fall they will return here after school has started. Many will get behind in school because of this and by the time they are sixteen most of them will have dropped out and be ready to follow the same pattern as their parents. A few of them will keep up, will be able to stay in school; a few will be able to attain the goal we pray that they may achieve, the goal that all good parents want for their children.

There is a sadness in my heart as I think that soon I will be leaving these people that I have learned to love and have had opportunity to work with and help. But my heart will always be with them with a desire to do all I can to help these children to grow up into a better way of life. There is a joy in my heart to know that the directors of the work here, Julian and Ruth Griggs, are building a home and will be here for several years to come to help to minister to their needs. This means much to the program and will mean more in years to come.

When workers leave, the children say, "We don't want you to go. Why can't you stay?" When new workers come in they are told about the others and you know that they miss them. So as I think of leaving I say to the Griggses, "These four girls, as well as all the others, are good quality clay. I have done my best to help mold them to the shape of pure and lovely womanhood. They are at the stage where they may be shaped into a beautiful or ugly finish. Do all you can to keep them in the program. Get to know their families better, and my prayers are with you."

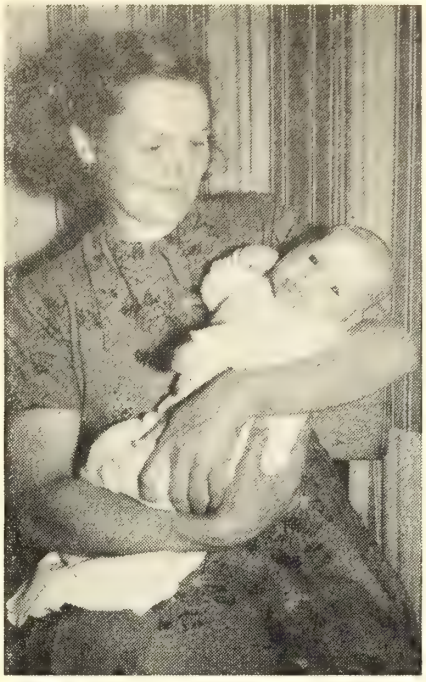
To you I would like to say, there is a joy that comes in Christian service that comes from no other type of work. Do all you can to serve your fellow men wherever you are and in whatever you are doing. Seek out those in your community who need a helping hand. There is a need for the loving arm of Christian service and concern everywhere in the world today.

DEPARTURE FOR AMERICA

ONE Sunday afternoon in February, I saw for the first time a refugee family actually leave Linz for emigration to America. It was widowed Frau Maria Reitenbach and her two young daughters. When Dale Aukerman and I arrived at Camp Haid to pick up the Reitenbachs, it seemed that every family from her barrack and the next were outside anticipating the excitement of the departure. We took a few pictures, and then the moment came for the final goodbys. We can not realize what a mixture of emotions is involved in such a leaving. The Volksdeutsch people have very strong family ties to start with, and then to consider that they have fled together from their homeland and endured the hardships of refugee life for the past ten years, coupled with the idea that they probably will never see one another again, and topped by the opportunity for a new life in America—certainly there were many tears shed. It was especially sad to see Frau Reitenbach say Auf Wiedersehn to her elderly mother-in-law, for this was a certain final parting.



We didn't talk much on the way to the train depot. When we did arrive, and before getting out of the car, Dale asked them if we could have prayer. Then he offered a very memorable prayer, seeking God's guidance for this family during their trip and as they found their new home in America. Dale gave them a German Bible, for, like many refugees, they had none.

Refugee Resettlement Notes

Statistics — May 1, 1955

Region	Goal	Assurances Filed	Arrivals Family	Persons
Central	350	92	3	8
Eastern	300	34	1	4
Pacific Coast	50	9
Southeastern	150	21	1	1
Western	150	6	1	5
Total	1,000	162	6	18

These numbers represent offers of new homes to people of twenty-three nationalities now living in ten countries. Differences in religion, race or language are dissolved when Christian motivations prompt our participation in this program.

Frau Reitenbach was quite excited and a little nervous as she stepped to the ticket window to buy passage to Munich. The train pulled in, we found her car and compartment, final goodbys were said to her friends who had come to the depot, the conductor yelled the German version of "All Aboard." The train gradually pulled out and white handkerchiefs were waved high in the air until the last glimpse of the Reitenbachs was lost. They had left for America!—Marvin Blickenstaff.

The Miracle of the Open Hands

The following account by a Church of the Brethren pastor whose church experienced a spiritual growth through a combined building fund and budget canvass appeared as an article in the spring issue of Wells Way magazine.

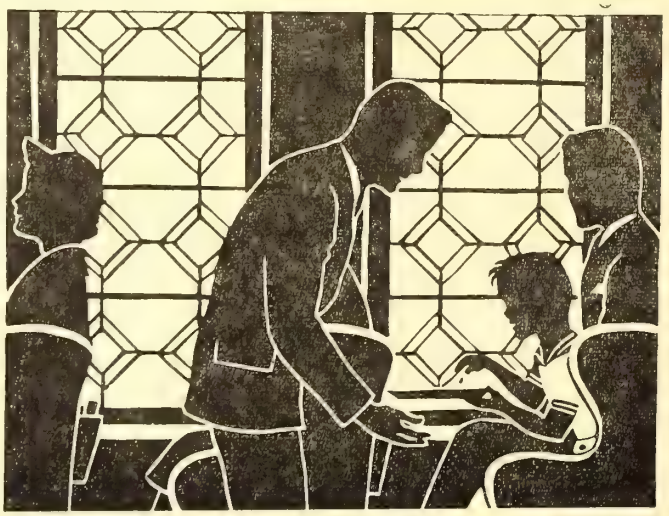
Floyd E. Bantz

THE miracle which took place among the five thousand along the shores of Lake Gennesaret has been called by some the "miracle of open hands." This Biblical story has come alive for the people of the Church of the Brethren in Kansas City, Mo., as the result of a professionally directed building fund budget canvass held in August 1954.

Four things occurred which made possible in our very midst a recurrence of this miracle of open hands.

First, we discovered that our own strength was not enough to accomplish the tremendous task that we had set out before us. The job of building a new church that would adequately accommodate our growing needs was beyond what we thought to be our rather meager resources. Thus, we were forced by the exigency of the situation to turn to God. Long before our building fund canvass was in operation, our people were praying in their family devotions that God would show us the way to make possible what seemed to us to be his will.

This dependence upon God through prayer put God first. Much evidence of this was seen in the actual canvass operation. There was the approach of the canvass director and his organization who were completely Christian and ethical in all their dealings with the congregation. Their very approach to the problem called one's attention first to God. Again, the way the people responded to professional leadership constituted evidence that God was at work. Practically everyone asked participated. Men came night after night to planning sessions and canvass report meetings that often lasted until eleven o'clock. There was a remarkable degree of perfect attendance and no grumbling about the procedure outlined by our director. Because we were asking him, God was at work, performing among us the miracle of open hands.



A second thing made possible the recurrence of the miracle of open hands. As a result of our canvass preparation, we discovered how poor our own record of giving had actually been. We had become rather proud of our stewardship. A resident membership of 120 people had raised the previous year about $12,000. This, we thought, was going "great guns." We had done so well that we were publicized in the denominational literature about stewardship and we felt we were near the "top of the heap."

Suddenly, however, we were face to face with a careful analysis of our own record done by a trained expert. It became immediately apparent that what success we had enjoyed was the result of large sacrifice on the part of very few people and that these few were the only ones who gave anything near a tithe. Some families had given as little as $.02 a week to the church's program! All the while we had been patting ourselves on the back for what we had done, sorry we couldn't do more; this was happening in our very presence. When we were made aware of our actual record, we could not help but be ashamed.

This very shame contributed to the third thing that occurred to make this miracle possible. We saw clearly for the first time the tremendous potential that even a small church has if its people will capture the idea of giving because they "need to give" rather than because their church needs dollars. It was pointed out to us by our director that relatively small gifts, sacrificially given, could amount to undreamed-of amounts over a period of a few years. It was almost shocking to find out that a congregation of less than 100 families could give over a period of 150 weeks as much as $150,000 and still not be doing much more than tithing.

Financial ability was going untapped, for always before we thought of giving to raise dollars for the church. Thus, we did not with regularity or sincerity contact nominal members who did not actually support the church.

The canvassers were tempted, instead, to enlist only those they knew would give. The story changed, for they now were after a man's soul, not his dollars. More than one family thought lost forever to the church have become vibrantly alive.

Children and adults find real joy in the privilege of giving

Not only did we discover a financial potential, but we discovered a leadership potential as well. People were asked to help canvass who were never asked before. People responded who had never responded before. Talent formerly ignored came to the surface. One of the most successful canvassers was a young man who was not at the time a baptized Christian and had been a part of the general church fellowship for only a short time.

When we compared our potential with our performance record, something had to happen—the miracle of open hands.

A fourth thing occurred that made this miracle possible. The act of pledging cast out fear and replaced it with faith. All kinds of fears could have developed among people engaged in such a project—fears of bad times, fears of inability to keep a promise to pay, fears of not having enough for old age, and fears of contacting people assumed to be hostile toward their church. These fears were not ignored, but rather overcome. As a result of prayer, combined with trained technical "know-how," a hopeless task became an accomplished one. It was faith that caused one woman on an income of little more than $130 a month to pledge $6 a week. It was faith which caused a man to pledge so much that he said, "I don't know how I'll do it, but I know God will help me." It was faith that led a group of people to see that God has never forsaken these people who have dedicated themselves to do his will.

Because of the reasons outlined above, a congregation of 120 resident members made up almost entirely of factory workers, skilled tradesmen, teachers, clerks, mechanics and shop owners acquired seventy-five family pledges, payable weekly for 150 weeks that totaled $66,000 to be used for our building fund. As if this were not enough, another $10,000 was realized for a twelve-month operating budget. The miracle is even more real at the time of writing, months later, for the enthusiasm of giving has measured up to the ambitious pledging.

This is the miracle of open hands, as it occurred in our congregation. We stumbled almost accidentally upon the consecrated and trained leadership in stewardship offered us by the Wells Organizations, and we have been blessed. This unique method of presenting the challenge of committed stewardship has made possible, not only this miracle of open hands, but the continuation of this miracle for years to come. All credit must be given to God, for he enabled us to perform the miracle of open hands, but trained professional leadership revealed unto us the way.

A Prayer Clinic

A WISE teacher has suggested that next to dying on the cross, the greatest thing that Jesus did was to teach his disciples to pray. All of us who love the church are concerned about the development of the devotional life and the practice of prayer amongst our people. It is never enough simply to encourage people to pray. The forgotten word is sometimes "how."

One such effort to make the devotional life real and workable for ordinary people was a prayer clinic which was held on the Sunday evenings of February in the Elizabethtown church. The several parts in the program, beyond the common elements of worship—the organ, several hymns and a choral message —were these:

1. Study. The fine book, The Practice and Power of Prayer, by John Sutherland Bonnell, was suggested as the basic text. Some twenty-five family units bought the book and used it during the month. The leader, the pastor in this case, assigned a specific portion to be read each week and then commented on certain important emphases in the chapters under study.

2. Teaching. Each evening there was a brief period of instruction centering about such themes as The Nature of Christian Prayer, Our Prayers for Others, and Praying for Ourselves. Some very simple and elemental matters were discussed under these topics each week.

3. Praying. At the close of each service there was guided group prayer. The evening intercessory prayer was considered, the group was led in specific petitions for a church family and for its needs.

Our hopes for the future in this area of our church's life are that there might be at least an emphasis for one month each year on prayer and the devotional life. We would hope to encourage and promote personal and family worship. With this emphasis, we will continue to supply additional study materials and helps to the devotional life and develop smaller prayer groups. In this latter connection two very good helps are the book, Two or Three Together, by Freer and Hall, and a smaller booklet, Prayer Cells and Evangelism, by Samuel M. Shoemaker.

A Family Life Emphasis

WE DIDN'T just observe Family Week here, but we stressed family life all during the month of May. Since I am the Homebuilder director, it fell to me to prepare the programs. The first Sunday evening program was on Families Around the World. That week we had our mother and daughter banquet at which the speaker used the theme, What Is a Mother's Duty in the Home and the Daughter's Duty and Obligation.

The second Sunday I used the playlet, This Is My Daughter, given in the International Journal of Religious Education. The third Sunday session centered on the subject, Families Are Different, stressing race and different nationalities. The fourth Sunday we had the Cana Wedding, in which about twelve couples renewed their marriage vows. I think it was well accepted. We used the film, The Family Next Door on the fifth Sunday. This completed this year's family emphasis in a very effective way.

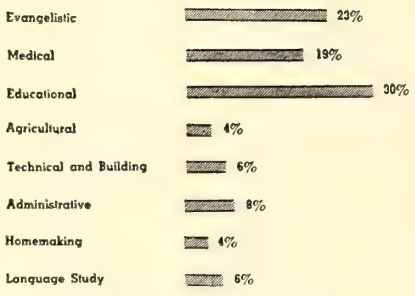
The Church Abroad

Edited by J. Henry Long

Developing adequate national leadership is perhaps the matter of greatest urgency



Foreign Missions Report to Annual Conference

IN ORDER that people in other parts of our world may know the abundant life which Christ came to bring to all men 116 workers, including four alternative service men and four Brethren Church missionaries now serve in India, Nigeria and Ecuador. Five additional missionaries, including two from the Brethren Church, will go out in the fall of this year. Plans are being made to send at least two additional alternative service men to Nigeria within the next few months.

Our workers are divided among the three fields as follows: Nigeria, 67; India, 44; Ecuador, 5.

Nigeria, 58%; India, 38%; Ecuador, 4%

To meet the physical, mental, social and religious needs of the people whom they serve our workers are engaged in many types of assignments, the primary ones being medical, agricultural, educational and evangelistic. Here, by percentages, is the way our missionary staff is working:

The church ministers to the physical needs of people in this way:

—IN NIGERIA: 2 hospitals, 5 dispensaries and a leprosarium treating a total of approximately 20,000 patients annually.

—IN INDIA: 2 hospitals and 2 dispensaries treating a total of approximately 10,000 patients annually.

—IN ECUADOR: 1 dispensary and a weekly clinic treating a total of approximately 1,600 patients annually.

—A program of public health and preventive medicine on all fields.

—Agricultural and rural development work on all fields stressing improved methods of farming new crops soil conservation livestock improvement.

To free men from ignorance and superstition, to enable them to support their families and to help them raise their social standards, we carry on a program of education in India, Nigeria and Ecuador.

As the government in India assumes responsibility for the education of its children and youth our schools are being closed and our educational work curtailed. This calls for a changing emphasis in our work in India. To meet the needs of Christian students who must attend government schools away from home the church is providing hostels and boarding homes with a Christian atmosphere.

In Nigeria the government emphasis on eradicating illiteracy and the interest of the people in education have led to an increased enrollment in our primary schools. As yet there has been no opposition to the teaching of religion in our schools. The crying need here is for trained native teachers. To meet this need the Church of the Brethren mission is co-operating with the Sudan United Mission in their training center at Gindiri, Nigeria. We are also planning to expand the facilities and staff of our own training center at Waka. At the beginning of 1955 there was an enrollment of eighty-three men at the Waka Training School.

In Ecuador a sixth grade has been added to the school and enrollment this year is expected to reach eighty which is the capacity of the school. A program of adult education is being started in Quito for the men who work in the city and come home only for the week ends.

So that men may come to know Christ and fully realize the abundant life, the church ministers to the religious and spiritual needs of the people through an active program of evangelism. While the evangelistic aim permeates all of the work done in any field, a large proportion of our money and effort are devoted to proclaiming the gospel through preaching to those who have never heard it and to meeting the needs of those who are already Christian through an active church program.

In Nigeria week after week 10,000 people in 150 villages are hearing the gospel. Here for the first time four national Christians have been ordained to the ministry and one to the eldership. During the past year one new station was opened, buildings were begun for another and approval was given for the opening of a third new station.

In Ecuador, church membership increased over 200% during the year ending Sept. 30, 1954. The congregation, numbering thirty, is now planning for the erection of a church building.

A new emphasis is being placed on evangelistic work in India. Evangelistic centers are being established to minister to the religious needs of those who are Christian and to take the gospel to those who have not been reached. The gospel is still being preached and although the number of baptisms decreased during the past year there are many candidates for baptism.

In all three fields efforts to place the church on an indigenous basis quickly and to shift responsibility for its program to the nationals are being increased. In this shift our missionaries are serving more in the capacity of counselors and helpers than leaders.

The Castaner Project

Charles E. Zunkel

I CANNOT emphasize too strongly that we were deeply impressed with the splendid work that has been and is being done by Brethren Service at Castañer. Everywhere there seemed to be words of praise for the work being done. We found a consecrated and loyal staff giving themselves devotedly, even sacrificially to their various assignments.

One needs to remember that the work was begun as a CPS project during World War II. In these brief years since then the project has grown and developed. With the close of the war the decision was made to stay on and continue serving the urgent needs of the area.

The Health Ministry

Upon arriving at the project one sees among first things the hospital, situated adjacent to the Casa Grande (big house). Indeed one can imagine it to be almost the heart of the project. There is an excellent little building, big enough to care for forty patients. It is constructed out of old PRRA buildings (CCC in type) and is laid out in a U shape for a high degree of efficiency. Nearly all of the time it is filled with patients. The outpatient department, which operates on the first floor of Casa Grande, has scores of patients each week.

In addition, the dental service is serving in a marvelous way the dire needs of a widespread area. On an average seven hundred teeth are pulled each month and six sets of dental plates are constantly in process.

One doctor and one dentist have taken care of this large responsibility for some time. The staff and hospital will welcome the two new doctors who will come as a replacement to the one who is now carrying the load.

A visiting nurse to follow up the patients when they return to their homes would be highly desirable. In the past this has been done from time to time, but is impossible at present.

Brethren Academy

The academy is providing senior high school privileges for a present enrollment of forty-six students. Were it not operating, their chances for high school work would be slim indeed.

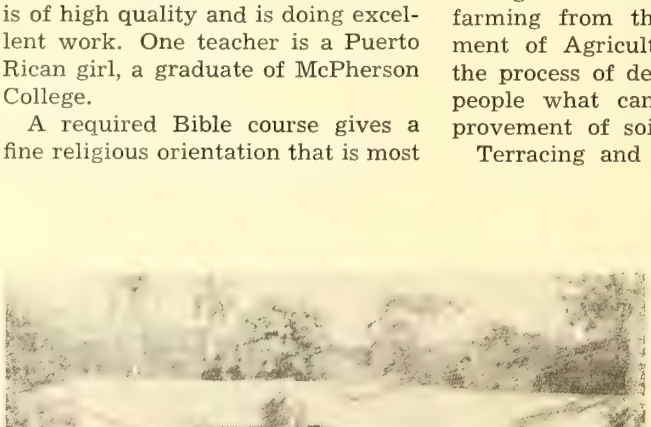
Classes are conducted in English. Spanish is taught as a subject. The staff of teachers and administrators is of high quality and is doing excellent work. One teacher is a Puerto Rican girl, a graduate of McPherson College.

A required Bible course gives a fine religious orientation that is most helpful. Out of the academy have come and are coming students who will serve their people in a significant way.

The Community Center

The center is devoted to the Boys' Club and Girls' Club activities. Guided recreation, classes in crafts, sewing and the like give a wonderful opportunity to mold the characters of these youths.

Girls' Club is directed by a fine young Puerto Rican mother. Her Christian influence is profoundly felt. Her sewing classes for the girls teach them needed and useful arts.



Boys' Club has been directed by one of our Brethren 1-W's and it also affords a splendid chance to guide growing life.

Throughout these club programs are Christian teachings, motivation and guidance.

The Farm

The fifty-six acre farm is in the midst of the coffee producing area. Hence, it is being improved for better coffee production. The farm manager has had to learn coffee farming from the Insular Department of Agriculture, but he is in the process of demonstrating to the people what can be done in improvement of soils and production.

Terracing and better fertilization

The hospital at Castañer can care for forty patients are being well demonstrated. Within a few years the farm will be in full production, although it is now on a self-sustaining basis of operation.

Among the coffee trees are bananas. They furnish daily food for the staff of workers. As visitors, we thoroughly enjoyed the abundance of oranges and bananas; lemons and grapefruit were not in season.

Another major contribution of the farm is the livestock program. Two registered bulls provide a breeding service for the area. Registered goats and hogs also serve in this way. Intestinal parasites make necessary platforms for feeding of goats and cattle and this is demonstrated and encouraged by the farm. Baby chicks are hatched and sold each spring as well.

All of these services make the demonstration farm a real asset and service to the area. It is well managed and very efficient.

Material Aid Program

Each week on Thursday the material aid room is open to serve those who come. With eighty per cent of the people poor, one can see the great value of a material aid program which supplies clothing at nominal charges to those who can pay and free to those who cannot. Several days each week the material aid worker rides on horseback into the mountains to pay friendly visits to the people in their homes and to discover, as well, what the material needs are. It was fun to ride on horseback with him on one of these visits, spending a forenoon seeing both the beauties of nature and God's children scattered over the mountainsides. How I wish I could talk Spanish to them. A friendly smile, a gesture and an Adios had to suffice.

Let me say again that it is a lasting and profound impression with us that Castañer Project has done and is doing a marvelous and much needed service. As a church we should rejoice to have a part in such a worthy ministry.

You and the United Nations

choice of limiting our sovereignty, giving up the right to declare war unilaterally, and achieve the security possible through a greater and more powerful collectivity, the United Nations, as Herbert Hoover so recently declared.

To be explicit, today we have the vestigial remains of anarchy. Anarchy from my point of view is immoral. In conclusion, mankind can move from a government of single nations to a government of laws in the international sphere if they so will it; willing it means positive action, in precinct and party. For decisions are made by men. There is no other way than the political substitution of the internationalist for the isolationist. Within these alternatives there should be no doubt where Brethren stand. Therefore I rest my case: I prefer life to death, food to guns, and a government of law through the larger collectivity to the anarchy which now prevails.

Anniversaries and Weddings

Anniversaries

Toward a Theology of Evangelism. Julian N. Hartt. Abingdon, 1955. 123 pages. $2.00.

This book is a vital, clear-cut interpretation of the mission of the church, the mission of being witness to the truth and love of God. God the Father has acted in Jesus Christ to save man from the sad and bewildering dilemma in which he finds himself. It is to this great fact we must turn if our preaching is to be more than pious peddling of puerile platitudes. Only as the church lifts its evangelistic message into sharp focus, and proclaims it boldly and without watering down, can she remain worthy of her Lord.

In this book, Julian Hartt, professor of philosophical theology at Yale, lifts up the essential elements —the fundamentals—of the gospel in a series of commanding chapters. His style is as sharp as a rapier, almost bordering on an acid sarcasm at times. But it is a sharpness that cuts away the fat from our lean meat of message. Every minister and theological student ought to read this book and soak his message in it a while and many thoughtful laymen would find it a refreshing course of truth.—Edward K. Ziegler.

Christianity, Communism and History. William Hordern. Abingdon, 1954. 174 pages. $2.50.

This book gives a fresh approach to the whole question of communism and what to do about it. Dr. Hordern takes you back to the post-Reformation world and introduces you to the situation which produced the radical Reformation sects and later influenced the thinking of Karl Marx. He shows you the similarity of the insights of the sectarians and of the Communists; he also shows the significant divergence in their views because of the Christian element in the thinking of the sectarians. Brethren, because of their German sectarian origins, will especially appreciate the message of this book. Ministers, students and thoughtful laymen will find in it resources to meet the half truths of communism with the whole truth of the New Testament. Our sectarian ancestors, oppressed and downtrodden like huge masses of mankind today, wisely chose the Christian faith. The great issue of our time is whether or not we will so demonstrate our Christian faith that the downtrodden of our day will choose it and the democracy it has fostered rather than the Communistic totalitarianism which springs from the dialectical materialism of Karl Marx. —C. Ernest Davis.

Church News

Colorado

Rocky Ford—On April 17 Bro. Harl Russell, secretary of the Brotherhood Fund, brought the messages on Christian stewardship at the morning and evening services. We observed our love feast and communion service with our pastor officiating. Quarterly council was held April 13. Our pastor, Bro. Frank E. Nies, and his wife will represent us at Annual Conference. During the absence of our pastor, Rev. Kinsley of the M. E. church, Rev. Webber of the Congregational church, Rev. Erb, superintendent of the Mennonite hospital at La Junta, were guest speakers in our church. On Sunday evening, April 3, the Arkansas Valley male chorus, directed by Paul Yoder, was with us for a program. On April 7 Mr. John Ferguson of England spoke at a union meeting in the Presbyterian church on peace and the Fellowship of Reconciliation. We participated in union Lenten services and held a special Easter service in our own church. In the evening the choir and a cast of players presented the cantata, The Third Day. Some of our young people took part in the union sunrise service. On March 6 our pastor and Bro. Russell G. West, pastor of the Wiley church, exchanged pulpits. One Sunday each month, Bro. Nies preaches at the newly organized point in Pueblo, Colo. The meetings are being held at the present time in the home of Brother and Sister C. L. McGuire. Sister Nies and five of our young people attended the regional youth conference in McPherson. Valerie Miller and Donna Rhoads, district delegates to the Brethren youth seminar in Washington, D. C., and the UN Assembly, gave reports of their trip. Brother and Sister Paul Sargent of McPherson gave an account and showed slides of their recent tour of Brethren Service points in Europe. Mr. and Mrs. Fred Christenson, Baptist missionaries to India and representatives of the Gideon Bible Society, have also spoken in our church.—Mrs. O. C. Frantz, Rocky Ford, Colo.

Southern Ohio

Donnels Creek—World Day of Prayer was observed. Council meeting was held March 2. Several women attended the district women's meeting. At the March birthday supper, Dr. Henry Shillington showed pictures of the World Council of Churches Assembly which was held in Evanston last year. Several people from our church attended the preaching mission at the Troy church. Bro. T. Wayne Rieman, who held the meetings, spoke to our ladies' aid group. This group sent a contribution for seeds for relief. The women also decided to support the work of the Brotherhood for one-half hour. The Crusaders class is supporting the Brotherhood program for 10.16 minutes. The Fellowship class met with Ray Petersime and made plans to sponsor a displaced family. The church is collecting food for the B. V.S. workers. An offering was lifted for the Salem church. The CBYF group from our church meet each Sunday night with the Springfield group. The Sunday-school offering on the first Sunday of each month goes to Brethren Service. Our pastor, Ross L. Noffsinger, conducted Holy Week services April 5-8, which culminated with communion on Good Friday evening. Our church co-operated with the surrounding churches for a union service on Good Friday. The junior and intermediate department took charge of the Easter sunrise service which was followed by breakfast served by the young people. Two have been baptized.—Ruth Funderburg, Springfield, Ohio.

Eversole—Since our last report three new members have been received into our church fellowship. Our new pastor, Bro. Kenneth Hartman, conducted a school of missions. On March 27 the Gospel Mariners quartet gave an evening program. On April 3 our church held communion services with Pastor Hartman in charge. Our pastor also conducted pre-Easter meetings. On April 13 we held our regular council meeting with Elder High Cloppert presiding. Our church will be represented at Annual Conference by Bro. Hartman. Bro. A. N. Eshelman will hold our revival meetings in the fall.—Mrs. Miriam Denlinger, Brookville, Ohio.

Marble Furnace—Our church met in regular council on March 23, with Elder H. H. Helman presiding. Our love feast service was March 31 and a sunrise service and breakfast were held at the church on Easter morning. Our ladies' aid group is making comforters and sewing. At the council meeting, it was decided to organize a men's work group. We also decided to use the Sunday-school offering the first Sunday of each month for a new floor for the church. We are looking forward to our revival meeting beginning Sept. 12, with Bro. John Hurst as evangelist. The harvest meeting will be held on Sunday, Sept. 18.—Mrs. Irene McGowan, Peebles, Ohio.

Southern Pennsylvania

Waynesboro—During the past six months, twenty-seven persons have been baptized and two received by letter. All new members were presented to the congregation on Palm Sunday morning and honored at a reception in the church social room on April 27. Community activities in which our church participated were the pre-Lenten preaching mission, World Day of Prayer service, Good Friday service, and a drive for relief clothing which were sponsored by the Council of Churches. The women's work and men's work groups combined in a family night fellowship. The men's work sponsored the annual Cub Scout Blue and Gold banquet and the father and son banquet with Bro. M. Guy West as speaker. The Juniata College choir and ensemble presented a program of music one Sunday evening in our church. Evangelistic services were conducted by Bro. DeWitt L. Miller, pastor of the Hagerstown church. A program of visitation preceded the services. Our pastor conducted a class in preparation for church membership. At a Sunday evening service Merle Crouse spoke concerning the refugee resettlement program. The women's work spring luncheon was held at the Black Rock church. The older people of the church were honored at a fellowship program, Diamond Years, on a Sunday afternoon. Our Holy Week observance included the showing of the film, I Beheld His Glory; preparatory service; Lord's supper and communion; Easter sunrise service sponsored by the young people, followed by a breakfast;

CAMP WORSHIP

Enrich camp worship this year with ideas gleaned from the two titles suggested here.

Spiritual Values in Camping

Clarice M. Bowman

This is a handbook for better camping. The principles outlined and illustrated can be applied in any camp, private or public. The age span ranges from pre-teens to young adults.

What you will discover by the use of this book:

- How spiritual values in camping can be realized naturally and for the most part informally.
- How the camp setting can encourage the discovery of spiritual values.
- How the camp's activities and program can be tailor-made for the discovery of spiritual values.
- How camp counselors can be prepared for moments of spiritual awareness in campers.
- How camp personnel can share spiritual experiences.

The book is for camp directors and counselors. 256 pages $3.00

Worship Ways for Camp

Clarice M. Bowman

Worship is one absolute essential for a successful, meaningful camp experience. Sincerity is an absolute essential for successful worship. This book will provide guidance in the development of both. More than 200 worship aids — graces, benedictions, Scripture readings, offerings, dedications, prayers, and poems all carefully selected and edited in the language of the camper. Many were actually written and used by camp counselors. 192 pages $3.00

the cantata, The Triumphant Hour, presented by the church choir. Our women had charge of the program for the Waynesboro chapter of the W.C.T.U., presenting the play, Praying Hands. They also participated in the community observance of May Fellowship Day. On May 1 the pastor conducted a service for the consecration of children, in the evening the Elizabethtown College choir presented a concert. The annual dinner honoring the graduates was held in May and recognition was given to them at the morning worship service. Recordings of the sermons are taken to the sick and shut-ins of our congregation, a service made possible by the young people.—Mrs. J. Harold Engle, Waynesboro, Pa.

Western Pennsylvania

County Line—Dedication services were held for the interior remodeling of our church on Sunday, June 5, with an all-day meeting. The afternoon speaker was Bro. Wilfred Staufer, pastor of the Greensburg church, and our elder, Bro. Galen Blough of Somerset, was in charge of the dedication service. We participated in the valley sunrise service and the Good Friday service. We held our love feast on April 17, with three nights of meetings prior to the love feast. Five members were received into our church by baptism.—Olive M. Nedrow, Jones Mills, Pa.

Cumberland—The district held its annual meeting at our church on April 18. Pastors and lay leaders of fifty-five churches of the district were present. Our pastor, Bro. Arthur Scrogum, was chairman of the program committee. Bro. Morley Mays, dean of Juniata College, was the principal speaker. Brother and Sister John B. Jones of Frostburg, Md., presented a program entitled How Fares the Family? Mrs. Lucile W. Roeder, former member of the city council of Cumberland, spoke on We, the Women. About 150 members were present at our Holy Week communion service, making the largest participating group in recent years.—Anne H. Harden, Cumberland, Md

Florida and Georgia

Arcadia—Since our last report three have been received by baptism and one has been received by letter. One Sunday morning Bro. Walter Replogle of Okeechobee brought the message and in the evening, Dr. Frank Denlinger of Anderson, Ind., showed colored pictures of his tour of the Holy Land. Bro. C. H. Hoover of Anderson, Ind., was in charge of our love feast. One day thirty-nine from the Sebring ladies' aid group helped our women quilt. On March 31 our aid returned the visit. Our church participated in a week of pre-Easter services and was host church on Tuesday evening. On Easter we had a union sunrise service at Lake Catherine. At our morning worship service the children gave a short program, followed by a dedication service for eight children. Our attendance and interest have been gradually increasing since last fall. Two services are held each Sunday and midweek services on Wednesday evening. We appreciate the visitors who worshiped with us and heartily welcome anyone in our vicinity to worship with us.—Edna Norris, Arcadia, Fla.

Miami—Brother and Sister Dorsey E. Rotruck assumed pastoral duties with us the first of March. Installation services were conducted by Bro. C. E. Bower. These services were followed with a fellowship dinner. Sister Goldie Swartz visited our church, showing pictures and telling of her work and experiences in India. At our council meeting on April 17, Pastor Rotruck was elected delegate to Annual Conference. Fifteen from our church attended the roundtable at Alexander Springs in April. Our Sunday-school attendance is on the increase. We are planning some repair work on our church. Our mother and daughter banquet was held on May 3 and the father and son banquet on June 7.—Mrs. J. E. Jones, Miami, Fla.

Eastern Maryland

Union Bridge—A subdistrict CBYF meeting was held in our church. Our church joined in the first county-wide religious census in the history of Carroll County. On National Youth Sunday our young people participated in the morning church worship. On Feb. 27 a union worship service was held in our church with Dr. Hoover of Gettysburg Seminary as guest speaker. The first Sunday in March Bro. Alvin Brightbill had charge of our morning service. Several from our church went to Washington, D. C., to present their convictions to congressmen and senators concerning their stand for peace. Doris Nisvander, a senior at Bridgewater College, gave her organ recital at our church on March 13. Our young people visit shutins and sing familiar hymns for them. On Palm Sunday three members were added to our fellowship. In the evening of the same day, the combined parish choirs gave the cantata, From Darkness to Light, in the Union Bridge church. Thurston Myers recently purchased a recording machine and makes recordings of the sermons and various programs for the older people and shut-ins of our congregation. —Mrs. Jesse Pfoutz, Union Bridge, Md.

Mountain View—Our church sent two delegates to district conference. Our church was host to the union Thanksgiving service in our community. The women's work group visited and presented a program at the Fahrney-Keedy Memorial Home. A fellowship supper was held in our church with Bro. Floyd Mitchell as guest speaker. One Sunday the young people of the Calvary church presented a worship service. Their pastor, Bro. J. Floyd Wine, brought the morning message. Some of our young people spent a day at the relief center at New Windsor, Md. The interior of our church has been redecorated. An Easter sunrise service was held on our church lawn.—Edna M. Griffith, Bunker Hill, W. Va.

Western Maryland

Maple Grove—Our church was host to the district men's fellowship supper. Our church was also represented at district meeting and the district women's work meeting. Since our last report one member has been received by letter. The CBYF and men's work groups had an auction sale. A new sink was donated by one of our members for our church kitchen. Bro. James Renz spent a week end in our church. The CBYF group sponsored a New Year's Eve watch night service. Our women have a different project for each month. The projects included seeds for relief, new material, thread and buttons for dresses. Several boxes of clothing, comforters and quilts have been sent to relief. Our church participated in a community World Day of Prayer service which was held in the Bittinger Lutheran church. Bro. Howard Bernhard conducted a week of revival meetings at Bethesda, beginning April 22. Our spring love feast was held on May 22.—Mrs. Arthur Resh, Grantsville, Md.

First Virginia

Pleasant View—In December we installed four deacons into the office of deacon. The CBYF purchased a vacuum cleaner for the church. An original play by Mary V. Wampler, entitled Candle in the Dark, was a feature of our Christmas program. The first of the year our licensed minister, James McAvoy, began pastoral work in the Okeechobee church, Fla., and has since been ordained to the ministry. We participated in the World Day of Prayer service. In March our junior high class presented scenes from the life of St. Paul which the group prepared as part of their class work. We have purchased new hymnals for choir use. We co-operated with a neighboring Baptist church in Holy Week and Easter sunrise services with our ministers sharing in the preaching. On Easter evening we presented the dramatic musical worship service by Carl and Doreen Myers, Beneath the Cross of Jesus.—Mary V. Wampler, Fayetteville, W. Va.

Roanoke, First—At an evening service, we used the film, Rich Young Ruler. During the week of March 20-27, our evangelistic services were conducted by Bro. Paul H. Fike, pastor of the Cloverdale church. The district youth banquet was held at our church on March 28. The annual father and son banquet was held April 1, with Bro. Harry Gardner, pastor of the Troutville church, as speaker. Our love feast and communion service was held April 3. On Palm Sunday morning Sunday-school awards were given to those who had been present every Sunday for six months and for three months. Also during the morning worship service, eleven were baptized and eleven received by letter. Our pastor conducted Good Friday services. On Easter morning, our pastor, Bro. S. Earl Mitchell, was speaker for the sunrise service at Natural Bridge, Va. On Easter evening the adult choir gave a vesper program. During our morning worship on April 17, Bro. Warren D. Bowman, president of Bridgewater College, was guest speaker. That evening Miss Eva Sanders, missionary to Africa, was guest speaker. Our quarterly church council was held on April 20; at this time our pastor, Mrs. Junia Shaver and Donny Jordan were elected delegates to Annual Conference. Twelve of our young people attended the regional youth roundtable at Bridgewater College. — Betty Jordan, Roanoke, Va.

Second Virginia

Buena Vista—Since our last report three have been received into the church by baptism and two on former baptism. The women made three quilts for relief. A representative from the Gideon Bible Society presented a message to our group on Sunday morning. Our spring council was held on March 6. The trustees were authorized to buy a lot for a new parsonage. Our pastor and his wife, Brother and Sister John Graham, were elected delegates to Annual Conference. An altar set was presented to the church by the pastor and his wife. The young adult class is purchasing draperies for the chancel front. The Herschel Gilbert family presented the church with an electric organ and chimes. They were given in honor of Mr. Gilbert's parents. These special gifts along with the new carpet and pews were dedicated at a special service on Easter. Ralph Shober of Roanoke was guest speaker for the occasion. On April 17 our young people's group was host to the district young people's spring rally. Our church co-operated with the other churches in the town in a pre-Easter service. Mrs. Homer Miller, district women's work president, gave a talk to our Bible class group on Friday evening, April 1. The attendance at our Sunday evening services has been increased since we have different classes and groups of the church in charge of the devotions. A young people's choir under the direction of Mrs. Mary Floyd and a junior choir with Mrs. Virginia Thacker as director have recently been organized.—Mrs. John F. Graham, Buena Vista, Va.

Crummett Run—Three babies were dedicated during a Sunday morning service. Our Christmas program included the pageant, Let Earth Receive. Mrs. Forest Simmons, a member of the St. John Lutheran church, assisted us in our Christmas and Easter music. We met in council on April 3, with Elder Simon Glick officiating.—Mrs. Arline Waggy, Sugar Grove, W. Va.

Pleasant Hill—Evangelistic services were held in our church May 15-25 with Bro. Eugene H. Kahle of Danville, Va., as evangelist. The Mt. Bethel United Brethren church joined with our church in vacation Bible school this year which was held at our church June 6-17 for two hours each evening. The women of the church held a bake sale with the proceeds going into the parsonage fund. — Mrs. Leon Rankin, Crimona, Va.

Gospel MESSENGER
JULY 2, 1955

THERE are many occasions on which members of the armed forces are recognized for service and devotion to their country. Not nearly so often do sincere conscientious objectors to military service receive the recognition they deserve—for they also serve. Through many alternative service projects, as they work for church, community and government agencies, these young men of draft age demonstrate their willingness to give a testimony for their convictions. At the same time they render valuable service both in this country and abroad. The following pages point up their motives for choosing alternative service and call attention to their accomplishments.

READERS WRITE . . . to the editor

The Gospel Messenger welcomes letters commenting on editorials, articles and news. Letters should be brief and brotherly.

Quality versus Quantity

I just want to congratulate Bro. Kermit Eby on his splendid article of April 23.

Quantity does not mean anything if we fail to qualify. Many young Brethren today are being taught to be ashamed of our Brethren heritage, rather than uphold it at any cost. Many of our young people believe it isn't proper to have many of our churches doctrines carried out because it will hurt them socially. Many believe if we could substitute for some of them it would be easier, faster and more convenient. Did Jesus leave us any example whereby we could get the idea of an easier, more convenient way to follow him and be his disciples?

To be a true disciple of Jesus Christ is a rough road in the world of today, but a very rewarding one, to those who choose it. Jesus Christ said, "He who errs in one point is guilty of all." Why does man have to enter into any of Christ's business? Do we try to make ourselves better than God? Read the Bible and what Jesus said or commanded, that is enough. . . .

The faithful believers to whom each word and each admonition of their exalted Lord is precious should be firm and steadfast and under no circumstances compromise with the present-day apostosy. Rather sacrifice all, than to swerve from the truth as revealed in the Scriptures. Let us not believe that it is of no consequence to the Lord if we do not follow his clearly indicated commands and desires, and instead substitue our own man-made customs and inventions. . . . — Mrs. E. L. Vogt, Garden City, Mich.

Missions and the Super Bombs

America's frantic effort to make and stockpile more A-bombs and H-bombs than any other nation may be cause of some of the failure of our missionary endeavor. Our military leaders would have us believe that the only way that we can have peace is to have such striking force that other nations would fear to attack us. History proves that this idea is false. When the ire of a people is raised by insult or mistreatment, they will retaliate with very little regards for the odds against them.

Our missionaries have gone to other nations to tell them the "Good News" of our glorious religion, and its wonderful effects in the lives of men. This is what Christ would have us do. The military objectives of our nation cannot but cause suspicion in their minds. Confusion follows. How could it be otherwise? Even dumb animals know that when we offer something good and carry a big stick that we are not to be trusted. The cry has arisen, "America go home." We were obliged to recall our workers from China. It may be that we will be obliged to look with increased sadness on the work of the Crumpackers and the Harshes of our Brotherhood and of Flora Heebner and Mabel Reiff of the Schwenkfelters and of the Moyers of the Mennonites and many others of many churches. The missionaries have not failed but we have failed them.

Our mission workers have made a fine showing in India. But the shrinking of our activities there has the forebodings that all is not well there. They would have our Christ but not America's Christianity. Someone said that the United States is the most hated nation on the earth. I do not think that this is true now, but it may become so in the near future. "The fruit of righteousness is sown in peace of them that make peace" (Jas. 3: 18). Intensive war preparations will never give us peace. Our founding fathers wrote in our Constitution "to provide for the common defense." America is making preparation for world domination and thereby losing the esteem and respect of the nations of the world. The cause of Christian missions is suffering first and most thereby. — Joseph N. Cassel, Fairview Village, Pa.

Love and Co-operation

I notice in reading the Messenger that you tell about the churches co-operating for better Christian living, which I know is a step in the way that Jesus would have us go. But you not only have to co-operate with other churches but will have to co-operate with the people on this earth to have peace on earth as it is in heaven. There were two main things that Jesus tried to teach the people, namely, love and co-operation, and if we could get these facts over to the people we would not need to worry about their souls. — Verne Crawford, Kent, Wash.

Soldiers of Service

Volunteers reconditioned a building in the midst of a slum area and alternative service workers encourage and guide the community in its program of improvement

Ora Huston

ALMOST everyone is aware that we have a Selective Service Act. It is commonly called the draft. This act requires most able-bodied men to serve two years in the military forces of the United States government. Young men are required to spend two years of their lives as soldiers.

Not as many people are aware of the alternative service program. In the Selective Service Act, our Congress has made provision for those who, because of religious training and belief, are conscientiously opposed to participation in the military program. They have provided instead an alternative service program in which young men can work on a project that contributes to the national health, safety or interest. They may become "soldiers of service."

This work is of a nonmilitary nature. The service is rendered in general and mental hospitals, state agricultural colleges, dairy herd testing, old peoples' homes and orphanages, relief and rehabilitation projects, educational institutions, health research centers, agricultural projects in backward areas, recreational and educational projects for juvenile delinquents and underprivileged people. These services may be rendered under approved projects of the church, nonprofit organizations serving the public good and governmental agencies.

Christian citizens are very grateful to the government for these provisions. Many are using this opportunity to demonstrate their Christian faith. They have become "soldiers of service."

This alternative service program is in general harmony with the position and practices of the Church of the Brethren in relation to war as set forth by the Annual Conference of June 1948. The Conference stated, "All war is sin. We, therefore, cannot encourage, engage in, or willingly profit from armed conflict at home or abroad. We cannot, in the event of war, accept military service or support the military machine in any capacity." The statement continues, "The Church of the Brethren takes the position that our members cannot consistently accept any service with the military forces or under military supervision. We commend to them instead a constructive alternative service under the direction of the church or some other civilian agency. We recognize our obligation to provide facilities for such service for those who wish it."

Never before have the draft laws enacted by Congress so nearly coincided with the decisions of the church as the present provisions for alternative service. The present act is an improvement over the provisions for conscientious objectors in World War II. For example, no one is assigned to work without pay unless he himself volunteers to do so. The jobs carry the regular salary for the conscientious objector as for any other person doing the same work. The conscientious objector may select a program on a maintenance basis without salary if he so desires.

The second improvement over the provisions of World War II is that no one is assigned to a church agency unless the individual applies and is approved by the church agency for service.

The program is constructive and positive. Too often the position of the conscientious objector has been a negative one. When the conscientious objector wanted to be constructive and creative, he did not have an opportunity to do so. That privilege is his under the present law. For the first time in history, conscientious objectors have been able to go to the four corners of the earth and work with underprivileged people, demonstrating to the extent of their ability, goodwill, friendship and helpfulness to those in need. At the present time conscientious objectors are serving in some twenty-five foreign countries. They work in leper colonies, rebuilding homes ravaged by war, carrying food, clothing, medicine and agricultural supplies to refugees. They are working with war orphans and escapees, teaching backward peoples how to use modern methods of agriculture, teaching in schools in backward areas and serving in many other projects meeting human need.

Almost every person abhors war and would prefer not to have anything to do with it. Often these sentiments are ideals without relation to life or reality. The present alternative service program is concrete and practical. Not only is the young person granted military exemption but he is given an opportunity to work in areas of need. Often the hours are long and the work is hard. The efforts are unappreciated, but the work is positive, constructive and uplifting.

"Soldiers of service are patriots. In time of war or military psychology there are many people, of course, who believe they can be patriotic only by entering the military program. But the longer range and the higher look reveal that honest service rendered in good conscience is greater patriotism. For the Christian, the highest patriotism is the obedience to the teachings and example of Christ. Where there is a conflict between the demands of a nation and the call of God, the greatest patriotism is to obey the call of God. Legally, all those who go into the alternative service program are serving their country just as much as those who enter the military service. When a young man serves as a guinea pig in the National Institutes of Health, he may be making a far greater contribution to the welfare of his country than could be made in any other way. Caring for the ill and helping to make good citizens out of delinquent children is the highest type of patriotism.

Caring for the ill and helping to make good citizens out of underprivileged boys and girls are the highest type of patriotism

The alternative service program is a co-operative program. Not only the young man who takes the position and serves two years on a project makes a peace witness, but churches also share in that witness. The Annual Conference decision states: "The church stands ready to establish, administer and finance to the extent of its resources projects for such service under church control or in co-operation with local, state, federal and international civilian agencies."

During the Revolutionary War, the church helped individuals who suffered because of their peace stand through fellowship and material support where there was need. During the Civil War many of our churches raised funds to hire a substitute for the Brethren who conscientiously could not participate in the war. A number of the Western churches, organized about the time of the Civil War, waited for many years to build church houses while they paid off the obligations incurred while hiring substitutes for Brethren who could not take part in the war. During CPS days the church spent hundreds of thousands of dollars in sharing in the testimony which the CPS men made.

Today we have an even greater opportunity. Our young men are witnessing for peace in a dozen foreign countries and some forty locations in the States.

While the church has always been opposed to conscription, the provisions of the Selective Service Act make it possible for our young men to join in an army of service, fighting hunger, disease, ignorance and poverty through peaceful means.

EDITORIAL

The Alternative

Guest Editorial by D. W. Bittinger

UPON two occasions recently I have heard President Eisenhower say, "The greatest problem facing the world today is how we can live together." In essence that is the only problem facing the world, he said, and if it is not solved we will presently not have any world in which to live. The President spoke as one who knows more about the potential destructiveness of mankind than most of us know and can, therefore, underline both the extent of the problem and the urgency of its solution.

Three alternatives are suggested, as to how this problem might be worked out:

1. Each nation can stock-pile so much deadly armament that all nations will be afraid to go to war. This is the alternative we now seem to be trying to follow.

2. We can follow the way of "diplomacy," making careful moves and countermoves, seeking to check aggression here and counteraggression there, living precariously in an always uncertain balance of power.

3. We can establish our faith in God and in the way of love which was made manifest in Christ. We can seek to live and to teach that way.

It is evident that number one will eventually result in a completely annihilating explosion.

It is also evident that number two is simply a retarding device rather than a healing one. Eventually, driven by fright and hatred, we may all become neurotic and lose everything that makes us loving and human.

The way of loving-kindness, the role of the good neighbor, undertaking to discover the causes of distress and to alleviate them, this is the only possible way to heal the difficulties which surround us.

The alternative service program of the church is a strong demonstration of the power of The Christian peacemaker in action. The young men under the alternative service program seek to be allocated to areas of distress and tension, and there, in Christian commitment, to alleviate the tension by living according to the way of love. This can be a valuable experience to the alternative service men and an increasingly strong demonstration to the world of a new and wholesome approach to the solving of world problems.

It is the duty of a church like ours, and indeed of all Christian people, to make possible this strong demonstration of the Christian way of life as an alternative to war. Nothing less than eventual complete surrender, on the part of all peoples, to the method of Christian neighborliness and helpfulness, will make possible a world for our children and our children's children to live in. The alternative service program is undoubtedly a forerunner to this better day.

Jesus said, "If you love me, feed my lambs." The alternative service program seeks to put that command into action in the midst of a generation whose main concentration is upon better methods to hurt the lambs.

On Native Soil

ANNUAL CONFERENCE always closes with a consecration service. It seems appropriate for the church in solemn convocation to bid godspeed to new missionaries who have been commissioned for service.

As a result of many such consecrations another significant service is reported by way of pictures in the foreign mission pages of this issue. Irven Stern sends us a pictorial account of the ordination of Pastor Karbam, the first Nigerian in the area of our mission work to be ordained by the church of the Brethren.

From the time when the church at Antioch sent out Paul and Barnabas until today, the church has been called to send forth missionaries in response to Christ's great commission. But missionaries alone cannot build in a different soil the kind of church that will endure in a world like ours. They must discover and train and commission local, native leadership. And the church must recognize that the Holy Spirit, which sends forth missionaries from the homeland, also calls out Nigerian Christians for places of responsible leadership. In scenes like these that took place on Palm Sunday at Lassa, we can rejoice in the work of the Spirit in using Nigerians to build a Nigerian church.

Some persons may be fearful lest an indigenous church, a church that develops on native soil under local leaders may follow customs and practices that are different from those in the church at home. Of course there are differences, but hardly any greater than the differences between the church at Antioch that sent out Paul and any church in America today. Differences there will be, but far more important are the likenesses between worshiping congregations wherever they sincerely serve God and follow Jesus Christ. We ought to be thankful that the gospel can take root wherever it is preached and that it can bear such excellent fruit on Nigerian soil.—K.M.

Teen Agers and the Military Draft

Dan West

A I-W serves on the staff of a children's home, showering attention and love upon the orphan children often forgotten by the rest of us

IT IS the policy of a considerable segment of our government to make killers out of every American youth. A strong statement? Yes. Here is part of the evidence:

At the last White House Conference on Children and Youth a survey report was given to one section (there were thirty-four others) of the 6,000 delegates there. After a ten-year study of public school children all over the country from grades one to twelve, some of the researchers came to a distressing conclusion: the children were not much interested in war and few had the intention of a military career. Thus, someone explained, when the boys are put into the armed forces their personalities are damaged. The way out?

One psychiatrist offered the opinion that we should educate them from the first grade on to use military words habitually. Then at eighteen they would slide more easily into the military pattern with less damage to personality and less frustration. Some other delegates spoke for a "military culture," and hoped to maintain sound mental health during the whole process. And one representative from the Pentagon said that plans were already on paper to mobilize all of the American people (both men and women) for the next twenty-five to fifty years. To do that we would need to revise our educational processes.

However, when the conference report came out, there was no mention at all of a military culture. The reason, according to one delegate, was that too many delegates from religious and youth groups objected to the idea.

Late in 1951 a popular magazine came out with a carefully written article about some problems of the draftees. Recognizing the abhorence of these boys to violence, it was intended to help them adjust to the new role in the armed forces where violence is taken in stride. "We now, as a nation, have decided that boys in high school will be trained to fight, no matter what their past experience."

During the Korean "police action," the Pentagon discovered another annoying problem. From a military standpoint the early training of children in kindness became a liability. With all their basic training even when their own lives were in danger on the battlefield, a large fraction of the fellows could not pull the trigger when ordered to fire. One person suggested that we might make savages out of our boys in order to make good soldiers. Well, that honesty is refreshing anyhow.

But it is more refreshing to learn that not all Americans see things in that same way. Here is one example on this point: With the results of an earlier study in eleven public schools in four states showing a keen interest in the problems of the draft both by boys and their parents, a pilot project was run in eighteen Michigan high schools last year. It was called DIO—Defense Information and Orientation. This quote is significant: "In no respect is the program one of indoctrination or preparation for activities in the military service. The motive and purpose is one of education."

In January I had the privilege of observing part of this project. At the Ann Arbor high school the senior counselor, John Allison, went out of his way to have all of the positions under the present draft law presented to the 240 senior boys. Of course, the army, navy, marine and air force representatives made out their case in their best way. But Mr. Allison secured Irving Morrissett, an upstanding Quaker who did several years in CPS and is now a professor at the University of Michigan, to present the case for alternative service. He did it well and the group of sixty boys listened well. And I thought to myself: "This is in the best American tradition; all sides are presented to the boys who have a hard decision to make."

Of course the boys did not flock to the CO position. Nobody was asked to change his mind that day; and it would mean instability if any one would change suddenly. Also the CO position is harder socially and economically if not spiritually. It was new stuff to most of them. And the speaker could not offer them a free trip and a big chicken dinner on Sunday (remember, you help pay for that) as the man from the air force did. But some seeds of thought were planted. If cultivated, some will grow and bear fruit some day.

Now it would not surprise me to learn that this pilot project is part of the long-time plans of the Pentagon to make a military culture more palatable to us. Next year the Department of Defense is supplying 30,000 copies of the high school program, one to every high school principal in the U.S.A. and overseas dependent high schools. And if UMT (call it "national reserves" or whatever you like) becomes permanent policy, the next move is the conscription of women (Between the Lines, May 1, 1955).

But if the whole story is told to every boy and girl in high school, with not too much glamor for any part of it, with "accurate information, unbiased and objective judgment and sympathetic personal and group counseling," we cannot object to it. "It emphasizes the mature responsibility the student must carry for making important decisions for himself, but for making them in the light of accurate, authentic information, sound thinking and careful estimate of consequences. . . ."

I would like to see in the program some recognition of the will of God for this person and for this world, but some persons would take that as sectarian. And so it cannot be included in public school plans. But here is where the church comes in.

And here is where the Brethren have an advantageous position. The draft law recognizes three legal positions: I-A, I-A-O, and I-O. And the State pulls hard toward the I-A position with very good reason. Any soldiers whose consciences make for uncertainty in a tight military situation are a nuisance.

The Church of the Brethren recognizes all of these positions —and that of disobedience of the law which it does not recommend, however. But the church pulls (maybe a little too gently) toward the I-O position. It used to be the common practice to ask of applicants for baptism that they "not go to war nor learn the arts of war."

This puts a tension on every member of the church, once he knows it, and that makes it harder for young boys with sensitive consciences. But until the state becomes Christian in its policies, some tension has to be there. Anyhow, who would want a tensionless violin string or a a tensionless life? We must help our youth to handle these tensions constructively in keeping with our Christian faith. And we must help the kingdoms of this world to become the kingdom of our Lord.

If we keep a healthy steady tension on all of our members who take the I-A or I-A-O positions (and learn part, if not all, of the art of war), some day some of them will grow enough spiritually and renounce the whole warring system. I am

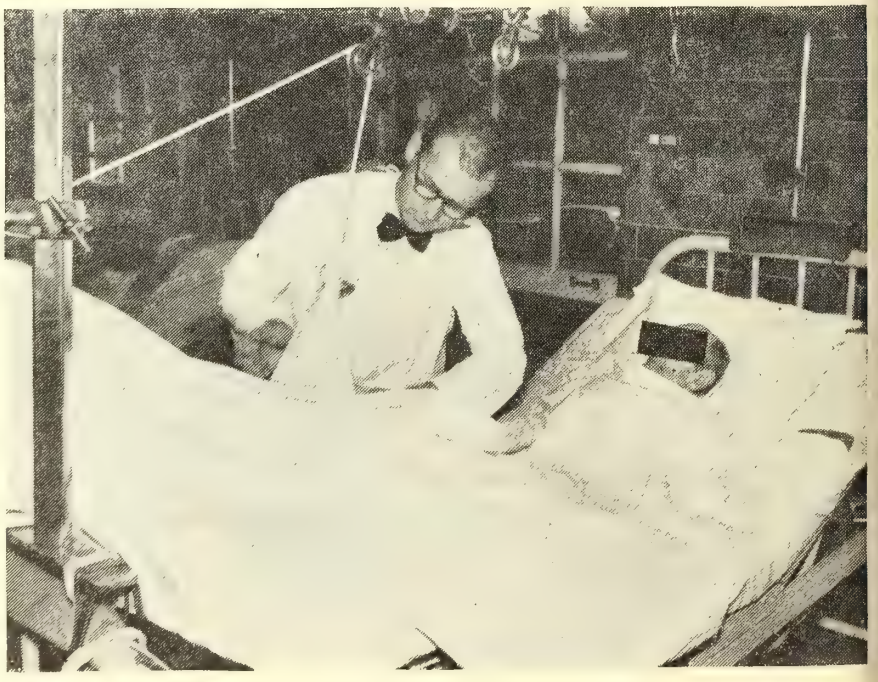
I'll Take Alternative Service

Phil Shellhaas

AS A young person who has just graduated from high school, I am perhaps like many other youth throughout the nation, concerned as to what the future may hold for me. The main problem which has much to do in deciding our future is that of the draft. For many there is the feeling that the draft is inevitable and that serving in the armed forces is the only way. For others, who may have given Christ's teachings a little more consideration, the conscientious objector stand and alternative service lies ahead.

The decision between alternative service and armed services is one which involves much careful thought. Here are some of the personal feelings that are going into my choice.

Is war right? Is the way of armed services right? All of us would naturally agree that God is peace loving and would not sanction war. Jesus could have defeated the whole Roman Empire, but instead he allowed them to crucify him. Everything that we know about Jesus's life on earth points to the fact that war is definitely against his teachings. One concludes then that participation in war is definitely not the Christian way.



Is war accomplishing anything? From past observations, where has war gotten us? It has gotten us nowhere except back into another war. Has the way of peace ever been tried? Surely the way of peace would get us farther than war has gotten us. Peace truly is the will of God and it is our duty to try to create peace and fulfill his will. But are we creating peace by joining the armed forces?

Is it right to kill? One of the Ten Commandments is, "Thou shalt not kill," yet what is war except mass killing? Can a true Christian be a part of this man-slaughtering war machine?

In answering these previous questions I come to the conclusion that war is wrong, that it is not accomplishing anything and that it is wrong to participate in war. Yet another question crops up in the mind of youth: "What will my friends say when I choose the way of alternative service?" Truly it takes more courage to choose the way of peace than to choose the way of war. Social pressures very often guide the decisions of young men. A survey of war personnel showed that only about twenty-five per cent of the men in armed forces can actually overlook God's teachings against killing and pull the trigger against the enemy. In other words, a goodly number of the boys who choose the armed forces could just as easily have chosen alternative service if it were not for all the social pressures facing them. If one is to be true to his conscience and to God, he must overlook the social pressures and accept the persecutions that go along with his choice of alternative service.

Where can I be of the most service: in alternative service or in the armed services? Just what services are the armed forces rendering us? They may say that they are making this nation a safe place in which to live. Yet would not our nation be much more safe if we advocated a peace policy rather than put all our efforts toward war? Past experiences has shown us that by winning one war, our nation is no more safe than it was before the war.

What does alternative service offer us? Through alternative service young men are given the opportunity to serve their country by helping to create goodwill and peace among the people of the world. Christ sets forth a policy of unselfish Christian service. Alternative service offers this, while the armed forces just the opposite. It seems to me that one with a true Christian conscience would not be in any way a part of the armed forces. Not only does alternative service offer to us an alternative to war and sin, but it gives us a way in which we can help fulfill God's will—a will of peace.

very grateful that my church did not throw me out when I entered the U.S. army in 1918. But if it had made the position clearer I would have respected it more then. And if I had had better help soon enough I might have made a better decision. At eighteen years I needed much more help than I got and so do our youth and the youth of every Christian church and all other youth.

The point of all this comes here, as I see it. We owe it to our youth in high school—both boys and girls—to prepare them to live triumphantly in a very rugged world. No "flowery beds of ease" now.

We must develop in our youth the habit of making their own decisions—or else lose our peace doctrine. "The essense of a drafted soldier's life is the unquestioning obedience to orders. The essence of conscientious objection is the making of personal, independent decisions on points of conduct, in keeping with some religious, philosophical or other standard."

We must get to every member —and to many other youth— reliable information on this question before they are eighteen years old. It is better to get it to them early so that they can "chew their cuds" a while—one, two or three years ahead of time.

We must point out the rightness of the purpose to "seek first the kingdom"—not the advantages of technical training or position through military channels. Once they see it, many will sacrifice for it willingly.

We must stress the possibilities and the need for building up the world instead of destroying it—Brethren Volunteer Service, alternative service, and the intent of making their whole lives constructive. We must keep on seeking for the moral and other equivalents of war.

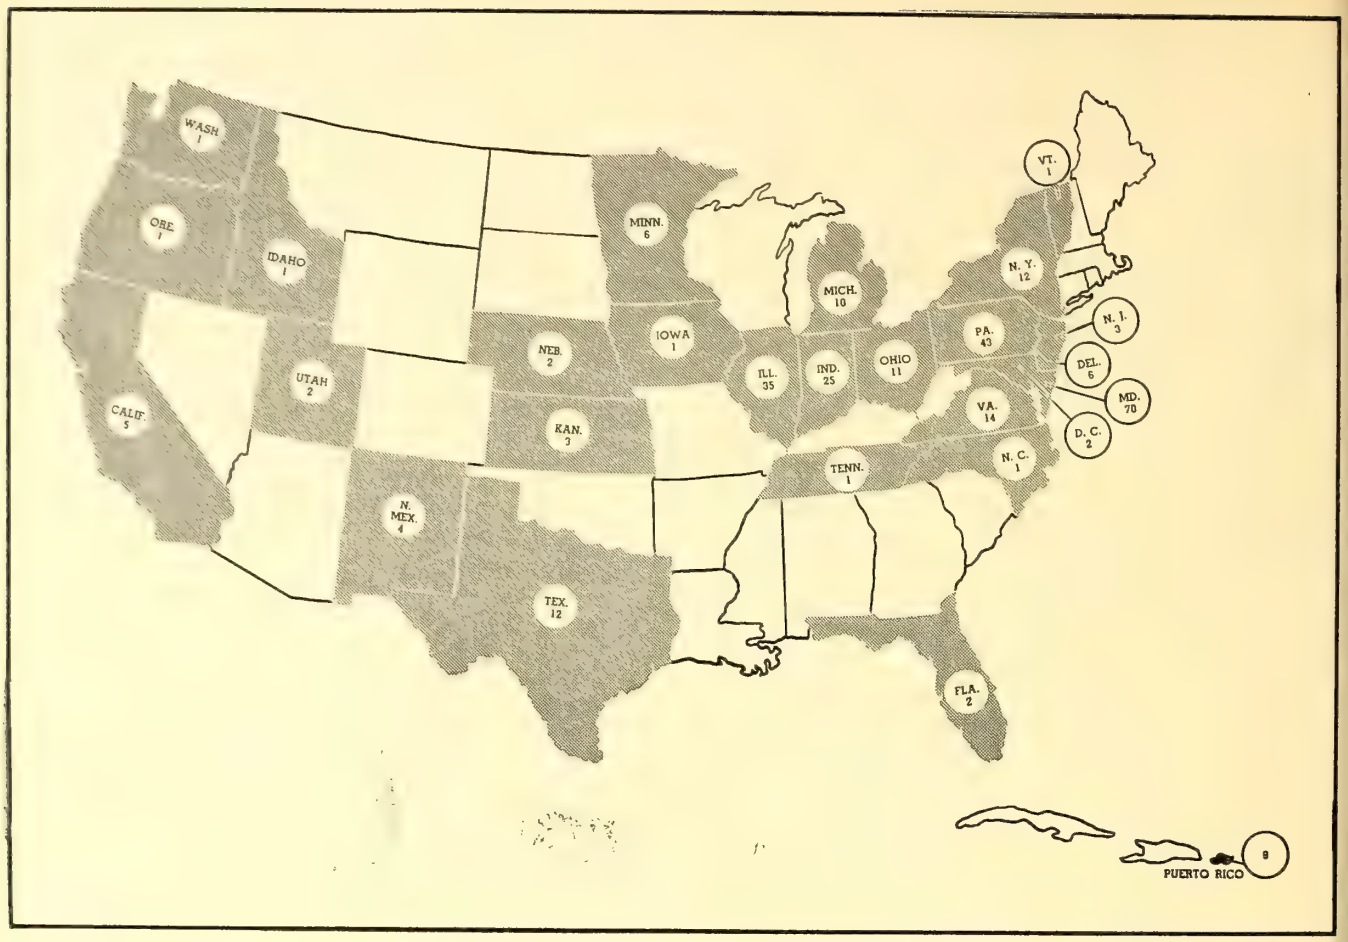
A Great Testimony

Clifton and Esther Crouse



ONE day in December 1953, a group of Brethren volunteers were sitting in the Kassel House in Germany, sharing their Christmas mail. A I-W had just received a letter from the CBYF back home. It contained a generous money order. He read, "In appreciation for the sacrifice you are making" A bit of silence—then he turned to us and said, "We aren't sacrificing. We are only doing the things the church believes in."

One fellow who had recently begun his term of alternative service wrote, "I don't know what's ahead, but I know God is with me."

These young people with their enthusiasm, energy and faith are making tremendous paths into the way of peace. Their decisions have not come easily. Some have questioned, discussed, studied and prayed for direction. Many were discouraged by friends and even families and the home church. One fellow said, "I learned we can use the same energy for peace that we use in wartime. It took me seven years to think that way."

Now, some are gradually coming back home. They have a great testimony. They have tackled situations they could never have met without the help of God. They have suffered great pangs of homesickness and loneliness in strange places. They have been hungry and cold. They have lived with oppressed people and know, firsthand, the disasters of war. They have been ambassadors for a living way of life. Now what they say has meaning. It is a heart and soul religion.

The Church of the Brethren has a great testimony! As parents and grandparents, let us teach and live it at our home base, so that our youth and children may grow up to know the privileges, responsibilities and joys that come from the way of peace and love.

At the Clinical Center of the National Institutes of Health I-W's work under the direction of the Health Education and Welfare Department of the government

VOLUNTEERS IN MEDICAL RESEARCH

Elsie Fahrentold

CHRISTIAN youth in our country are playing an extremely important but little publicized role in the program of the Clinical Center at Bethesda, Maryland, the clinical portion of the most intensive medical research operation in history. This unique hospital is part of the National Institutes of Health, the principal research branch of the United States Public Health Service.

Medical research has been going on at NIH, as it is popularly known, for over half a century. During the years numerous important discoveries have been made that have helped in the conquest of many diseases, including such scourges as typhus, typhoid and cholera. Now NIH is carrying out a long-range program focused on finding ways to save mankind from the menace of cancer, heart disease, arthritis and other grave chronic illnesses.

The Clinical Center is a large, modern, well-equipped research laboratory and hospital used by all seven of the special institutes which together form NIH. These institutes are the National Cancer Institute, the National Heart Institute, the National Institute of Arthritis and Metabolic Diseases, the National Microbiological Institute, the National Institute of Neurological Diseases and Blindness, the National Institute of Mental Health, and the National Institute of Dental Research.

Here research physicians study diseases and other phenomena as they occur in man, while laboratory science experts study similar problems in animals and test tubes. By closely correlating their work and constantly exchanging information and ideas, it is hoped that they can speed up the discovery of causes and better methods of preventing, diagnosing and treating diseases.

There is a curiously exhilarating atmosphere about the center, probably because each sick person has been made to realize that he not only has every possible opportunity of getting well, but that in the process he is helping other victims of his own disease. He knows he is part of a research team, that the biochemist, the biophysicist, the pathologist, the pharmacologist, the clinician and other specialists and technicians are all right there in the hospital working with one another and the patient.

Most patients are sent to the Clinical Center by their own physicians because they have a specific disease or other condition that is needed for one of the clinical research studies. Another type of patient—one who is perfectly healthy—enters the Clinical Center because he wishes to make a contribution to medical science.

One of the most important missions of medical research is to find out how and to what degree various parts and processes of the body are affected by disease, or by drugs or procedures used to diagnose, prevent, or treat disease. In order to accomplish this, it is often necessary first to find out what takes place in normal, healthy people. Consequently, the normal volunteer who makes these observations possible plays an extremely valuable part in the advancement of knowledge which benefits all mankind.

This brings us back to the vital role our Christian youth is playing. Since the volunteer program began in January 1954, fifty-three volunteers have joined the National Institutes of Health research teams, to serve as normal controls for the many and varied projects constantly under way. They represent every area in the United States, coming from fourteen widely separated states and Canada. These dedicated young men and women, most of whom are affiliated with the Church of the Brethren, the Mennonites and the Assemblies of God, are participating in research which is resulting in greatly needed clues to heart disease and arthritis. And many useful studies in the field of mental illness would have been impossible without the co-operation of these normal volunteers.

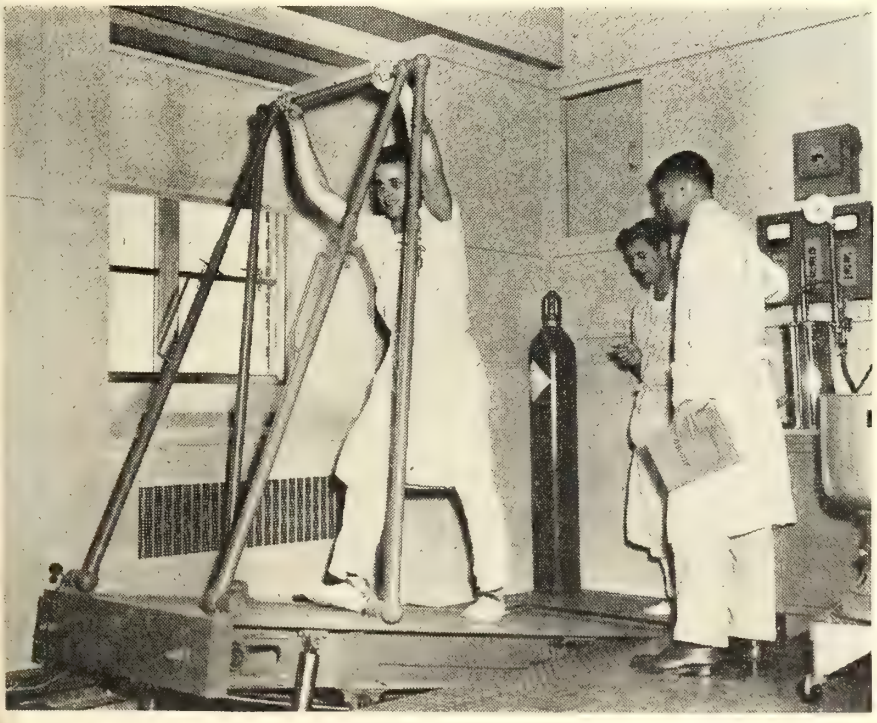
There are many misconceptions regarding this aspect of medical research. Perhaps the widest misconception is implied in the phrase "human guinea pigs." This unfortunately widespread phrase suggests that volunteer normal controls are "experimented upon" without regard to their individual welfare.

Nothing could be further from the truth.

At the Clinical Center, as at every hospital, the first consideration is always the welfare of the patient—whether he is being studied and treated for a specific disease or studied for the advancement of knowledge concerning disease and health. No dangerous bacteria or unknown drugs are injected into the volunteer normal patient at the Clinical Center. Dangerous operations are not performed upon him.

On the other hand, volunteering for medical study should not be undertaken with the idea that it is a sort of vacation, totally without minor discomfort, inconvenience or boredom.

For instance, diets are very important in many research studies, but a three-month diet composed exclusively of rice, for example, can become tiresome. Walking a mile a day on a treadmill with regulated speeds and slopes may sometimes be a nuisance. Frequent testing of small amounts of blood entails the mild discomfort of the withdrawing needle. The same is true of studies which require shots of drugs, hormones or other material injected during the course of medical research. Donating a small strip of muscle for laboratory analysis leaves an incision that will cause an occasional twinge for a week or so. For a healthy, active young person, simply having to remain inside for several days may not be fun.



There are certain rules and restrictions that must be followed in the interest either of the patient, the research project or both. But the restrictions, inconveniences, purposes and procedures involved in any project are thoroughly explained to the volunteer patient before he agrees to accept a particular assignment.

A voluntary patient is like any other patient in that a particular Clinical Center physician is responsible for supervising all his activities while he is at the center. Closeness of supervision varies somewhat from study to study and institute to institute. For most studies, volunteer patients may go anywhere in the Clinical Center where patients are allowed, by simply notifying the nurse in charge on their floor where they are going and when they will return. They also may go out of the building on a pass for two or three hours at a time between meals several times a week. On certain projects the investigator may require volunteers when leaving the nursing unit or ward to be accompanied by a nurse or attendant or to travel in pairs in an honor system. This is necessary to safeguard studies in which patients are on special diets or which require collection of all excretions.

Get-quiet time is approximately 11:00 p.m.; this permits a good night's rest and assures a "normal" subject for tests the following day.

There are also advantages and rewards to this business of volunteering as a study patient. Foremost, of course, is the realization that one is making a positive contribution to the welfare of mankind by helping in the conquest of disease. And while aiding science, most volunteers find time to pursue some personal projects, such as attending the NIH graduate school and furthering their

By drinking an excess of water and walking a treadmill so doctors can learn how a normal person's body gets rid of liquids, this volunteer helps to find clues to fatness and heart disease

In a Tradition of Service

John C. Eller

WHEN the first conscientious objector to war joined the Bethany Hospital family, he entered a great tradition of service. He joined that long line of dedicated people who have bound up the wounds of those who were sick and infirm, people in trouble. He and the seventeen who have followed have found this an interesting tradition—a tradition having its beginning in antiquity.

Work in a hospital has many calls to duty and devotion; some dramatic—the products of emergency —some just ordinary and others exceedingly drab. With all of the public drama of the wonder drugs, the beloved physician performing the miracle of operation and the pretty nurse in her starched uniform, one can easily get the impression that this is the modern hospital. True these are a part of the modern hospital, but there are also floors to be mopped, dishes to be washed, baths to be given, linens to be washed, filing to be done, bills to be made and eternal phone calls to answer—to mention but a few.

These men who have chosen to be creative citizens rather than students of destruction have found their way into all walks of hospital life. It is with considerable surprise that some have found that a hospital our size has at its highest peak had eleven I-W's at one time. "What on earth do they do?" is a rather typical question.

What do they do? They usually do whatever they are assigned to do—and more. When these young men started coming to join our staff the level of patient care went up, for here were men with a concern. Patient reaction began to improve. The public slowly began to realize that employee morale was at a new high. The shortage of registered nurses began to lose some of its sting, for here were men willing to help take up the slack.

During this past winter, two students from the University of Chicago made a detailed study and evaluation of the hospital. During our last interview one of the boys looked me straight in the eye and asked, "How on earth do you attract all these wonderful male employees? It surely can't be the wages. Are they assigned here by the church—or something?"

My answer, of course, was both "Yes" and "No." "No, it is not the wages," I replied. "Yes, they are assigned here by the church, in a sense. These boys are conscientious objectors to the draft. We are a project approved by the military, where these men can spend two years as an alternative to serving in the army. They are assigned to us by the Brethren Service Commission."

"You mean these boys are draftees who are working here instead of being in the army?" he questioned.

"Yes, that is true," was my reply.

Turning to his friend he said, "Now this is what I call a creative way to work at this world's problems." Almost under his breath he continued, "Well, this explains a lot of things around here."

Here they stand. Creative citizens in a great tradition—a tradition that hears the cry of a troubled people and makes them whole again.

I Married a CO!

Carole Huffman Crist

I'VE always known that I would like to marry a pacifist. Our family's roots were Brethren roots, and one of the deepest was love of peace. My early school years strengthened my convictions, for I could not conscientiously participate in war drives and campaigns, and therefore I was thought a bit fanatical. When I used Christian Pacifism as my subject for a speech, my audience was a cool one. Due to my convictions, I did not "belong." The unhappiness of my situation was relieved by Brethren youth conferences and camps.

I shall always remember the glow that I experienced when I entered McPherson College. My friends and classmates there had similar views to mine. I belonged. Most of the girls I chose for best friends and many of the fellows I dated were ardent conscientious objectors to war. I met and grew to know and love the man I wanted to marry.

During our courtship, we found time for constructive peace activities. We attended peace conferences and made a trip to Washington, D. C., to protest a UMT bill. Our beliefs strengthened our love, and vice versa. I was proud and happy to be included in D. A.'s plans for the future!

Soon after our marriage we began to anticipate our role in the peace effort. After much prayer and thought, D. A. arranged to serve his two years in alternative service under the B.V.S. program. I gladly volunteered also.

The group living, during two months of B.V.S. training, was inspirational and vital. Five married couples were among the unit members. The time passed quickly and we began to talk of projects. After prayerful consideration, we chose a position as house parents in a small home for boys.

We never regretted our decision. Our boys (as they soon became) will be men tomorrow, helping to make world decisions. We attempted to pass on to them the love of Christ and his way of life. We poured all our love upon them, hoping they might feel his greater love.

Our own little son was born in that home. No baby was ever blessed with more love and attention! When our two years were finished, we felt that we had been abundantly blessed. The experience of working together under mutual convictions, toward a goal of love, had bound us together as no other bond ever could. I thank God that I married a CO!

A Contribution to Peace

Dale Blough

IT SEEMS almost impossible to believe that my two years' obligation to Uncle Sam now lie behind me. It was not two years of wearing a uniform and training for war but was instead a period of time during which I felt that I was in a small way contributing more directly for peace. For, instead of going into military service, I was in alternative service which the government provides in co-operation with some of the denominations for young men who are conscientious objectors. My final place of assignment which was to be my home for about two years was northwestern Greece.

While working in Greece in a program of village assistance and improvement I was constantly working and living with people of another country. The nature of the work done by the Inter-Church Service team is such that we continue to work with the same people, and as a result I came to know many of the Greeks very well. Their concerns became my concerns; many were the nights that we sat around the glowing coals in the fireplace in a village home as Costa told me how he and his family fled from their home three times in the period from 1940 to 1949 or as Nick told of his plans for irrigating his fields during the following summer. And as the months came and went and I heard one incident after another I realized often how happy I was that I had chosen I-W service instead of allowing myself to become drafted into the armed forces. For if I had done so I would have been training to fight those whom I really loved.

And these are the people who suffer so much during and after a war—the Costas, the Nicks. Modern wars have become so impersonal that we have to think far beyond the thousands of young men in combat fighting to the millions upon millions of common folks who find themselves in the center of the inferno. For how many years will the scars of Hiroshima remain—scars inflicted by a Christian nation? What about the burned and plundered villages—and the thousands of orphans who will never know a home? War is not a battle fought today and completed tomorrow. How can we conscientiously become a part of this cruel machine which bulldozes the population, homes and resources of entire countries into a mass of smoking embers as it sweeps across the earth?

If peace is our desired goal—and there are nations who doubt our sincerity in attaining peace when they see for what purposes the bulk of the national taxes is spent—why can't we be more direct in our methods? Wouldn't it be interesting if all young men were drafted into causes that contributed directly for peace? Perhaps alternative service could then be provided for those who were conscientiously opposed to participating in peace programs but desired military service instead.

I write not as one who feels that it is necessary for those in alternative service to be sent to another country to work with other people, for I know that important tasks are awaiting young men in the United States. But perhaps because I have been in countries destroyed by war, its destruction of property and human life may be somewhat clearer to me.

Christ's teachings are not impractical; if so, they would not have lasted 2,000 years—though we do twist many of them to fit our desires. "Love thy neighbor as thyself"—if he lives in the United States and is of the same race. Before allowing ourselves to become drafted let us be sure that we know where lies our allegiance—to the United States? to Christ? to our neighbors?—and how it can be fit together. Whether he is drafted into military service, is noncombatant or a CO, or refuses to register is each one's personal choice. But, before it is too late, let us have in mind what our Christian course of action will be.

An Opportunity to Serve God

Warren Eikenberry

IF I were to have my way when entering Brethren Volunteer Service as my alternative for the draft, I would now be in Europe, for, as to most of those fellows who volunteered, the faraway places possessed dramatic appeal and inspiring challenge. But I never got that far.

Instead God directed me into another area of service, not so distant or spectacular, but of equal or perhaps greater importance. And I am happy, for the preceding years have strengthened my character, molded my beliefs and broadened an understanding of my own country and Brethren. Due to the ever-present influences of Brethren Service, B.V.S., and my present community and church I am better prepared for the unharnessed task that lies ahead. Let me contribute a few experiences regarding the unlimited opportunities and areas of service confronting a project such as my own at Nappanee.

My work has given me a splendid opportunity to serve an active and understanding community, to become part of it and to feel I am doing some good at home as well as abroad.

I have been given the opportunity to grow spiritually through participation in the work of a church (other than my own "home church") vitally connected with my work. Before entering B.V.S. it would have been an enormous struggle to address an audience, teach a Sunday-school class or direct singing. Now it is a vital part of my person, a necessary way of expressing myself and my feeling about God. Brethren Service has offered a channel to develop self-reliance.

I have been given the opportunity to meet and learn to live with fellows of various backgrounds and differing viewpoints. I have learned to understand and appreciate parts of our more liberal, more conservative, more formal and more fundamental Brethrenism. I have also discovered there are countless ministers and laymen of other denominations who, like myself, are harboring a deep desire to serve mankind.

Then I have had the opportunity to serve God by serving Brethren Service. I cannot preach, perform miraculous operations or portray a picture of God with illustrative paints or pen, but there is the chance to acquaint myself with the tremendous physical suffering and need now existing the world over. My own hands and mind teamed with the diverse thinking of numerous others is gratifying, for we know our toilsome work will be appreciated by thousands.

Most of all, I have learned that each I-W must learn to give in order to receive. If we cannot put the bulk of our mind, body, and spirit into the work we are doing, we will soon find fault with the whole Brethren Service program and administration.

Of course, it is evident that these various opportunities are present in every community and walk of life. But Brethren Service puts all else aside. We learn to place these things foremost in our minds. We seek the answer rather than waiting for someone to provide the solution. Through Brethren Service we are given the chance to become alive and prove that a I-W is not just an objector to war, but a conciliator for international peace, goodwill and understanding.

Home-coming

Samuel I. Harley and B. J. Wampler, Jr. are guest speakers for the home-coming services at the Middle River church, Grottoes, Va., on Sunday, July 10. All friends and former members of the church are invited to attend this special occasion.

La Verne College

The honorary degree, Doctor of Divinity, was conferred upon I. V. Funderburgh at the commencement exercises, June 2. Bro. Funderburgh served La Verne College as business manager, teacher and president from 1917 to 1923, and again in 1947-48 as acting dean. His life of service includes many years of public school and public welfare administration. During the past fourteen years he has been in active church work as pastor at Pasadena, then recently as executive secretary of the Pacific Coast Regional Council.

Prof. J. Jack Melhorn of the sociology department has been granted a Sabbatical leave of absence to pursue doctoral study at the University of Southern California during the forthcoming academic year. Prof. Herbert Hogan, dean of the summer session who has been on leave during the past year, will continue study at Claremont Graduate School.

Lucile Long Strayer, head of the English department and during the past year at Manchester College, has felt it necessary to resign to remain near her parents in Indiana.

Two top honor scholarships — the Gilbert scholarship, and the Janet Smeltzer scholarship — have been awarded to Edith Cosner of Waterford, Calif., and Esther Williams of Wenatchee, Wash., respectively, for the 1955-56 academic year. Both of them are based on qualities of Christian character and leadership on the campus.

Two postsession seminars, one of them of particular interest to church laity, will be offered during the two weeks' period, Aug. 1-12. Dr. Gladdys Muir of Manchester College, formerly of the La Verne faculty, will offer an intensive course in international relations. In the area of current social issues in education, a panel of leadership including President Fasnacht, Dean Baum and Professor Melhorn will teach the seminar. Either of these courses could be taken for two hours' credit.

Four members of the college staff will attend the Manchester conference on higher education in August: President Fasnacht; Daniel M. Long, assistant professor of philosophy; J. Jack Melhorn, associate professor of sociology; and Arthur Gilbert, assistant professor of business administration.

J. Onis Leonard, assistant to the president and executive secretary of the alumni association, was awarded a citation entitled "alumnus of the year" at the annual alumni banquet on May 28. The award was made by the alumni board of directors. Floyd Barnhart,

Brotherhood Theme: Seek First His Kingdom

'50, was elected president of the association for the coming year.

Manchester College

The sixty-sixth annual commencement of Manchester College is a matter of history. The baccalaureate and commencement activities were well attended and the addresses were strong and inspiring ones. The college graduated forty-two people with the A.B. degree, and eighty-seven with the B.S. degree.

A large group attended the Alumni Dinner on Saturday evening, May 28. Dr. J. Russell Bright of Detroit acted as Toastmaster. Short talks were given by Mrs. Marguerite Boda '25, of Dayton, Ohio, by Myrl Alexander '33, of Washington, D. C., and Dean Earl Garver of the college. The president of the college alumni for 1955-56 will be Noble Miller of Dayton, Ohio; first vice-president is Dr. J. Russell Bright of Detroit; second vice-president is Bill Sayers of North Manchester.

Three of the present teachers of Manchester College will be studying at graduate school next year. Miss LaVernia Jorgensen at Indiana University, Professor William Gnagey at Wayne University, and Professor John Brown, Jr., at the University of California, Los Angeles.

Dr. Ercell Lynn, who was a member of the faculty a few years ago, will be returning as a member of the faculty for 1955-56. Dr. Lynn's main field of interest will be in the field of religious education, in which he has been specializing. Mrs. Lynn, the former Isabel Beery, will also be teaching, part-time, in the field of home economics or counseling. She, too, has studied at Columbia University for some three years since leaving here in 1951.

Dr. William Stafford, Lewis and Clarke College, Portland, Oregon, will be added to the staff at Manchester College beginning with the fall of 1955. Professor Stafford holds his doctor's degree from the University of Iowa. Mrs. Stafford will be teaching in the city schools of North Manchester.

William Eberly graduated from Manchester in 1948, in the field of science, and will be added to the Science Department of Manchester College. He will be teaching biology and physical science. He has been attending Indiana University during the past two years and he is preparing to get his doctor's dissertation in the near future.

The March of Progress Campaign at Manchester College for capital funds is making steady progress. The faculty and staff have pledged $20,000 to the campaign; the student body, $22,000; and the city of North Manchester, at least $66,000. Churches from Northern Indiana, and a few of Middle Indiana have already conducted their campaign and have contributed significantly to the cause. This is the largest fund raising campaign for Manchester College in years. It is hoped that church people will regard this as a major project for the College for the present.

Professor O. W. Nehr, former teacher of biology at Manchester and Mount Morris Colleges for many years, and Professor J. E. Dotterer, Professor at Manchester College, received awards of merit for distinguished service at the educational dinner at Grand Rapids on June 18.

Summer school at Manchester has begun with a ten per cent increase over last summer. A number of regular students are in attendance, along with many teachers in service.

News and Comment From Around the World

Launch Bible Campaign in Pennsylvania

The Pennsylvania Council of Churches has launched what it terms "the strongest program ever projected in the state in the use and understanding of the Bible." An estimated 300 communities will be visited by church leaders during the first three years of the project.

The six-point plan for the crusade includes: A Bible hymn festival in every village, town and city; courses on the use and understanding of the Bible in every church school; release of a motion picture and filmstrip on the Bible to every community; and interchurch observance of the Universal Week of Prayer.

St. Louis Churches Minister to Aged

The Metropolitan Church Federation of St. Louis in co-operation with the Visiting Nurses Association is sponsoring a program of visits to the city's lonely, elderly people. Members of a five-woman "pilot group" in charge of the project make at least one call a week on elderly women who are housebound. They also take those with heart ailments to the clinics if necessary, write letters and read to those whose eyesight is failing.

Missouri Districts Hold Peace Institute

On May 13-15 the three districts of Missouri held a peace institute at the Warrensburg Church of the Brethren. Conveners of the institute were Ralph Hodgden and Floyd E. Bantz.

Some forty-five persons from nearly fifteen local congregations attended the institute sessions. More than 150 persons attended the Sunday sessions. Ralph Smeltzer, director of social education, served as resource leader at the institute.

Topics for discussion included the Peace Philosophy and the History of the Peace Position in the Church of the Brethren, American Foreign Policy and Peace, The Present Status of UMT, Making the Community Peace-Minded, Growing Into Our Heritage, and A Brethren Peace Strategy.

A number of films were used including the following: The Toymaker, The Way of Peace, A Time for Greatness, A Christian in Politics, More for Peace, and the new Brethren Service filmstrip, They Also Serve. Sponsors of the institute were well pleased with the response to the discussion topics and with the widespead participation in the conference.

Agricultural Missionaries Honored for Their Services

Twenty-five agricultural missionaries who have worked a total of 865 years among rural peoples in under-developed lands overseas were recently honored for their service. They were guests at the twenty-fifth anniversary luncheon of Agricultural Missions, Inc.

Dr. Ira W. Moomaw, executive secretary of the agency, said that at present there are 158 agricultural missionaries representing 45 Protestant communions serving in 45 countries of the world. At the same time more students in colleges of agriculture and home economics are volunteering for rural mission service. It is hoped that the number of missionaries now serving on the field can be doubled in five years.

Rockefeller Gift to New York University for Hymnbook

Mrs. John D. Rockefeller, Jr., has given $26,000 for the preparation and publication of an American hymnbook. The anthology will have three sections. The first will include accurate reproductions of American hymns dating from the 16th through the 18th centuries; the second will feature "romantic-type" hymns sung during the 19th century; and the final section will consist of new works commissioned especially for the book. The book will be published by the University of Chicago Press.

Protestants Told Alcoholism Largest Mental Health Problem

Dr. Karl Menninger, noted psychiatrist, has stated that the five million alcoholics in the U.S. constitute the nation's single largest mental health problem. He said, "Every day we see horrifying examples of men and women who drink up every penny they own and make serious critical errors in judgment that affect you and me. It is a problem which is taking a tremendous mental, social and physical toll." Dr. Menninger praised the rehabilitation program of Alcoholics Anonymous but said that it will not be able to reach all who need help.

World Council to Study Christian View on War

A new inquiry into the Christian attitude toward war and peace may soon be undertaken by the World Council of Churches. Tentative plans for the study were announced by Dr. Robert S. Bilheimer, associate general secretary of the World Council and director of its division of studies. He said the study of the theological implications of the subject was needed "because of the possibility that the hydrogen bomb has created a new element in warfare for which the established Christian attitude has little relevance."

Jordan Requires Permit for Sale of Land to Christians

A new law enacted in Jordan requires a special government permit for the sale of land to Christian religious bodies. Jordan controls Jerusalem's Old City in which many Christian shrines are located. There is a recurring demand for land as the site of hospitals, monasteries and other Christian institutions near these shrines. Christian leaders in Jerusalem were reported as aroused over the new law.

Southern Baptists Hold Annual Convention

Delegates to the annual meeting of the Southern Baptist Convention held in Miami, Fla., adopted a record budget of $10,000,000 for 1956. They heard reports that 1954 was a year of unprecedented achievement, with Southern Baptist church membership exceeding 8,000,000.

Delegates heard from Dr. Herbert Gezork, first vice-president of the American Baptist Convention, a plea for greater co-operation between Baptists of the North and South. A "missions emphasis" program to be climaxed by a five-year program of advance ending in 1964 was adopted. Southern Baptists indicated interest in joining with other Baptist bodies in a nation-wide evangelism campaign in 1958 or 1959.

The year 1957 was designated for a Convention-wide emphasis on world missions. One of the chief objectives of the program will be to interest more Baptist young people in becoming missionaries.

The Convention commended President Eisenhower for his patient diplomatic conduct and praised leaders in both parties who have aligned themselves with the President's peace policies. Delegates expressed strong opposition to preventive war philosophies, urged the United States to continue participation in the UN, disapproved universal military training, called for a ban on atomic weapons and for a radical reduction of armaments, urged greater study of the problems of the country's aged and deplored political expediency that promoted "racial exclusiveness."

The annual meeting concluded with a call to the denomination's 30,000 churches "to foster a moral awakening throughout our nation." More than 11,000 messengers were registered at the close of the sessions in Miami.

CO's Entitled to FBI Investigation

Conscientious objectors whose religious sincerity is challenged by their draft board are entitled to a full FBI field investigation to determine the facts about their religious affiliations. Government lawyers have agreed, in the light of recent Supreme Court opinions, that a conscientious objector does not receive the benefit of due process of law unless an FBI investigation is made and the results furnished to his draft board.

Plan Revision of Jewish Bible Translation

The Jewish Publication Society of America has undertaken a revision of its translation of the Holy Scriptures. The present translation, completed in 1917, is the approved version for English-speaking Jews throughout the world. Dr. Harry M. Orlinsky of New York, professor of the Bible at Hebrew Union College-Jewish Institute of Religion, has been named editor-in-chief of the new translation. He was the only Jewish scholar invited to work on the preparation of the Revised Standard Version of the Bible.

Urges Bigger Christian Role in Development Programs

Christians have a leading part to play in the economic and social development of countries in Asia, Africa and Latin America, the annual meeting of the U.S. Conference for the World Council of Churches was told.

According to Dr. Richard M. Fagley. executive secretary of the Commission of the Churches on International Affairs, the problems of underdeveloped countries present "a call to Christian ministry that we dare not ignore."

Niemoeller Resigns as EKID Foreign Secretary

Martin Niemoeller has submitted his resignation as foreign secretary of the Evangelical church in Germany, a post he has held since the end of World War II. In a letter to Bishop Otto Dibelius, the head of the church, Niemoeller said that he was taking the step because of criticism of his work at the recent meeting of the General Synod of the United Evangelical Lutheran church in Germany.

Pastor Niemoller has often been criticized by various groups and individuals both inside and outside the church for his outspoken stand on political issues. He has strongly opposed the Paris agreements, rearmament of West Germany and its integration into NATO.

Glenn Cunningham, former Olympic track star: "More and more I find young people determined to count for something, to leave an impress on their times, to live a full and helpful life. Alcohol-free standards will help them progress!"

Dr. Elton Trueblood, chief of the U. S. Religious Information Service: "We are living in one of the great times of the Christian faith. The most revolutionary trend has been the immense growth of the sense of religious responsibility among lay Christians. Indeed, the development is so great today it represents a new reformation."

Dr. John A. Mackay, president of Princeton Theological Seminary: "Monologue is insufficient in human affairs. If discussion is to be fruitful, a quarrel settled, men must not merely talk at one another or about one another; they must talk to one another. They must meet face to face. This is a situation now existing between the free world and Communist China. The restoration of world order demands the rediscovery of forgiveness."

Dr. David G. Moses, principal of Hislop College, Nagpur, India: "One aspect of the missionary policy in India in the immediate future will be to shift from denominational missions to an ecumenical mission. The day of denominational missions, in my opinion, has come to an end; it has served its purpose. It preached the gospel with a concentrated fervor; it kept an intimate and personal relation between the Christian church founded in the so-called mission field and the mother church in the countries of the missionaries. But it gave, unintentionally not only the pure gospel of Jesus Christ but the Western structural organizational forms as well. Missionary policy in the future will be oriented towards the building up of the existing churches, towards the intensification of their life witness and sense of mission. In other words, missions will have to be in the future not missions to the non-Christian but to the Christian churches."

Eugene Carson Blake, President of the National Council of Churches: "The great revolution of this century is still the American Revolution and tyranny always fears it. Its chief idea is that man must rule himself but under God. The only hope of our day is that this revolutionary idea shall be carried on as a gospel—a practical gospel—to the whole world which is waiting for it so that the world will not be swallowed up in the Communist revolution which is not so much a revolution as a new false face on an ancient tyranny."

Billy Graham: "The problem of the world today is human nature, and something must be done to control it or we're going to blow ourselves to bits. If we can turn back to God, there is an answer, a way out, a hope for survival of the human race. But if we don't all is lost."

From Fantasy to Reality

Donald Murray

VISIONS of funny, bearded little men running around in buttonless jackets — thoughts of Europe to be revisited under State Department sponsorship, and in between two and a half years of the hardest, but happiest and certainly the fullest days of a lifetime. This is Brethren Service.

The funny little men in beards never did materialize as visioned. From the first day of training down in quiet New Windsor, Md., it was obvious that these richly imaginative preconceptions were due for great disappointment as the Brethren turned out to be just as clean shaven and buttoned-up as any Presbyterian.

No one bothered with distinctions between denominations. We were a group of individuals that became a unit through the common ground of personal abhorrence of killing, with the single purpose of trying to replace the law of violence with the law of love.

One can hardly envy the job of joining young people who have taken a stand so individualistic and rebellious to existing pattern as conscientious objection into a working team but, as is his amazing habit, the Lord had found the brains, energies and imaginations willing to be used to put together a quietly astonishing training period that sent thirty people out into the world with an eager confidence in the power of God and an unbreakable tie to one another.

Eight of us were chosen to serve in Europe.

Missing limbs, wooden ones — all the patchwork bodies moving through endless ruins, the empty shells of houses — row upon row of them. Who knows what war is? It's more than just the killing, the dying, the blood; more than the war years. The duration is endless. It pounds from day to day through street by street, in all the building cavities — empty places around the table — motherless children and childless mothers. How many deaths can a man carry in his heart? Count them in his eyes and then multiply them by all the other eyes one meets. Millions of dollars, our finest minds protect a baby for its assault on life. A fantastic investment of love, time, patience and pain until it's full, rich, ripe — then let it be squashed out in hateful war. Where are our minds — where is our money on that one? How can we go that step further that will protect our investment, our love from war? Brethren Service is looking for the answers and finding some.

When destructive guilt gives over to a feeling of constructive personal responsibility we begin to go forward in these answers.

All eight volunteers went to work on the construction of Kassel House — office building, Christian retreat, center of Brethren activities in Germany. As the nine-hour day ended, our searching along the way of love opposed to the way of violence was only beginning. We lived individually in German families and the words father, mother, brother, sister had the kind of meaning that Jesus indicated as he swept the crowd saying, "He who does the will of God. . . ." We learned of the marvelous security and strength in German family life. They began to understand that the democracy which makes America strong is not just a political system, but an attitude, a faith, a respect for fellow human beings that becomes a way of life.

It wasn't always easy to become part of the family of people that have been taught to hate you. Some of us walked into waiting love while others had to overcome strange kinds of prejudice. But with the help of the spirit of God and the support of the fellowship we spread from there to after-hours projects with German children such as sports clubs and helping a poor man to rebuild his house.

As good as the fellowship was we were anxious to pull out and be tried on some project where we would be on our own. It seems to be the way of God to call men of every walk of life and it seems to be the way of the Brethren to place each man where his personality and character will be tested and used to its utmost.

The farmer went to Egypt to lead their farmers toward more productive methods and ended by being somewhat of an ambassador and country doctor. The architect overcame antagonism toward democratic processes in counseling and bringing to friendship young refugees from the East Zone. The boys' club leader became invaluable to a German pastor in a young people's home. The carpenter and the plumber finished the Kassel House and became very successful work-camp leaders. One sociologist student lived as a refugee in a camp in Austria and compiled a scientific study that became a foundation for the refugee relief program in Europe. The other worked as an attendant in a refugee old folks' home and was called by the director "The first active Christian I've seen in Europe." I, the actor, organized a boys' club in Naples, Italy, and arranged for exhibitions of the arts, crafts and performing talents of refugees there.

We feel so deeply what this service time has meant to us, new religious conviction, studying other cultures, steadying character and personality, that we wonder sometimes how deeply the people we help are affected. Perhaps this statement by a young refugee to a volunteer will express this. "There was only one Christian — Christ. And now there are a few more — you. You have no enemies, because, unlike the picture one gets of Americans as rich and proud, you are always simple— dress simply, talk simply, don't look down at anyone. You work only for the love of what you are doing. I admire you, but I don't envy you. You are naïve, ingenious, untouched by life. If you lived as a refugee you could never remain as you are. You would either change or die. People would take your money away first and then everything you own. I would not like to be like you, and yet I know that the world goes forward on just such people as you. No, I don't envy you — even though I know it's the people like you who hold the world together."

Now, after two weeks at home, I'm about to depart for Europe again in the State Department sponsored "Salute to France," an exhibition of American culture in theater, music and art. It is an outcry against war, cruel authority, etc., and I'm honored to be part of such a fine company, for such a fine purpose, but the happiest thing that has happened to me is Brethren Service, and that I finally became one of those "funny bearded little men running around in buttonless jackets."

Don Murray, former Broadway actor, has just recently returned to the U.S. after completing his two years of 1-W service in the Brethren Service program.

A sound filmstrip has been prepared so that Brethren may better understand what our conscientious objectors are doing. It describes the scriptural and legal bases for alternative service, how to secure a CO classification, where Brethren CO's are serving and the financial basis on which they serve. This filmstrip should be seen and discussed by youth and adult groups. Discussion guides and handout fliers come with filmstrip. 72 frames, narrator or 78 rpm record, 20 min., rental, $1.00 purchase price, $5.00. Order from: Audio Visual Education Department, 22 S. Peace Counseling in the Local Church

Raleigh B. Hughes
Palmyra, Pennsylvania

BELIEVING Christians should neither train for war nor participate in war and believing alternative service as approved by both church and government to be a better way for Christian witness than the military way, we are putting forth an earnest effort in the Palmyra Church of the Brethren to encourage our young men, when called for the draft, to choose the alternative service way of love, sharing and helping others.

Our peace committee is composed of three members selected by the church council and is responsible for carrying on peace education within the local church. We meet each quarter with either our pastor or the director of religious education to talk over ways and means of presenting a more effective peace program.

We would like to share with you some of our experiences in peace work and review a few of our 1954 meetings. In January a member of our committee spoke to our young people during the 6:45 service. He explained the purpose of a soldier and the type of training he receives. The duties of the noncombantant soldier were discussed and then after bringing to the young people's attention the Statement on Position and Practices of the Church of the Brethren in Relation to War, the alternative service program was fully explained. We invited a student from Elizabethtown College to give a peace message, Feb. 7, during the Christian Workers' service. On Feb. 21, five of our men gave short peace messages. Two of these men had served in the Civilian Public Service program. One young man was then a I-W at the Norristown state hospital and the other two fellows had served in the army, but, since their discharge, had become conscientious objectors to war. A tape recording was taken of these talks and may be obtained for use from the Palmyra church free of cost. Bro. Harold Sherk of the Mennonite Central Committee preached a fine sermon on nonresistance during our regular church service on Feb. 28 and also talked about his experiences while counseling CPS men during the second world war. In March we mailed a newsletter to the men in military service, alternative service and to all nonresident members, making a total of seventy-seven letters. There is now a regular church bulletin published each month.

Youth Retreat

In April the two fellows who had been in the army and a former CPS man spoke to the young people on the topic, Why I Am a Conscientious Objector to War. During the Easter vacation we held a youth retreat at our local church camp. From 2:00 p.m. until 3:30 p.m., the young people played softball. After the game, we saw the film, The Way to Peace. At 4:30 we had a work project of cleaning-up, carrying wood and other odd jobs. Following a period of prayer, we ate a box lunch. Some of our young people had to work during the day, but joined us at 6:00 p.m. and had charge of the fifteen-minute period entitled A Worship Service for Peace. This brief worship service can be obtained from the Brethren Service Commission, General Brotherhood Board, Elgin, Ill. The guest speaker was Sister Mildred Myer, who had recently returned from an Austrian work camp. Sister Myer gave a fine message on Brethren Volunteer Service and also showed slides of the work in Austria.

Questionnaire

The following questionnaire was mailed to all young men of high school age:

The members of the Peace Committee would like to assist the young men of draft age in our church. We have prepared a few questions for you to answer and return to the church office. Your co-operation and sincerity is needed.

(1) Would you be interested in a meeting of young men your age to discuss questions and problems concerning military and nonmilitary service?

(2) Are you familiar with the I-W program?

(3) When received, would you care for assistance in filling out your classification questionnaire?

(4) Do you realize the government does not compel religious objectors to accept military service but has provided alternative service?

(5) Would you care for information about the alternative service program?

(6) Are you in sympathy with the peace stand of the Church of the Brethren?

It was interesting to see the results of this questionnaire. All the fellows, except one, answered they would be interested in a meeting to discuss problems concerning military and nonmilitary service. We decided to meet once a month for this purpose. One young man told me he was on the fence before these meetings started, not sure whether he would enlist, wait to be drafted or take alternative service. One night after our discussion period, he said, "I am sure now what is right for me and have decided for alternative service."

A retreat to the church camp provides an excellent opportunity for young men and their church peace counsellors to think seriously together as well as to have rich work and fellowship experiences.

Our first meeting was held May 1954, at our church camp. After a game of softball, the fellows sat in a circle and we opened the service with a familiar hymn. One of the boys read a scripture and we came to a period of silent meditation and prayer. We always give the opportunity for as many of the young men as are willing to take part in prayer. "And this is the confidence that we have in him, that, if we ask any thing according to his will, he heareth us: and if we know that he hears us, whatsoever we ask, we know that we have the petitions that we desired of him" (1 John 5: 14-15). After singing another hymn, we were ready for our discussion period. A number of questions had been selected from the booklet, Must Christians Fight? A few examples would be:

(1) Why is Jesus Christ the supreme authority for the Christian's faith and hope?

(2) Is the Sermon on the Mount intended for Christians today?

(3) Did the apostles of Christ practice nonresistance?

(4) Is conscience a guide in regard to the question of participation in war?

(5) Is the conscientious objector who refuses to do military service or participate in war disobedient to the government and disloyal to his country?

It was brought out in the discussion that Christians are to be guided by the example of Christ and a Christian conscience that is in harmony with the Bible rather than by military signboards, military-minded schoolteachers, newspapers, friends or recruiting officers. After a closing prayer the meeting came to an end.

Space does not permit going into detail concerning following meetings. Several young men suggested we include a temperance discussion occasionally; so one evening we obtained the films, Liquid Lure and Skid Row from the WCTU and discussed the problems of alcohol. Other meetings which were helpful included:

(1) Selective Service System Forms 100 and 150 were distributed and the questions on Form 150 were discussed.

(2) A film on cigarettes, followed by a discussion on the harmful effects of tobacco.

(3) A talk by a young man in alternative service.

(4) A discussion on the leaflet, Personal Appearance Before Local Board.

This leaflet and other peace literature may be secured from the Brethren Service Commission, General Brotherhood Board, or the National Service Board of Religious Objectors, 1105 K Street, N.W., Washington 5, D. C. Both offices have been very helpful in supplying peace material and encouragement.

With God's help and guidance, we will continue to pray, love, counsel and encourage our young men to choose the alternative service way of peace. Ever mindful of the words of Scripture: "Let us therefore follow after the things which make for peace" (Rom. 14:19).

Positive Practices in Church Circles

ONE of the necessary keystones in congregational harmony is the ability of every member to look at the whole picture of the local church with a positive eye. This means that each member will:

1. Believe in the church as the body of Christ and in its message as the answer to every man's needs.

2. See the fellow members of the church as folks who, like himself, are attempting to live righteously.

3. See the program of the church as a good framework for the Christian expressions of a fellowship of different individuals.

4. See the organization and officers of the church as the realistic servants of Christian witnessing.

5. See his own responsibility to the church as one of total commitment and as a good steward of the life and opportunites and possessions that God has given him.

6. Pray for the church, its members, its officers, its program, its methods, its mission — rather than condemning or criticizing it.

7. Make sure that love, tolerance, patience, forgiveness and a willing generous spirit are the attributes of his Christian living as he claims fellowship with every other member of the church.

We are glad that positive attitudes make our church a harmonious church. Pray and work that this blessed condition may grow more Christlike.

A Church School Uses Elective Study Units

THE Home Builders class in the Covington church, Ohio, has used several helpful studies of material other than the Uniform Lessons. One quarter the discussions were based on the book, Opening the Doors for God, by Sweet. Since this is a class of young married people, it was a very practical course. The teacher of this class is Mrs. Warren G. Fisher. The response on the part of the class was good and the help received was quite valuable for young parents.

During the following quarter, the class studied the History and Doctrines of the Church of the Brethren. Since there are members with other than Brethren background, the mutual sharing was interesting and helpful.

A book that became the basis of an extended study from January to June of 1954 was A Faith to Live By, by Osburn. During this period, the class used some time to get a glimpse of the Uniform Lessons through use of scripture readings.

The youth department has also engaged in some extra studies. In the younger class, ages fifteen and sixteen, a study was made of the World Council of Churches under the direction of their teacher, James Boggs. They studied and discussed the six subthemes under the main theme of the Assembly held last August at Evanston — Christ, the Hope of the World. This helped to broaden the young people's conception of the world-wide church.

In the older group of youth, nine sessions were used on a course, Growing in Christian Personality. The blackboard was used to give the important facts. Assignments were made for recitation in the class period. This was taught by Robert Rudy. Some time was also devoted to study of the doctrinal booklet, The Way, the Truth and the Life. It was given to each member of the class. — M. G. Wilson, pastor.

The Church Abroad

A BIG DAY IN NIGERIA

"Sunday, April 3, was a historic day for the Church of the Brethren mission in Nigeria," writes Irven Stern. "We witnessed the ordination of the first native of Northern Nigeria into the ministry of the Church of the Brethren. Pastor Karbam was ordained at the close of the morning service. H. Stover Kulp preached the ordination sermon with John Grimley and James Bowman assisting in the laying on of hands"

Photos by Irven Stern

A large number of the more than four hundred members of the Lassa congregation filled the church for the ordination of Brother Karbam. Brother H. Stover Kulp, who preached the ordination sermon, was among the first missionaries to Lassa in 1927

The mission church comes of age when leaders like Brother and Sister Karbam are called to the full Christian ministry of the church. May these be but the first of many pastors who will make the gospel of Christ the religion of their people

"On the day following his ordination," continues Irven Stern, "Pastor Karbam tested thirteen people for baptism and baptized twelve, heard two public confessions before the church, gave premarital counseling to a couple and met for two hours with a group of thirty or forty chiefs and important men of the villages. What I have seen of the new pastor is very good and I am happy to be able to work with him in the future."

Intermountain Indian School at Brigham City, Utah

Alternative Service at Intermountain

Elmer Fike

IF YOU want to see the education of our Navajo Indian children in "mass production," you will enjoy very much a visit to Intermountain School. It is located at Brigham City, Utah, although the school and campus are very capable of being a small town in itself. The campus consists of 300 acres with approximately 140 buildings in all. This is made up of twenty-seven dormitories, home economics laboratories, various vocational shops, auditorium, boys' and girls' gymnasiums, indoor swimming pool, band room, dining halls, kitchen, bakery, laundry, hospital and employees' quarters. Many of the rest of the buildings are service buildings such as steam plant, maintenance shops, sewage disposal plant, warehouses, garages, etc. Altogether, about 3,000 persons live on the campus during the school months. There are nearly 2,400 students here during the school year and about 53% of these have designated Protestantism as their religious preference. This 53% is the group with which we I-W's and B.V.S.'ers work. It is this part of the program here at Intermountain with which we will deal.

There are four different schools here on campus. The age of the child at the time he starts to school and his grade level decide which school he will enter. Therefore, we hold religious instruction classes four days a week; one day in each school. These classes are an hour in length and come after the regular school hours until their supper time (four to five o'clock). Catholics also hold classes at this same time while the Mormons, with a much smaller number, hold class only once each week. These classes are held in the regular classrooms of the school, through the generosity of the superintendent of Intermountain. We could in no way at present handle 1,200 children if it were not for these facilities. We hold eleven classes in three of the schools and ten in the fourth. All of our approximately forty teachers are volunteers from communities as far away as fifty miles.

Now one may get the impression that our work is anything but crowded and hard since we have only four days a week on which to teach, so I will relate the rest of our activities which are many and very interesting.

Every Sunday morning from nine to ten o'clock we hold two church services simultaneously; one is in the large auditorium and the other in the smaller chapel. Around 800 of the older students attend services in the auditorium and 400 of the younger students meet in the chapel. An interpreter is used with these students as many of them do not understand enough English for them to receive anything from the service otherwise. The associate directors usually take charge of these services, but in their absence, it becomes the duty of one of us to fill in. This can prove to be very nerve-wracking and petrifying. After these services, the volunteer workers all attend regular church services at the community church up town. Then on Sunday afternoon, from 2:30-4:30, we hold a recreation and counseling period in the chapel for all who wish to come.

On Sunday evening the junior and senior students are permitted to attend a worship and recreation period in the recreation hall of the only Protestant church in this town. Attendance there is from 190 to 230. The remainder of the students go to the auditorium for a program. These programs are varied. Once a month, a deputation team from a neighboring town gives a program. Other nights are taken up by showing a good motion picture or filmstrip. Since these Indian students like to sing, we try to arrange an occasional evening of just singing. I think that they would sing all night if they were permitted to do so. All of these activities take place on Sunday and, as you might guess, it is our busiest day.

The other days, until the time for classes, are taken up preparing lessons and teaching materials for the teachers who come for an instruction period about one-half hour before the classes start. In this type of work, there is also an enormous amount of office work which consists of keeping records, filing materials and corresponding with the many who contribute to our program. These individuals and organizations are located all over the United States and send us our office supplies, thousands of pencils, paper, glue, paste, clothing, songbooks, religious records and games; some even send money, which we use in our program to a good advantage. These people make it possible for us to give a huge Christmas party for the 1,200 students every year. For some of the students, it is the first of its kind and it makes their eyes shine and faces beam to receive even a tablet or a pair of socks. Each present is as attractively wrapped as it would be in our own homes for such an occasion; so we are plenty busy around this season.

Many more activities could be related but space will not permit. The Protestant religious program here is under the direction of the National Council of Churches, of which our church is a member. We want to express our appreciation to our church for making a program of this type possible. We feel that in this way we can make the greatest showing toward establishing a permanent peace.

I-W's at Lybrook Indian Mission

Dick Wagoner

AS A member of the Church of the Brethren and a Christian family, I find it rewarding to be a conscientious objector. With the principles of the church and Christ's teachings as my guide, I find Lybrook Indian mission an ideal place to serve the church and Christ, because Christ's love, obedience and patience are so much needed here in Navajoland.

When a young man is contemplating where he ought to spend his two years of service, he should say to himself first, "Am I a true C.O.? Will I stand up for everything that Christ taught and lived?" Second, "Where am I most needed?" Christ said, "Go ye and teach and preach to all nations." Some think this verse means to go abroad, to Africa, India, Austria, Germany and other countries where his work is much needed, but I believe the help is as much needed here in the States. The Navajo Indians have been a much neglected people.

The Navajos are the fastest growing Indian tribe in the country and have the fewest opportunities and advantages of any of the tribes. The Navajos have been pushed back for the last fifty years; so they are very reluctant to accept the white man. There are some missions on the reservation that have been going now for some time, but still comparatively few Navajos have accepted Christ as their leader.

Much of the work here at the mission in the past has been to modernize the buildings and grounds. When the mission was started in September 1953 by our church, after being unoccupied for two years when under the Pilgrim Holiness group, there was considerable work to be done so that people could live decently. There was only a small amount of plumbing when our church took over. So the I-W's have put in gas, water and electricity. It took one I-W eight months to fix the buildings that were here when the property was bought. Since then we have built an annex to a house-trailer which one of the I-W's and his wife live in and a four-stall garage with a second-story recreation hall, material aids room and living quarters for temporary I-W's. With not much carpentry experience, we found it rather difficult at times, but we think it will stand up against any strain or stress.

Along with our daily activities we have to go out to the hogans during the school months, to pick up the twelve to twenty children for school. This takes at least an hour. Then we take them home around 3:00 and that breaks into one's afternoon work schedule.

On Sunday at 1:00 p.m. we have to go out to pick up from fifty to eighty Navajos for church services. By the time church and a little recreation are over, it is 6:00 before we get back home. Often we have to take sick people to the Brethren in Christ mission hospital twenty-two miles from here.

This summer the I-W's will be working with boys' clubs and girls' clubs, Bible school and young adults. Since the Navajos are very timid, we often find it quite difficult to become well acquainted with them during the twenty-two months we are here.

Since we are sixty-five miles from any large town, we have to keep things such as the light plant, well and pump, and the vehicles running the best we can. We have a small farm now with one cow, one pig and twenty-five chickens.

I-W's putting in tile pipe at Lybrook Indian mission

At the end of the day or on Saturdays we can go hiking in the beautiful mesa country. There are Indian ruins, fossil beds and a number of other interesting sights near the mission.

Even though the work with the Indians progresses rather slowly, we find plenty to do at the mission. I'm sure any I-W would never regret the time he gave to Lybrook Indian mission.

The following I-W's have served here or are serving at the present: Jim Peterson, September 1953 to May 1954; Dick Wagoner, May 1954 to March 1956; Ed Owen, August 1954 to June 1956; John Becker, May 1955 to September 1955.

education in fields of special interest. Or they may work at various interesting assignments around the center, such as clerical work in the library or in offices, preparation of sterile bandages, assisting in laboratories, helping to move ill patients in their stretchers or wheel chairs to various parts of the center or doing landscaping work on the beautiful grounds of NIH. Thus the volunteer can develop new skills or add to his background of experience and understanding.

The Clinical Center is exceptionally well equipped for occupational and recreational therapy and for spiritual ministry. A spacious gymnasium, near-by golf courses and tennis courts, excellent library resources, television sets, and an occupational therapy workshop are available to all Clinical Center patients. The volunteers often take part in plays produced by the patients' theatrical group, and contribute articles for the patient newspaper. Occasional sightseeing trips to Washington, D. C., are arranged, and short vacations away from the center for a few days can be granted when the study program permits.

A pleasant chapel is maintained in the center for prayer, meditation and group services, under the guidance of staff chaplains representing the three major faiths. In addition, special arrangements are worked out for individuals or groups of volunteers to attend churches of their own selection in Washington, D. C., or in nearby Bethesda and Rockville.

She was baptized into the Maple Grove church at the age of ten. She was an active worker in the children's department and with the church music in the Scott City Baptist church. Survivors include her husband, her mother, one sister and two grandparents. Funeral services were conducted in the Scott City Baptist church by Rev. Lloyd E. Griffeth. Burial was in the Scott City cemetery.—John Ditmars, Norton, Kansas.

See, William Lester, II, son of Mr. and Mrs. William L. See, was born June 17, 1951, at Tribune, Kansas, and died April 4, 1955, at Scott City, Kansas. Survivors include his father, three grandparents and two great-grandparents.—John Ditmars, Norton, Kansas.

Steiger, Jacob H., son of John and Lydia Weaver Steiger, was born in Springfield Township, Pa., and died at his home near Passer, Pa., at the age of eighty-two years. He and his wife, the former Ida S. Hottel, observed their sixtieth wedding anniversary last Nov. 28. He was a member of the Springfield church and formerly served as a Sunday-school teacher. Besides his wife, he is survived by three daughters, four grandchildren and three great-grandchildren. Services were held in the Springfield church.—Minerva Strauss, Richlandtown, Pa.

Strawser, Martha J., was born April 18, 1877, and died Feb. 3, 1955. She was a member of the church for a number of years. Surviving are one daughter, four sons, three stepsons, twenty grandchildren, thirty-one great-grandchildren, five great-great-grandchildren, three sisters and one brother. Funeral services were held with her pastor, D. H. Markey of Bunkertown, in charge. Interment was in the Arbogast cemetery.—Mrs. Blaine Leonard, McAlisterville, Pa.

Church News

Northern Indiana

Plymouth—At council meeting we voted to sponsor a refugee family. Several ministers and members of our district met to discuss the proposals for UMT. Some ministers made a trip to Washington, D. C., and other persons wrote letters to express opposition to UMT or any other program of compulsory military training. We had a school of missions on India with two returned missionaries as guest speakers. The women's work group purchased new tables for the fellowship hall and had the walls and wood work painted and refinished in the aid room, kitchen and youth room. Our ladies were ushers at the rally at Goshen College in April. Our group contributed three medical kits as part of the district project. We also had a school of music which ended March 27, with Bro. Alvin Brightbill with us for the entire day. The evangelism and fellowship committee chose fifty-two members of our church to call in the homes of all the members. On April 3 seven persons were received into our church fellowship. On April 20 the fourth adult membership class was begun with Pastor Homer Kiracofe as teacher. Plans have been made for our vacation Bible school.—Mrs. Frank Markley, Plymouth, Ind.

North Winona—Owing to the increased interest and attendance, we find our building inadequate to care for our Sunday-school needs so an investigation is being made for an expansion program. During the months of January and February, the mission fields of India and the States were brought to us by guest speakers. One Sunday evening Miss Katharine Froh, a returned missionary to Haiti, showed pictures and told of the conditions and needs of the people there. Sister Nettie Weybright, who recently took a trip to the Holy Lands, was our guest speaker for both a morning and an evening service. She also showed pictures of the Piney Woods School in Mississippi, where she taught before her extended trip. Mr. and Mrs. Boyd Leedy, who at one time lived in our church community, showed pictures and told of their work with the Indians in New Mexico. A number of our women attended the spring rally at the Goshen City College in April. Our aid has been busy during the winter months sewing layettes, rolling bandages, making comforters for the India mission, mending relief clothing and doing other relief work. Our Easter program was entitled The Hour of Triumph and was presented on Easter evening. The Warsaw high school brought our evening message in song on the evening of April 3. On the evening of April 17, the West Eel River chorus gave a message in song entitled God's Only Son. Council convened April 22, with Elder Leonard Custer in charge. Following the council meeting, three persons were baptized. Communion services were held April 24, with Elder Custer officiating. Again this year we are a member of the 100% Messenger Club.—Mrs. Alma E. Hanawalt, Pierceton, Ind.

Pine Creek—Royce Hartsaugh, Robert Feitz and Sharon Walters attended the youth seminar in Washington, D. C. Brother and Sister Freeman attended the adult seminar and Brother and Sister Robert Clark visited congressmen in Washington in behalf of peace promotion. Many of our people have been writing congressmen, stating their views on permanent conscription. The men's work group named the church farm the Pine Creek farm. We are now welcoming our sixth group of D.P.'s into our church community. Our exchange student for this year is making her home with Mrs. Eldon Burke. A singspiration is held in cooperation with the other churches in the community the last Sunday in each month. Bro. T. E. George was speaker for our Easter services. As a result six persons were baptized into our fellowship. Brother and Sister Heckman, missionaries to Africa, were with us on April 22.—Mrs. Orville Buss, North Liberty, Ind.

Michigan

Sunfield—One Sunday morning in February the David sisters from Muskegon, Mich., showed pictures and told of their work in Austria. In the afternoon they met with the young people who had sponsored them. Bro. Maynard Gierman has been chosen as delegate to Annual Conference. A special offering was taken for our 100% Messenger fund. On April 1 the men's work sponsored Bible land pictures and lecture by Mrs. Mabel Smith. Our communion was held on April 3. Joint Good Friday services were held in our church. An Easter morning breakfast following sunrise service was held for our three local churches. Our young people presented the play, Blakes' Decision, and received an offering for missions. Nine persons from our church attended the convocation services at Manchester College. Manchester College day was observed April 24, with John Knelson, a senior at the college, bringing the message. We observed family night on April 29 with a supper and program; Peter von Jagow, a German exchange student, was guest speaker. Dr. Curtis Bowman showed his pictures of Africa on May 1. Recently the joint young people's groups of three local churches sponsored the film, Angel in Ebony.—Mrs. Virginia Snavely, Vermontville, Mich.

Northeastern Ohio

Alliance—Sister Goldie Swartz, returned missionary to India, gave an inspiring message concerning her work. Hazel Messer day was observed one Sunday with Miss Messer, who is making her home in our midst during her furlough from the Indian mission field, as guest speaker. Following the fellowship dinner, an informal period of questions and answers was held with Miss Messer. She also showed articles and handwork which were made by the Indian people. The young people gave the play, A Gift for the Christ Child, and the children gave a message in story and song. Recently we paid our last note. The women's work group sent grease and clothing for relief. The two adult classes sent seeds for Korea. At our business meeting on March 29, Bro. Arthur Hess was re-elected elder for an indefinite period. Bro. J. D. Zigler was chosen delegate to Conference. We held our love feast on the Thursday evening before Easter. Just prior to the service, we viewed a film on the Last Supper in the Upper Room. Recently the young people sponsored a turkey supper around the theme of India. Part of the proceeds were used to purchase an outdoor bulletin board. The young people also sponsored the Easter sunrise service, using the film, Resurrection Morning, and the play, The Breaking of the Bread. Between the Sunday-school period and church services the children gave a program. Miss Messer gave the morning message.—Jennie M. Messer, Alliance, Ohio.

Black River—We elected a committee for evangelism and now have planned programs. Meetings are held twice a month and at present one of our laymen is leading a study in fellowship evangelism. Several of our members have been making calls. Bro. George Sheets was guest speaker for our pre-Easter services. As a result of the meetings, nine persons were baptized. During the winter months, we had several fellowship night meetings. At one of these services, Arthur Crone of Ashland presented the film, Unto These Our Brethren. One Sunday evening our young people and junior high group presented a service in our church and also at the East Chippewa church. One of our boys who is in alternative service presented the film, These Also Serve, at a Sunday evening meeting. Plans are made for a daily vacation Bible school this summer and for a centennial service on July 17. We have group meetings on Sunday evening with study periods and group singing for the young people and boys and girls. The adults are studying the parables of Jesus and the junior high group is studying mission in South America. Bro. Harold Deeter is our pastor. —Naomi Harmon, Elyria, Ohio.

Zion Hill—Our new pastor, Bro. J. Lloyd Nedrow, began his work the last of March in our church. On March 20 Sister Goldie Swartz gave a talk on India at the morning service and in the evening she showed slides. Hazel Messer was with us for both the morning and evening services on April 17 and told of her work in India. Our pastor was chosen delegate to Annual Conference. We are planning a vacation Bible school. Our aid society is busy sewing for relief. On April 28 open house was held at the parsonage for our pastor.—Mrs. G. S. Strausbaugh, Columbiana, Ohio.

Southern Ohio

Constance—As a result of the meeting conducted by Bro. Allen Weldy of the Flat Creek mission, Creekville, Ky., several persons were received into our fellowship by baptism. On Feb. 9 Bro. Weldy showed pictures of the work at Flat Creek. Miss Goldie Swartz, returned missionary to India, gave a talk on the work in India. On March 20 a deputation team from Manchester College presented the morning worship service. Our home ministers, Bro. B. F. Click and Bro. Lawrence Rodamer, were in charge of the pre-Easter services, including communion on Thursday evening. At our sunrise service on Easter, the play, The Meaning of Easter, was presented by our young people. During the past ten months we have received eight new members into our church and one was rededicated. On pulpit exchange Sunday, Bro. John Garst of Dayton, Ohio, was with us. On April 24 a joint mother and daughter program was held at the Constance Christian church. We recently organized a junior choir which presented its first number on Easter.—Mrs. Edna Conley, Constance, Ky.

Troy—Twelve of our members were in regular attendance at the district school of Christian living, which was held in the Pleasant Hill church. One of the four area district preaching missions was held at our church for a week with Bro. T. Wayne Rieman, professor at Manchester College, as guest speaker. On Palm Sunday eleven were baptized. Holy Week services were conducted by our pastor, Murray L. Wagner. Attendance and offerings have been steadily increasing. Our Sunday-school is growing in all departments. Our pastor's son, Murray Wagner, II, was licensed to the ministry on May 1 by Bro. Raymond Peters, representing the district board. May Fellowship Day of the Troy Council of Church Women was held in our church on May 6. Bro. Raymond Peters was guest speaker for the Troy Council of Churches' annual meeting and dinner, which was held in our church on May 10. Mary Gnodle and Pastor Wagner are delegates to Annual Conference.—Mrs. Mohler Filburn, Troy, Ohio.

Eastern Pennsylvania

Florin—At our January council meeting, it was decided to set aside one Sunday's offering to be given to our ministers as an appreciation gift for their service. Bro. Lineaus Longnecker and Bro. James Eshleman and their wives were installed as deacons. Bro. Ross Eshleman was licensed to the ministry. Our Bible institute was conducted by Bro. Elmer Hoover of Elizabethtown College. A musical program was given one Sunday evening by the a cappella choir. On March 27 Bro. Charles Weaver gave the facts about the effects of alcohol in our own community. On Palm Sunday the men's, the mixed and the junior choruses of our church gave a seasonal program of music. Bro. Jesse Hoffman of Collegeville, Pa., conducted our pre-Easter services with one received into the church. The men's work of our church sponsored Bro. Frank Carper of Palmyra with his pictures of the Holy Land. The men are repairing the bridge at Camp Swatara. The men are also planting a Lord's Acre project with the proceeds to be used for the support of the congregation's three missionaries. They are also erecting two church road signs. The women's work group sewed one day at a hospital in Lancaster. Other projects and activities of the women are rolling bandages, making layettes and shirts for relief. The CBYF group is raising a heifer for Europe. The young people also collected toys for relief and spent one day packing clothes at the New Windsor center. The film, Bible on the Table, was sponsored by the young people's group. In co-operation with four other churches, they are presenting programs at four mission points. The CBYF will be motoring along to New York with Benate Playoder, a German student, who will soon be sailing for her home country.—Mrs. Elmer S. Randler, Manheim, Pa.

Lititz—Eighteen were received by baptism, two by rebaptism and five by letter into our church fellowship. Installation services were held for the new pastor, the undersigned, on April 3, by Bro. Nevin H. Zuck, pastor of the Elizabethtown church and secretary of the district ministerial board, assisted by Bro. F. S. Carper, pastor of the Palmyra church. Bro. G. Wayne Glick, professor of Bible at Franklin and Marshall College, served as interim pastor from Feb. 1 to March 30. —E. Floyd McDowell, Lititz, Pa.

West Conestoga—We closed a succesful revival meeting at Middle Creek with Bro. Hartman Rice as evangelist. As a result thirteen young people were baptized. One Sunday morning a deputation team from Elizabethtown College had charge of our services. The women of our church sewed at the St. Joseph and Ephrata Community hospitals. Reuben E. Myer and Paul Harnly will represent our church at Annual Conference. Rachel Bollinger was elected superintendent of our daily vacation Bible school. Some of our men attended the spring rally at the Hatfield church. Our men's work is farming an acre of land. An Easter program was presented by the young people of the church.—Emma L. Zook, Lititz, Pa.

for you, MISS

by CAROL FERNTHEIL

Written for young people by young people. This book gives the hows and whys of dating, family and school relationships, careers, and Christian living in a style you'll enjoy reading. The novel approach of the text gives you the opportunity to decide each question for yourself. Each chapter (and there are thirty) considers the problem objectively, offers solutions, then it is up to you to choose the right answer. Illustrations with clever line drawings in four bright colors add to the interesting format. Every girl will want this book for her library shelf. Parents of a teen-age girl would do well to consider this title as a gift for daughter.

Back Creek, Upton—Our vacation Bible school attendance increased over that of previous years. The sessions were in the evening and bus transportation was provided. Bro. Phares Forney was speaker for the homebuilders' conference. The women's work group gave underclothing for the children at the home and distributed dustpans of fruit to the aged and shut-ins at Christmas time. One Sunday evening the children from the three Sunday schools of our congregation presented a program of singing. Our revival in April was conducted by Donald E. Miller of East Berlin, closing with the Shining Light program.—Mrs. Roy B. Hawbaker, Mercersburg, Pa.

Eastern Maryland

Baltimore, Woodberry—Our spring council, with Elder Jacob Replogle presiding, was held on April 17. The spring communion was observed on April 24, with Pastor Albert C. Schue officiating. Our adults concerned with men and women's work meet every last Tuesday evening of the month for a covered dish supper, followed by separate business meetings. Recently a film was featured for the entire group as part of the evening program. These groups have done much to beautify the church, especially the basement and the worship room. A junior church is being conducted as a part of the morning worship. Recently our women presented an afternoon program at the Fahrney-Keedy Memorial Home. A large donation of canned goods was sent to the home at that time. During the Easter season while our pastor was conducting a preaching mission at the Easton church, our choirs presented an entire morning of music for the worship hour. Plans are being made for the annual vacation school. The pastor will represent our church at Annual Conference. Delegates were also chosen to represent our church at the coming district meeting. Our men were represented at the men's dinner at the Dundalk church on May 14.—Albert C. Schue, Baltimore, Md.

First Virginia

Richmond—Our church sponsored midweek Lenten services with our ministers speaking on the happenings during Holy Week. The offering from these meetings was given to One Great Hour of Sharing. The Clericus chorus from Bridgewater College presented a concert in our church. Bro. Raymon Eller has accepted a call to become pastor of our church in the fall. Our children's group had special music in the worship service on Palm Sunday. The Friendship Circle has sent art supplies to Arthur's Knob school near Roanoke. This school is being taught by B.V.S. workers. We have been sending out weekly bulletins. Our giving is showing a sizable increase. Several of our members attended the leadership training conference at Hopewell.—Mrs. Raymond Moore, Jr., Richmond, Va.

Northern Virginia

Damascus—Our council meeting was held with Bro. J. Galen Wampler presiding. Plans are being made for vacation Bible school, using local leadership under the direction of Bro. Lowell Ritchie. As yet, we have no pastor to fill the vacancy left by the death of our minister and elder, J. W. Lantz, who had served the church and community for many years. Our two local ministers, Bro. B. E. Lantz and Bro. Lowell Ritchie, are in charge of the preaching appointments on the second and fourth Sundays of each month and ministers from neighboring churches are invited to preach on each fifth Sunday. Bro. Lowell Ritchie of Criders, Va., who is a senior at Bridgewater College, has accepted the call to be our summer pastor. Some of the projects of the women's work organization include making baskets for the sick, making comforters and garments for families whose homes burned, making and collecting clothing for relief. Plans are under way for the improvement of the church and the church grounds. We joined with the other churches of the community in observance of World Day of Prayer. —Melda M. Dove, Criders, Va.

Second Virginia

Blue Ridge Chapel—The Blue Ridge Chapel church has just become a separate congregation. We had received pastoral help from the Waynesboro church from 1938 until 1953. We then secured Pastor Byron J. Berkey, who now serves our church as well as the Forest Chapel church. We are building a new church, as our membership is increasing. We hope to have the building finished by September, when we are having a revival meeting. The above project has been helped by the Brotherhood and district board. Their co-operation is very much appreciated by our entire congregation.—Eleanor E. Kiracofe, Waynesboro, Va.

HEROES OF GOD (series)

This growing list is excellent. Three new titles in the series are listed below.

JOHN THE BAPTIST—(Prophet of Christ)

Slater Brown

This is the story of John the Baptist, Prophet of Christ, of the valiant little band of men who stood with him, and of a boy who finds faith and strength fighting to save the great prophet's life. Throughout the book runs the delicate fiber of a tender love. 128 pages. $2.00

WILLIAM TYNDALE—(Martyr for the Bible)

Cateau De Leeuw

This is the chronicle of the 14-year struggle of a man who would not be silenced. Set against the backdrop of history, the tale moves with breath-taking speed to its climax of treachery. You will appreciate the Bible more fully after reading how William Tyndale made the translation of the Bible into English. His goal—the word of God in every home. 128 pages. $2.00

JOSEPH—(Slave and Prince)

Laura Long

This is the always new story of a boy, rejected by his family, who rises to great power, and with the fate of those who wronged him in his hands, returns good for evil. The author does an excellent portrayal of life in an Egyptian palace as it was lived three thousand years ago. Royal intrigue and the pomp and ceremony of an ancient court will live again in the mind of the reader. 128 pages. $2.00

Previous titles in this series

JEREMIAH — (Prophet of Disaster) $2.00
PAUL — (The World's First Missionary) $2.00

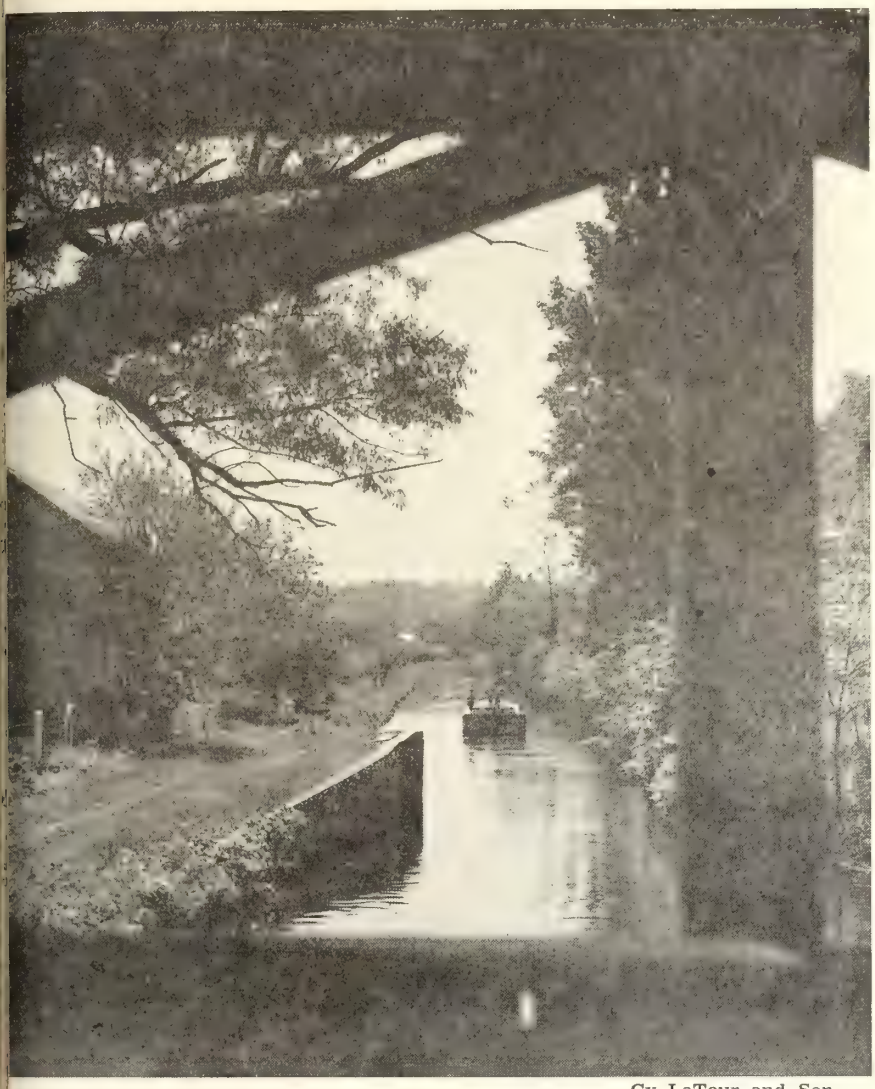
CLAPPER'S Builders and Suppliers MEYERSDALE, Pa.

Mt. Vernon—Our Sunday evening services for the month of January were a school of missions. In March we had a study on peace education and in May one on Christian family living. Mr. and Mrs. Earl Houff attended the adult seminar in Washington and New York. Our church choir gave a cantata on the passion of Christ on Easter morning. The women from six denominations in our community also participated in this program. Eight persons from our church received credit in the leadership training school held during February and March at the Staunton church. The men's group of our church shipped two heifers to West Germany on April 12. James Renz spoke at our church in February. The women's group sent bedding and clothing for relief and sponsored our family banquet on May 6. Our CBYF group of twenty-four members is organized on the Youth Action Plan. We are sending our pastor, Bro. Ervin F. Block, as delegate to Annual Conference. —Mrs. John Kindig, Waynesboro, Va.

Southern Virginia

Bassett—Our church had the opportunity of ministering to shut-ins, friends and the general public by broadcasting the regular morning worship each Sunday morning during the month of March. One week during the month of May, the pastor conducted a fifteen-minute worship program over the local radio station. Our church co-operated with four other churches of the community in an united church census. The pre-Easter revival was held by A. R. Showalter of Bridgewater, Va. As a result of this meeting, two were baptized and one received by letter into the church. Our spring love feast and communion was held April 16 with the pastor in charge. Our church was host to the district youth spring banquet with W. C. Sweitzer of Ridgeway, Va., as guest speaker. Seventeen of the junior high youth attended the rally at the Christiansburg church in March with Paul Weaver of Elgin as speaker. Fourteen from our youth group were in attendance for the annual regional roundtable at Bridgewater College. A number of our men and women attended the district men's and women's rally at the Stonewall church. Our church observed national family week with the showing of the film, As the Twig Is Bent, a family night fellowship supper, dedication of babies and a sermon on the Christian home. Plans have been made and teachers have been secured for the vacation church school this summer. The church is also urging the children and young people to take advantage of a week at Camp Bethel this summer. — Miss Charlotte Craun, Bassett, Va.

Smith River, Fairview and Goodwill—Thanksgiving services were held at the Fairview church and the Christmas story was told in scripture and song at the Goodwill church. The women sent fruit baskets to the shut-ins. During the months of January and February the theme for the women's study group was missions. Several men from our congregation attended the men's banquet at Bassett. Four from our church were in attendance at the teachers' training school at Coulson. A number of our young people along with our pastor and his wife attended the district youth banquet. Our pastor, Bro. S. H. Flora, held pre-Easter services. Bro. Buren Elgin officiated at our love feast on April 9. A group from our church attended the district men's and women's meeting at the Stonewall church. Our Bible school will be held in June at Goodwill. Bro. Eugene Lenker will conduct our revival at the Fairview church June 24—July 3. Charlotte Craun and Bill Smith were at Goodwill on April 17 in behalf of Camp Bethel.—Mrs. Claude Pendleton, Stuart, Va.



Gift from the Sea

ANNE MORROW LINDBERGH

Here is one answer to the conflicts in our lives. The setting of the book is the sea shore; the time, a brief vacation which has lifted the author from the every day existence into the sphere of meditation. In a blend of complete sincerity and delicacy, so uniquely her own, Anne Morrow Lindbergh shares with the reader her awareness of the many frustrating elements we face today. With radiant lucidity she makes visible again the value of inner life, without which there is no true fulfillment. The thoughts in this book are wound about the sea, a beach, an island and a seeker-herself. Of special interest to women. 128 pages $2.75

A Place for Quiet Growing

IF YOU could turn the clock back one hundred years you might feel perfectly at home in this summer scene. Two mules on the shore path pull a small canal boat along the quiet waters you glimpse through the beams of a wooden bridge. In its time, the Pennsylvania or Maryland canal was a busy waterway, running parallel to the rocky Potomac or the blue Juniata and heading for the mountains that no streams could cross. Now there are super highways and airways to handle the cross-country traffic. Travel has lost its leisure. The passenger sees so much more, but seems unable to comprehend it because he can give it only a glance. Fortunately there are still places where time moves more slowly, where one remembers that "each worthy cause with a future glorious by quiet growing becomes victorious." This summer may provide excellent opportunities to seek such spots where one can "be still" and discover that God is at work.

READERS WRITE . . . to the editor

The Gospel Messenger welcomes letters commenting on editorials, articles and news. Letters should be brief and brotherly.

Goes Deeper Than Labels

There have been many remarks lately in the Readers Write column about denominationalism. As many of these recent comments have pointed out, our many denominations of today have much in which they are alike and on paper it looks as if our fundamental beliefs are the same and that it is only the little unimportant things that maintain denominational barriers. Should we then, in a glorious burst of Christian brotherhood, topple these barriers which have caused such dissension?

I've no final answer to this question, and the obvious answer I have pondered deeply. We are a Brethren family in a non-Brethren community, and during the past few years we have worshiped with those of many different faiths. I think with deep affection of the Mennonite family with whom we have shared many hours of fellowship and worship. The regular communion services of the Christian fellowship have broadened my conception of that holy ceremony. We rejoice with the Baptists that salvation comes by grace. The scholarly sermons of a white-haired Methodist minister have given me new insight into Bible truths. Truly, the love of Christ and fellowship with the Father, Son and Holy Ghost are to be found in all of these places and with all of these people.

Last Sunday we drove twenty-five miles over rough, dusty roads to reach a little country church recently reopened after years of closed doors. The group was small, the building dilapidated, the minister very young and inexperienced. But that wonderful, unmistakable, yet indefinable sense of fellowship was there. These were Brethren, and we are Brethren, and Christ was there in our midst.

Yes, shatter these denominational barriers if you can and if you must. But Brethrenism goes deeper than labels and tags. It is a way of life woven of Christ and his teachings, and I pray that my family will always be a part of this way.—Mrs. Leslie Rogers, Codell, Kansas.

Need for Prohibition

Referring to Readers Write of April 2, "I Quit the Liquor Business," and of June 4, "The Better Way," prohibition has proved the better way, and again will be if put in force. If ever there was need for prohibition prayers and votes it is now.—Mart Sheaffer, Adel, Iowa.

More Than Lip Service

May I congratulate you, Roma Jo Mickey? Thank you so much for "An Appeal to Women and Girls" of May 28, 1955. You are not only saying you believe in Jesus Christ and his way of life but you are working at it. You are promoting his cause and trying to help others to do a better job of it. You are a woman and as yet not subject to the draft. You are only nineteen and could so well, as so many girls of your age do, say, "It does not matter; I will eat, drink and have a good time." You know that if our lip service to God is to really mean something, it is important to serve him at nineteen and not wait until forty-nine or sixty-nine or some future date. Your article is so well put. Each of us must decide if we prefer to serve God for a permanent return or if we prefer to serve men for what appears to be a little glory now. I do hope our women and girls read your letter and are guided by the facts set forth. Also, I hope our men read it and let it sink into our minds and souls. How long will our Brethren men continue to serve men and kill their brothers and sisters of all ages? If your article and the example of your living will keep just one of us from military service and help us to serve God for peace, you will have lived well. — Carroll S. Rinehart, Westminster, Md.

Stand for Temperance

We are always glad to receive the Messenger and note the many good articles especially those in Readers Write, finding so many standing for a full gospel, although some cause heart aches by trying to explain away the plain gospel truths.

I must take issue with Carroll S. Rinehart (Readers Write, Jan. 30) as we had no part in the murder of Bobby Greenlease (Rom. 14:22). We are ardent workers for temperance, do not grow or use any of the things mentioned, will not trade at a store that sells beer or liquor, have at our own expense put a sign on highway 97 promoting probibition, will not have any paper or magazine that advertises liquor or beer come in our home, are members of the Washington Temperance Union. Why condemn ourselves in things we cannot help? I also want to compliment Martha H. Keller and Orpha Nusbaum on their letters in Readers Write for June 4.—Harvey E. Miller, East Wenatchee, Wash.

A Call to Vital Religion

Harold A. Bosley

AS WE follow Jesus today, we will discover that religion is a vital, spontaneous, creative thing. He was continually confronted by religious people like us, people whose religion was no longer pliable and plastic, but had settled down to certain forms from which they no longer varied and which they no longer questioned. You recall the incident when someone criticized him because he let his disciples gather grain for food on the Sabbath day? Such action was clearly against the law of the Sabbath which obtained in that time. Jesus answered that the Sabbath was made for man, not man for the Sabbath. To him, man and his needs are the important elements in the situation.

To Jesus, religion must be spontaneous enough to relate God to the seemingly insignificant, but actually poetic and beautiful elements in life. He seemed to find and feel the presence of God throughout the whole range of creation. Hence he spoke of God's care for the sparrows, consideration for the flowers of the field, offering a cup of cold water, seeing in little children fitting examples of the proper approach to God. Only one thoroughly alive to the beauty and the meaning of commonplace things could see in these the evidence of great religion. But he did and he expects those of us who follow him to do just that.

Jesus was not an enemy of form, custom and convention except when these became the last word in the expression of religious faith. Then he was dead set against them and never diluted his criticism of them. His faithfulness to the synagogue, the temple, the holy days of his people is a well established fact, and we have no reason to think him hypocritical in his observance of them. He saw them all as means to the end of the service of God.

Luoma

Jesus saw evidences of great religion in commonplace things: the sparrows, the flowers of the field, a cup of cold water, the example of little children

This is the second part of a Conference address by the pastor of the First Methodist church, Evanston, Illinois

We find it easy to sin against this attitude of Jesus today—as easy as our fathers before us. We like to reduce obedience to him to rotelike terms. Charles Sheldon's little book, In His Steps was a classic example of how we are tempted to do it. Whenever we confront a problem whether personal or social, we diligently thumb the pages of the gospel hoping to find some one utterance of Jesus that will apply. We keep asking, "What would Jesus do?" and vainly strive to answer it from the records. Religion loses its spontaneity when it is used this way and it becomes barren and wooden in the effort to use the Gospels as infallible guidance to action. When we do this, we are handling our rich religious tradition in the same wooden way that brought the Pharisees under the light of Jesus' disapproval of them.

We ought never to overlook or neglect the fact that Jesus wanted his followers to grow and keep right on growing. He seems to have had unlimited confidence in the continuing power of God in their life and fellowship. According to the Gospel of John, his confidence once reached the point of saying, "Greater things than these shall ye do." This obviously is the outlook of one who is interested in growth and who welcomes the changes that it will bring.

A second emphasis which comes to the twentieth century from the mind of our Lord is his belief in and loyalty to God as the Lord of his life. If he experienced normal doubts about the meaning of God, he had worked them all through to an affirmative conclusion long before he began his preaching ministry. For from the moment he steps on the stage of public life, every utterance radiates faith in the reality of God and in the kingdom of God as the ultimate goal of the human quest. Hence his proclamation, "The kingdom of God is at hand —prepare ye for it." Hence his invitation, "If any man would come after me, let him deny himself and take up his cross and follow me." He had a job to do and he wanted helpers in it.

Yet this kingdom of God of which Jesus spoke was not a delicate dream that men could experience by closing their eyes. The God in whom Jesus placed his confidence was interested in a kingdom which would be characterized by the absence of bitterness, pressure, hatred, jealousy and selfishness, and the presence of gentleness, love, understanding and co-operation. Jesus never questioned God's interest in this kingdom. Quite to the contrary, he ascertained that God stood for it with every once of his will and being and buoyed up all who strove to make it real.

Jesus was confident that when the muscles of one who worked for the Kingdom wearied in their work, strength not human but divine would pour into them in some mysterious way. Jesus had found it so. That is why he could say, "My Father worketh, and I work." One who follows Jesus today will both believe in and try to find the meaning of the will of God for human life and will devote himself wholeheartedly to the appeasement of it as long as he lives.

A third emphasis that will command the loyalty of one who tries to follow Jesus today is the realization that vital religion must concern itself with the needs of men, social as well as personal. There can be no question but that this emphasis got him into serious trouble with the custodians of religion in his time. Many of them seemed to have been interested in the minute observance of the law and temple rituals above all else.

Bill Smith

The church cannot or must not ignore or treat indulgently the things that make for difficulty in marriage, the home and the family

They seemed to have had precious little concern about the ordinary needs of ordinary human beings. Jesus handled them with firm hands, "Woe to you, scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites! for you tithe mint and dill and cummin, and have neglected the weightier matters of the law, justice and mercy and faith; these you ought to have done, without neglecting the others. You blind guides, straining out a gnat and swallowing a camel!"

That's plain enough and it places the emphasis where prophetic religion has tried to keep it from that day to this: on the ethical concerns of religious faith. We have had a hard time as a church keeping the emphasis there, but we cannot follow Jesus today or any other day without discovering that he leads us into the very depths of human need. And as we follow him, we hear the ancient admonition, "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me."

We are but summing up this emphasis when we say that a Christianity that leaves uncriticized and untouched the personal and social evils of our time is a direct negation of this emphasis on vital ethical religion. The church cannot and will not ignore or take an indulgent attitude toward evils based on the habits of using alcohol, narcotics and other drugs that weaken and finally destroy a wholesome personality. Vital religion will never ignore or treat indulgently the things that make for difficulty in marriage, the home and the family. Vital ethical religion will never stand idly by and let prejudices and bigotry tear our society apart. Vital ethical religion will be concerned about the rights of every human being and every group of human beings in our society. One who follows Jesus today will find himself heavily involved with every major problem that now taxes the energy of men.

Asia and Africa Come of Age

THE important Asia-Africa Conference, held several weeks ago in Bandung, Indonesia, received less attention than it deserved in American newspapers. In contrast to many predictions the conference did not become a sounding board for Communist propaganda against the United States. On the contrary, a number of delegates made it clear that they were just as resolutely opposed to Communist imperialism as to Western colonialism.

The conference experienced a remarkable unity in spite of notable differences. In itself the meeting was symbolic of the coming of age of two continents. The delegates who had assembled were speaking on behalf of more than 1,300,000,000 persons, most of whom have known poverty and subjection and many of whom still carry the scars of slavery and oppression. Although there were marked evidences of nationalism, the delegates showed remarkable maturity in recognizing their need to take responsible leadership among the nations of the world. And their many references to religion prompted Chou En-lai, the atheist premier of Red China, to insist that his country provides for freedom of religious belief.

The proceedings of the Bandung conference should be required reading for Christian missionaries, board members and all who are concerned to proclaim Jesus Christ as the hope of the world. Christian missionaries from Western nations have been handicapped by their identification with imperialism, even though they may have had little to do with it. Yet at the same time the influence of the Christian church has made its mark on the leadership of some of the nations represented at Bandung.

If the policies of Western nations like our own would demonstrate a more definitely Christian spirit of understanding and sharing, the influence of Christian leadership among the "have-not" nations would be greatly strengthened. This means that we need to stop wielding such big sticks and bragging that our policies are determined by our being more powerful than others. We need to talk less and listen more to the voices that speak for the little people around the world. When the offer to negotiate our differences comes so clearly as it did at Bandung, we need to be more ready to respond with a willingness to seek peace as earnestly as do those who know so well what another war will mean.

Seldom have we heard even in Christian churches such an appeal for forgiveness as was expressed at Bandung by General Carlos P. Romulo. Speaking of the common purpose of the Asian and African peoples he said, "If that purpose is stained by resentment or the desire for revenge, then this conference will turn out to be a fragile and forgetful thing. Let us therefore not seek to draw strength from hurt or heartbreak but from our common hopes . . . And if the test of that strength should be our ability to forgive, then let it be said that we were the giants of our time." —K.M.

Heifers Have No Denominational Loyalty

SIXTY-ONE Evangelical and Reformed heifers from Illinois sailed for Germany in May. They were accompanied by four Brethren heifers and a Mennonite bull. The cowboys for this ecumenical herd were four Evangelical and Reformed ministers.

Since the Heifer Project is an interdenominational movement we are not surprised that its publicity releases will occasionally use denominational tags to distinguish the animals being shipped. We frequently hear from Brethren visitors in Europe who meet up with Brethren cows on German farms. Of course the cow has long since lost her denominational loyalty. She has been busy giving milk and restoring hope to her European owner who may well be a Lutheran or a Roman Catholic.

One reason why the Heifer Project has been so successful a means of building goodwill and healing the scars of hatred is that "milk knows no politics." The only strings attached to the gift of a cow is the requirement that the recipient be just as willing to give away his first heifer as was the original giver. The heifer can cross boundaries or go beyond an iron curtain without being regarded as a subversive influence or—to mix our figures of speech—as a dangerous Trojan horse.

The heifer will soon lose her denominational tag also. Though she is labeled as Brethren or Reformed or Mennonite or Episcopal for convenience in recording gifts, she soon loses her label and becomes a tangible symbol of the Christian love that sent her on her way. If milk knows no politics, it is just as ignorant of ecclesiastical labels. Yet who will say that it cannot be the expression of a profoundly Christian testimony, of a witness for Christ that neither language nor creedal nor political barriers can halt?—K.M.

Africa is awakening and is striving to span in one generation several centuries of Western Industrial advancement and political and educational developments

"The Dawn Comes Up Like Thunder"

Norman J. Baugher

LAST February there appeared in the World Alliance Newsletter a cartoon which vividly described the situation among two thirds of the world's people living on two thirds of the earth's surface. It was a cartoon of the early dawn when the shadows cast by the rising sun are long and grotesque. On the far horizon stood a small-sized man labeled "Asia." Behind him is the sun; before him the great curved expanse of much of the earth's surface. The sun, just rising above the horizon to bring on a new day cast the little man's shadow, called "Nationalism," across most of the earth. The cartoon was captioned "Dawn Comes Up Like Thunder."

This is something of what one senses when he visits Nigeria, West Africa. The transfer within a few hours from mid-continent U.S.A. to mid-continent Africa implies in everyone's mind a tremendous change in cultures. The stunning observation, however, is not how much the time and cultural calendar turn backward in going from Illinois to Nigeria but rather with what terrific pace the calendar is flipping forward in Nigeria.

The Dawn

To visit Nigeria is to visit a people striving feverishly to be born into this century. They are spanning several centuries of Western industrial, political and educational developments within one generation! The greatest problem in visiting that land is to give proper interpretation to this forward movement and awakening which as dawn is "coming up like thunder" across the country and continent.

What is happening in Nigeria is part of the larger Asia-Africa revolution involving the majority of the earth's people and surface. Most observers sense at least four major thrusts to the revolution and all of these we encountered in varying degrees in the course of our visit. To discern and properly appreciate these thrusts are not only necessary for understanding trends in foreign missions but imperative for sensing what is the basic mission of the church in these areas! The major thrusts are these:

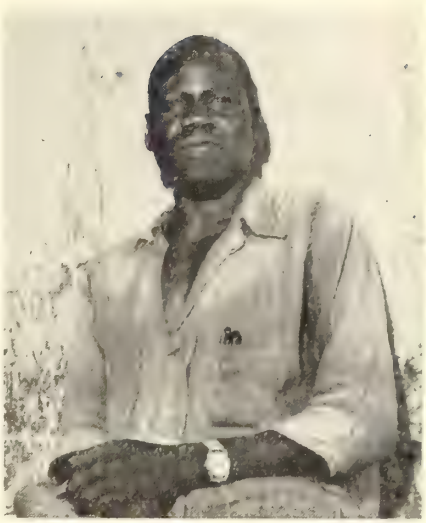
Nationalism. Nations once dominated by Western powers accept this domination no longer, whether it is political, economic or religious. It is essentially a struggle for national self-consciousness and national status. It is the opposite of colonialism. This is part of the meaning of Nigeria achieving her independence next year. It is manifest, also, in obvious efforts to define sharply the limitations within which a "foreign missionary" may pursue his calling. Many people of these areas of awakening are suspicious of those religious movements, such as Christianity, which seem to derive their influence and advantage from Western powers.

Color. Discrimination because of color is resisted and deeply resented by these peoples. They have awakened to the fact that two-thirds of the earth's peoples are colored.

Economics. Technological advances have demonstrated to them that an adequate standard of living for them is attainable. For example, in the area where we visited mission work the standard of living is estimated to have risen 200% in the last ten years due to the introduction of the improved peanut and improved methods of growing peanuts, rice and fruit.

Urge for Status. These peoples want that sense of dignity, recognition and worth which we take for granted for ourselves. A Pakistani, quoted in World Alliance Newsletter, summed up this urge for status by saying, "What we want is freedom from contempt."



These four factors of nationalism, color, economics and urge for status—their total impact sounding much like 1776—join in the awakening to make

"An altar heaped and waiting to take fire
With the least spark and leap into a blaze."

The Church is Established

It is in this setting of a major adjustment in the lives of the people that we must observe the role of the Christian religion in Nigeria. The most significant observation about the Christian movement there is that the Church of Christ is established! What has been wrought by the labor of missionaries is that the church has become a reality. This is the result of a great devotion and the achievement of a mighty Spirit!

Where the Church of the Brethren has sponsored the work is to be found the body of Christ with 11 organized congregations, a membership of 1,715 and literally hundreds of others in covenant classes, church school groups and worship. And this is only part of the total Church of Christ of the Sudan in which the Church of the Brethren in Nigeria finds fellowship and with whose council it is affiliated as a member body.

Nigerian teachers are being trained but not fast enough to meet the great demand of those who want their children educated

The over-all program of this maturing church includes emphases on Christian education, church extension, service, leadership recruitment and training, homemaking, evangelism and church building. These emphases are almost identical with those of the church in America. The allocation of funds to these interests is strikingly comparable to the way funds are allocated in the church at home. This is a proper use of funds for both the home church and the mission church because wherever the church endeavors to minister to total life it must have a balanced, integrated ministry to all people of all circumstances.

Future Directions

To say that the church is established in Nigeria and is busy in its task of witnessing to the gospel in many areas of life does not suggest that our task there is completed! It suggests rather that during these current years we are completing one epoch of church development and entering a new period in which the

This Nigerian young man has taken his covenant to follow the Christian way and, after a period of further study, is now being questioned to determine his readiness for baptism

Christian families, like this schoolteacher and his wife, are the hope of Nigeria and the Christian church in that country situation will be different from the former time. The new situation has two new elements: the reality of the Nigerian Church and the grand awakening!

One continuing task with the maturing church is for the mission enterprise to work deliberately and with increasing pace to make both the church and the mission Nigerian-centered and Nigerian-controlled. Even with its limited leadership, the church must be increasingly responsible for its own life, for the affairs of its local congregations, for the determining of policies which influence the life of its membership, for establishing liaison with the government and other religious bodies. The sponsoring mission will want to take the initiative in surrendering more and more of the controls and privileges. To develop leadership the Nigerian must feel a genuine partnership in the making of decisions and in their implementation. Nothing else will satisfy both the urge for status and current nationalistic feelings; nothing else will meet the requirement of sharing responsibility if strong men of God are to be developed; nothing else will develop a confident Christian community.

In the new era strong bonds of fraternity between the church here and the church there should continue. The basic oneness of the Christian community in the world must counteract some of the negative and divisive possibilities inherent in strong nationalism. This suggests that the next generation of fraternal relations between the church in America and the church in Nigeria will need to be grounded in creative demonstrations of our unity in Christ and our common brotherhood.

While much of the present mission program will continue about as it is, it is imperative in mission strategy to explore on an experimental basis new patterns of helpfulness, brotherhood and fraternity within which climate the gospel of our Lord has fresh opportunity to be manifest. Secularism, paternalism and exclusiveness must be counteracted in such experiments. In so far as possible—and let not the difficulty of doing this be underestimated—the negative features of master-servant, supervisor-laborer, privileged-underprivileged, white-black, missionary-national and home-foreign relationships should be avoided. No one is sure what these new patterns can be, but perhaps our Brethren experience in work camps, volunteer service, short-term workers rendering technical assistance, specialists in sociological and economic problems give us some clues. Perhaps these are significant new methods realized anew in this generation for serving the Christian community and establishing the church. Whatever the forms of the new pattern, they must unmistakably demonstrate our brotherhood across cultural, racial and language barriers.

The accomplishment of this will require great agility in the mission enterprise and creative alertness to the basic challenge the Asia-Africa awakening is presenting to the church. Traditional organizational, financial and administrative patterns must adapt themselves so as to allow for the greatest possible assistance to the young church and the young Christians in Nigeria.

All of Africa is tense! Nigeria has her share of tensions between religious groups, tribes, northerners and southerners! If Africa is to regard the church as relevant for her, the church in this new era of advance for the kingdom must establish New Testament koinonia, brotherhood! This is a concept close to the basic nature and function of the early church. This is the "reconception of the nature of the church" so forcibly presented by Willis LaMott in his book Revolutions in Missions. This is the important new challenge to the church throughout Asia and Africa and, in fact, around the world! It is this dimension of brotherhood without which Africa will know only civil and religious strife and racial conflict. In this sense, the church holds the key to Africa's peace and future. Only in this climate will it be possible for the church to bear witness most tellingly to the full gospel of Jesus Christ.

The Church in Nigeria joins the church here and the church of Jesus Christ everywhere in fulfilling the world mission of the church. She to her people, we to ours and the whole church to the whole world must insist that men, nations and continents seek Christ's kingdom first! Therefore, we pray:

"Enlarge thy plans and gifts, O thou elect,
And to thy kingdom come for such a time as this!"

The invitation to "follow Jesus today" is not an invitation to cease thinking and live some kind of lazy intellectual and spiritual life. It is no flight from reality as some fear; rather it is a serious challenge to summon every energy we now have and to find others we do not now possess, to gird up our capacity for the mightiest endeavor possible to achieve a well-balanced personal life ourselves and to work unceasingly at the task of building a decent social order.

If Christ is "The Hope of the World" as we said repeatedly during the Assembly of the World Council of Churches, then let us be clear on the fact that he must speak to and through people like us. There will be no voice thundering out of the dome of heaven calling instructions to men. Whatever utterance the will of God finds in our time will be articulated in and through people neither better nor wiser than we are.

A good many years ago Alexander Irvine wrote a novel, My Lady of the Chimney Corner. And in it occurs the incident in which "the lady" went to comfort a neighbor whose boy lay dead. "As gently as falls an autumn leaf, she laid her hand on Eliza's head: 'Ah, wuman, God isn't a printed book to be carried aroun' by a man in fine clothes, not a gold cross to be danglin' at the watch-chain of a priest. God's Spirit comes in as many ways as there's need fur it comin', and that's quite a wheen. . . . God takes a hand wherever he can find it, and jist does what he likes with it. Sometimes he takes a Bishop's hand and lays it on a child's head in benediction, then he takes the hand of a doctor to relieve pain, the hand of a mother to guide a chile, and sometimes he takes the hand of a poor old craither like me to give comfort to a neighbor. But they're all hands touched by his Spirit, and his Spirit is everywhere lukin' for hands to use.'"

With this, the mystic and the rationalist in me make peace with each other and they join and say, "Lord, won't you use my hands, too?"

Pre-Conference Meetings

THE program of Annual Conference is a crowded one, but even with its multiple meetings its schedule cannot provide for all the special interests that call for training sessions at least once a year. To meet that need several pre-Conference meetings have been planned each year. At least four such training and inspirational conferences were held this year, two at Camp Mack in Indiana, one at Bethany Seminary in Chicago, and one at Grand Rapids.

National Camp Planners

Fifty-five camp leaders representing fourteen campsites in the five regions of the Brotherhood met at Camp Mack, June 7-10. National Camp Planners meet regularly every three years to give guidance and counsel to the church's camping program.

In 1954 the Church of the Brethren held 148 different camps at 33 campsites with a total enrollment of 11,374. The outlook is for increased enrollment in 1955.

Edward Schlingman, director of camps and conferences for the Evangelical and Reformed church and Mary Venable, director of children's work for the National Council of Churches were the guest leaders. The conference gave consideration to the training of camp leaders, campsite development, and age-group camping. Special attention was given to day camps and family camps. Camp planners went on record asking all the camping areas of the Brotherhood to provide a fund by setting aside a portion of the camp fees to help finance area leadership training programs. An experimental senior-high youth camp for 1956 is projected to study

Life From God — Life for God

T. K. Thompson

The Christian steward will use his best talents for spreading the gospel of Jesus Christ
- in his personal witness
- in his church and community
- in giving his money to spread the good news around the world

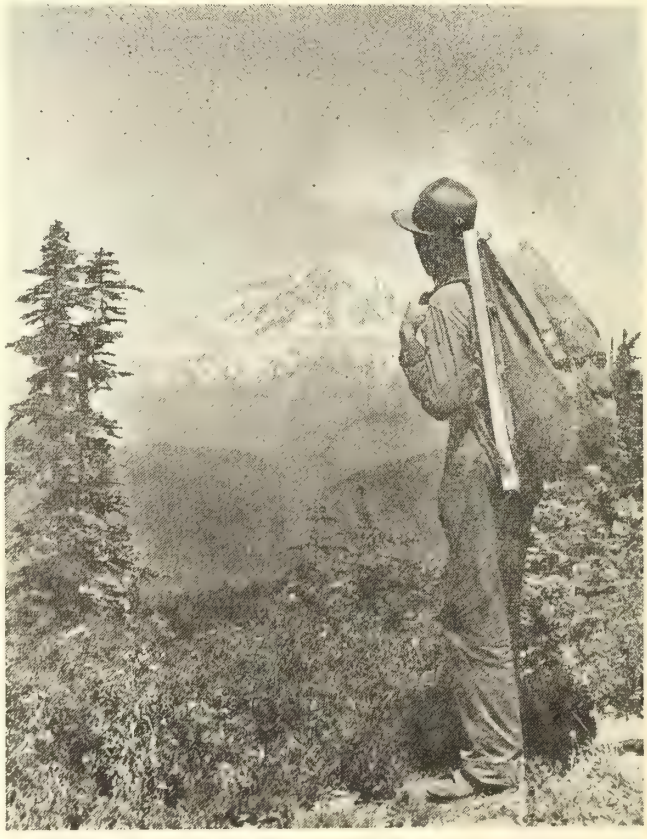
LIFE is filled with all kinds of deep mysteries. Man has pushed back the frontiers of ignorance and superstition and has amassed an immense storehouse of knowledge. Yet, in spite of all that we know in medicine, in agriculture and physics, life is still a great mystery. No one can stand on a clear night and look out into the heavens without wondering about the meaning of it all. When we remember that the light which is striking our eyes may have left some distant star before the birth of Christ, and has been traveling at the rate of 186,000 miles per second then we realize how small is our earth and how much smaller each person is in this vast universe.



Or we may take a kernel of corn, split it open and analyze the various elements in the seed, but at the very heart of the seed is the spark of life, and while we may do many things with seeds, this essential spark of life remains God's mystery.

When a child is born into our home, we are grateful for the anesthetic and for the whole science of obstetrics, yet we know that this little life is more than a mechanical conglomeration of flesh.

Or again, there is the great and abiding mystery of death. If a man die, will he live again? How is the soul related to the body? When the body becomes dust again, what is the lodging place of the soul? In spite of all that we know, and very great indeed are the accomplishments of science, life still remains a great mystery to us.

For the Christian, however, one who has found God revealed in Jesus Christ, life takes on an altogether new meaning. While the Christian does not have special access to scientific truths which the pagan does not have, the Christian is indeed informed by the Spirit of God and he does have some answers to these ultimate questions. For the Christian, life is from God and life is for God.

In the natural world about us, the Christian can see behind all of the marvelous processes of nature, the hand of God. The Apostle Paul expressed this beautifully when he said: "I planted, Apollos watered, and God gave the increase." This is merely to say that behind all of the mechanical devices which nature uses to produce and reproduce, there is the will and purpose of God. This same truth is seen in the birth of children into our home. The Christian knows that his little baby is more than an animal and more than the happenstance of physical and biological reproduction. Each child is a child of God, made in God's image and is a gift to Christian parents from God. The little life is an entrustment from God to be fulfilled both by the child as he Christians "stand still, and consider the wondrous works of God," for they know that behind the processes of nature God is at work

Clark and Clark

Working in the church office on a voluntary basis is just one way of devoting a portion of our time to the service of the church grows and by the parents who nurture the child.

In the second place, life is from God in respect to mental life. By a marvelous endowment from God, man has the ability to see the relationship of cause and effect, and this is the basis of our great scientific accomplishments. Men do not have to wait until events in nature actually happen; they can anticipate these events and prepare for them. Man can isolate the various aspects of a natural phenomenon and come to the precise cause for the given effect. Scientific thinking reaches its highest form in philosophy. Since Aristotle men have been able to organize their knowledge to seek out and express a love of wisdom.

For most people in our modern Western world, however, life is from God in the business world. We are oftentimes prone to forget the fact that buying and selling, getting and spending, production of goods to meet the physical needs of man, all these things are part of God's creation. In a Christian sense, work is not drudgery, but a co-partnership with God, whereby man has dominion over the birds of the air, the fish of the sea, and the beasts of the field, so that man's needs may be met. Martin Luther has reminded us that the honest job, well done, which meets a human need, is a divine vocation.

Most important, man's spiritual life is a gift from God. The key to the understanding of man is his psyche, his soul, his personality which transcends his body and, indeed, transcends all time and space. Man is so made that he can commune with God and can commune with his fellow man. It is this spiritual quality of man that ultimately informs and determines all other aspects of his living.

Life for God.

The Christian will answer some of the mysteries of life by saying, "Life is a gift from God." He will also go on to say that life is a trust for God.

Why has man been placed upon this earth? Why has he been given strange powers to create and to destroy? The answer, at least in part, is found throughout our Bible, where the purposes of God are revealed. What are these purposes? They are stated many ways throughout the Scriptures. It is the will of God that every knee should bow and every tongue confess Jesus Christ to the glory of God the Father. It is the will of God that men should enjoy God's beautiful creation; "He hath given us all things richly to enjoy." It is the will of God that men should be reconciled one to another and to their heavenly Father; "God was in Christ, reconciling the world unto himself and he hath committed unto us a ministry of reconciliation." It is the will of God that every man should live in perfect love and communion with his heavenly Father: "This is the life eternal that they might know thee, the only true God and him whom thou didst send, even Jesus Christ."

Since we have this clear indication of God's purposes and since the Christian regards his life as a gift from God, in many ways Christian stewardship is the profoundest answer to the problems of human existence. Christian stewardship says that all that we have is from God and is to be used for the fulfilling of his purposes. This will mean that man will make a careful use of his time. Ultimately, all of life is divisible into so many days and hours and minutes. Man is finite. Fortunes may be won and lost and won again, but time once spent is spent forever.

Likewise, the Christian steward will use his best talents for the spreading of the gospel of Jesus Christ, in his personal witness, in his own church and community, and in the giving of his money for the spread of the gospel around the world.

Life is a great mystery, but that mystery is resolved to no small degree when a man consciously gives himself to God who first gave himself to us on the cross.

The Church of the Brethren— a Member of THE CHURCH

Warren S. Kissinger

TWO analogies from the New Testament are helpful in describing the nature of the church. In the 12th chapter of 1 Corinthians Paul speaks of the one body and the many members. The writer of John in the 15th chapter tells about the vine and the branches. Both these figures might be used to point up the problem of the church. The Church can be thought of as the one body with the many members or as the vine with the many branches. The Church is the one body of Christ or the Church is the vine, manifesting itself in the many members or the many branches. To put it another way, there is but one Church, but there are many churches.

The Church is more than an earthly society or a mere product of history. The true Church is an invisible, spiritual reality depending wholly upon the sovereign grace of God. The Church —the body of Christ—is the whole company of the elect that have been, are or shall be, on earth and in heaven. The Church is the body in which Jesus Christ is everlastingly at work. Jesus Christ is Head and Lord of the Church.

But in addition to the Church we also talk about the churches.

H. Armstrong Roberts

Wherever churches are found there is a fragment of the true Church

This presents us at once with tensions and with temptations. To say that the Church transcends history means that we can never identify any historical institution with the Church. No one church, not even the Roman Catholic Church, is or can ever become the one true Church. Nor do any of us as long as we live become perfect members of the Church of Christ. The churches are always imperfect attempts to realize the community of love in Christ. The churches are our efforts to let the Church shine through. The churches are words of men pointing to the Word of God.

We are members of the Church only as we are members of the churches. For most of the readers of the Gospel Messenger this means that we are members of the Church through our membership in one member of the body—the Church of the Brethren. Through the Church of the Brethren we are pointing to the Church and through that church we are seeking to realize the community of love in Christ. But every church, and this includes our church, is always a distortion of the true Church. The one Church always stands above every church in judgment of its partialness and its incompleteness.

Now our question becomes, What place does the Church of the Brethren have in the Church, and what contribution is the Church of the Brethren making to the church?

The Church of the Brethren,

Pastor of the Windber church, Pennsylvania

true to her pietistic background, has always insisted that Christianity is not a matter of creeds, of correct theological formulations and correct belief but that Christianity must be primarily concerned with feeling, with life, with deeds. "Not creeds, but deeds" has been the Brethren slogan. For the Brethren, ethics has always had the priority over theology. This emphasis upon a practical Christianity together with a literalistic reading of the New Testament as the "only creed" produced the basis for the church ordinances and for such basic beliefs as simple living, temperance, nonswearing, nonresistance, the feeding of the hungry and the clothing of the naked.

Our danger and our temptation as a church has been to identify our church, our interpretation of the gospel, with the one church, the one gospel. Our view of the Church is always as "in a mirror dimly." We are pointing to the Church, but our pointing is always made from a certain perspective. Our look at the Church is distorted because of such factors as these: we were born in 18th century Germany: we were influenced by the pietistic movement; we are now largely an American church in the midst of a highly industrialized and specialized economy. These considerations plus a hundred more cause our church to be but a partial reflection of the Church. The Church of the Brethren is illuminating but one facet of that many sided gem which is the Church. But this one side of the gem is an important one.

In our understanding of the Church and our interpretation of the gospel, we have a definite contribution to make to the Church. But ours is not the total contribution. We who give priority to a Christianity that has to do with simplicity, with practice, with feeling, must have our perspective balanced and offset by those of our Christian brethren who emphasize theology, liturgy, sacraments, apostolic succession. As churches we exercise judgment and restraint upon one another in a community which always stands at once under the judgment and the grace of God.

We can perhaps illustrate by referring to the belief of the Church of the Brethren in nonresistance. We have believed and taught that war and the participation in war are inconsistent with the life and teachings of Jesus. This is a vital and important witness that must be made, and some of us because of our background and our interpretation of the gospel, will be called to make this witness. We will be conscientious objectors. This witness serves to keep before the churches the knowledge that war always involves tragic compromises and that the ultimate ideal of the Christian gospel is to love our neighbor just as we love ourselves.

But even this way of nonrestance is not the only way that Christians can take. There will be some Christians equally as conscientious as the conscientious objectors who will take a different position. They too believe that the ultimate law of love demands the renunciation of all force and violence. They too see that Jesus was a pacifist, that he fulfilled and kept the law of love. But these too will know that none of us is Jesus, that all of us are beset by sin and that

GOD REMEMBERS

Glen Weimer

GOD REMEMBERS the world.
But man so easily forgets the God who refreshes, renews, restores and redeems him.
Every moment of life is a call to remember God.
Every cell of the body bears the stamp of God;
Every tissue carries the marks of the divine hand;
Every drop of blood embodies the ineffable mystery of God;
Every recovery from weakness and weariness of body, mind and spirit, declares God's wisdom at work in us;
Every healing of the body and of the soul witnesses to the presence and action of God;
Every human love that blesses, strengthens, purifies and transforms the heart is but the fleshly and limited expression of God's unlimited love;
Even the power to cradle thought is testimony to the design of an eternal mind in man.
To live is to be under the necessity of remembering God.
God calls us to remember:
the rock from which we are hewn;
the order of providence that supports us;
the order of grace that enlivens and gives us hope;
the precious heritage of life brought to us at so great a cost;
the swift flight of time that can leave life better or worse, richer or poorer, hoping or despairing, joyful or tear drenched.
God remembers man and summons man to remember him.
The fulfillment and fruitfulness of human life depends upon man's remembering response to God.
As trees in a forest grow into many shapes, so man grows.
As trees must have a root system to support, anchor and feed the life above ground—so man must have an anchorage deep in God.
As birds remember what the season is, and so make their way to another climate—so the man of God discerns the times and its blessings and moves with joyful step and thankful heart to the altar of God.

because of that sin which besets us as individuals and as societies and cultures, we are set in a world where our choices are never between justice and injustice, between good and evil, between black and white, but where we must seek to recover and to perpetuate the most just of the many alternatives. These Christians will see that it did make a difference whether Hitler won or not and that now it does make a difference whether communism is victorious or not.

All our interpretations of the gospel are partial and all our Christian communities are but incomplete attempts to realize the one true Church. But we are members of the Church of the Brethren, and in that church God has called us to serve. We will be good members of the Church only as we are good members of the Church of the Brethren. We should continue to feed the hungry and clothe the naked and to keep before the churches the faith that religion does have to do with life, that there is wisdom in simple living, that God does call some in his Church to be peacemakers, even when this means the refusal to participate in war. But at the same time we must know that we are but one member of the body of Christ, that all of us as members see only as in a mirror dimly.

In our attempt to be good servants in our own church, we always labor under that hope which looks forward to the day when we shall see him as he is and when we shall know even as we are known. And that day will not be the result of our doing but of his doing. So let us go forward as a church always knowing that every act of ours as a church stands at once under the judgment and the grace of him who is the head of the Church, even Jesus Christ our Lord.

and evaluate camp methods, content and leadership. Many of the details for execution of these actions will be carried forward by the camping department.

Church Music Institute

The Church Music Institute sponsored by the National Music and Worship Committee and Bethany Biblical Seminary was held at the Seminary just preceding the Grand Rapids Conference, June 9-13. There were twenty-eight full-time registrants, including leaders, and there were others who attended sessions on a part-time basis. Leaders were Paul Halladay, director of the institute, Alvin Brightbill, Clyde Holsinger, James H. Beahm, Nevin W. Fisher, Mrs. Paul Speicher and Mrs. James Eshleman. Various phases of church music were studied, including hymns and hymn singing, choral technique, organ and piano playing and methods and materials in planning worship services. Some unusually interesting extra curricular activities were engaged in by the group. On Saturday evening they participated in WGN's radio presentation, Unshackled, by singing Leaning on the Everlasting Arms as part of this dramatic religious program. On the same evening they visited the famous Pacific Garden Mission. On Sunday all members of the institute attended four worship services—a Roman Catholic Mass, a Greek Orthodox service, the evening service of the First Church of the Brethren, and the choral service of the First Church of the Redeemer (Negro) from 11:00 to 12:00 p.m. This music institute was outstanding for its spirit of unity and sincere fellowship and for the maturity and completeness of participation of those who attended.

Pastors' Retreat

For the second year a one-day retreat for ministers and their wives was held just preceding the opening of Conference. The leader for the day was Dr. Joseph H. Jackson, pastor of the Olivet Baptist church in Chicago and president of the National Baptist Convention.

The theme for the retreat was "Blessed Are the Meek." In his morning address Dr. Jackson discussed the problems that confront the meek, giving special attention to the needs of ministers and their wives. They must expect to give up many material advantages. They will find crosses that are heavy to bear. They may suffer disaster without understanding why they suffer. The meek lead lives that involve taking great risks.

The speaker said that most preachers are poor men and their lack of abundant funds can be the source of many problems. Yet Dr. Jackson continued in the afternoon session to point out the rewards of the meek. He claimed that the meek really do inherit the earth because they make the proper use of God's gifts. There is a difference in owning the earth and being owned by it. The meek, because they are not enslaved by material things, learn to live by the light of eternal values. They find their rewards in the joy of victory over temptation and sin. Through sacrifice and disciplined living they discover the source of spiritual power. They also have the reward of an eternal life beyond this present life.

At other times during the day separate sectional meetings were provided for ministers and minister's wives. The retreat was again sponsored by the Pastors' Association, working in co-operation with the Ministry and Home Mission Commission.

Pastors' Dinner

Concluding the pastors' retreat was the dinner for ministers and their wives held in one of the Grand Rapids churches.

The vice-president of the Pastors' Association, Earl Bowman, was toastmaster.

Reversing the usual order of such occasions, when the speaker often has only the little bit of time left over from the other entertainment or business, Dr. Joseph Jackson spoke first. Dr. Jackson had already appeared twice before the pastors during the day and was scheduled to deliver the opening address of the first general session of Conference. Dr. Jackson speaking briefly called attention to Jesus' approach to life, his interest in and concern for individual persons. This emphasis is needed by ministers today, for they become as involved in budgets, buildings and program that they forget the real purpose and mission of the church, which is to bring the salvation of God through Christ to men. The church must remember that its major concern is to win men who need the help of the church, not to win those only who can help the church.

Because Jesus valued each person, because he was always willing to give help to anyone who needed it, because he never lost confidence in men, we can trust him to the fullest.

After a number by the ministers' quartet, the retiring president, Clarence R. Bowman, introduced the new officers of the Pastors' Association. Serving as secretary-treasurer for the next three years will be Fred Hollingshead, pastor of the Harrisburg church, Pennsylvania. Earl Bowman is vice-president and Murray Wagner, president.

Brotherhood Board Meetings

Important items on the agenda of business for the General Brotherhood Board required a number of sessions during several days prior to the beginning of Conference. The entire group met on Friday and Saturday evenings and on Monday afternoon. Commissions were busy all day Saturday and on Monday morning.

Several matters under consideration by the Board were sent on as recommendations to Standing Committee and to the delegate body. These will be reported on in connection with Conference business. In other actions the Board gave special recognition to staff members who were completing several years of service to the church. Edward K. Ziegler, Benjamin Bushong and Dessie Miller Myers were presented with five-year subscriptions to the Gospel Messenger in recognition of their work. The chairman of the Board presented to Ruth Shriver, who is completing twenty-eight years of service, first as children's director and later as director of women's work and family life, a Lady Elgin watch.

New staff members already on the job—Mary Spessard, Wendell Eller and Howard Royer—were introduced. Stewart Kauffman, who will join the staff this fall was also recognized by the Board. Two Board members, each of whom completed two successive terms at this Conference were also accorded recognition for their leadership. They are Calvert N. Ellis, retiring chairman of the Board, and W. Newton Long.

In response to a request from the Brethren Service Commission the Board adopted a resolu-

Reviews of Recent Books

Books are reviewed here as a service to the church. A review does not necessarily constitute an unqualified recommendation. Purchase can be made through the Brethren Publishing House, Elgin, Illinois. Titles recommended for church libraries are marked with an asterisk (*).—Editor.

Behind the Burden. Mildred Allen Jeffery. Pageant Press, Inc., 132 pages. $2.50.

Composed mostly of poems, but including a few prose items, Behind the Burden is the work of one who has looked on life with sympathetic and loving eyes and an understanding heart, who has met the problems of life with a practical Christian philosophy. This philosophy, reflected in the book, may help the reader improve his own. The contents run the scale from light to serious, touching the varied experiences of everyday life. Mrs. Jeffery is an occasional contributor to the Gospel Messenger; three of the prose selections in the book are reprinted from it—Ora W. Garber.

Workable Prayer Meeting Programs. Theodore W. Engstrom. Zondervan, 1955. 150 pages. $2.00.

This book contains twenty-six complete plans for a prayer meeting service. Suggested hymns are included. Each service is complete in itself and some could be developed into more than one service. Some typical chapters are: The Power of Prayer, A Study of Bible Prayers, Bible Character Study, Prayer Hindrances, Praying That Pleases God.

You may not like every chapter but you will find enough usable ideas to make the investment worth while.—C. Ernest Davis.

My Spiritual Diary. Dale Evans Rogers. Revell, 1955. 144 pages. $2.00.

Haven't you often said, "Can any good come out of Hollywood?" When you say it again, remember how they said, "Can any good come out of Nazareth?" For here is a book that will deepen your Christian faith, even as it clears your vision with wholesome tears.

Dale Evans Rogers is a Hollywood actress, who with her husband, Roy, is earnestly seeking to make her work a wholehearted Christian testimony. Her Christian experience in having a retarded child called back home to God she wrote about in the lovely best-seller, Angel Unaware. Now she has given this revealing account of a part of her spiritual pilgrimage in diary form.

This is an easy book to read. It is not filled with profound theology, but with the joyous experiences of a woman who is humbly following her Lord—in her home with her large family, some of them adopted children, in her profession as an entertainer, and in a radiant witness wherever she has an opportunity. It is full of beauty and love and radiant faith—Edward K. Ziegler.

KINGDOM GLEANINGS

Mrs. J. Clyde Forney and her family have appreciated the many expressions of sympathy they received after the death of Bro. Forney. She will not be able to answer personally all of the cards and letters.

Two Brethren ministers are the authors of meditations in the July-August issue of the Upper Room. Clyde R. Shallenberger of Hopewell, Va., is the author of the reading for Sunday, July 10, basing it on Psa. 147:7. The reading for Sunday, Aug. 21, written by E. F. Sherfy of Roanoke, Va., is based on Heb. 2: 9.

The conscientious objectors of Camp Meade, Md., in World War I, will hold their annual reunion at Rhodes Grove camp ground, south of Chambersburg, Pa., on Aug. 27 and 28. All CO's of World War II and those doing I-W service are invited. For further information write Cleason J. Florry, 815 Broadway, Hanover, Pa.

Second Virginia is holding a workshop on peace education on July 18-22, at which Dan West will be the leader. The location is to be a mountain cabin near Bridgewater, Va., and all expenses will be on a share-the-cost basis. Persons of other districts in this area are welcome to attend. For more information write to Lowell Heisey, Bridgewater College, Bridgewater, Va.

A mass meeting of the Washington City, University Park and Flower Hill churches, Md., is to be held on July 17, at Glenmont Recreation Center, Randolph Road and Bluhill Road, Silver Spring, Md., at 4:00 p.m. daylight time. The purpose of the meeting is to investigate the possibilities of starting a Church of the Brethren in the Wheaton, Md., area. Bring a picnic lunch for the fellowship period following the meeting. If interested please contact Mrs. Agnes Willoughby, 2712 Jennings Road, Kensington, Md., phone LO5-0718.

The annual training school for the Central Region will be held at Camp Mack, Milford, Ind., Aug. 1-6. There will be classes for those interested in home and family life and one for junior high teachers and leaders, as well as a workshop for children's workers. Clyde E. Weaver, Jr., and Chalmer E. Faw will be leaders of the ministers' seminar; John Vayhinger, director of the mental health clinic of South Bend, Ind., will assist them. For further information or for brochures regarding the school, write: Regional Office, Manchester College, North Manchester, Ind.

International Voluntary Services, with which the Brethren Service Commission is actively affiliated, in all probability will be requesting five American teams of five members each for assignment in village work in Iraq in the near future. For each of these teams they desire two agriculturalists, one mechanic and builder, one home economist and one nurse. Team members probably should have BS or MS degrees within the fields indicated and should be a member in good standing in some religious group. A man may spend his alternative service in one of these positions. For further information write: General Brotherhood Board, Attention Brethren Service Commission, 22 S. State St., Elgin, Ill.

Centennial Observances

Black River church in Northeastern Ohio, homecoming in observance of one-hundredth anniversary, Sunday, July 17. Services will begin at 10:00 a.m. and 2:00 p.m., daylight time. Russell V. Bollinger of North Manchester, Ind., will be the guest speaker.

Changes of Address

Mrs. Dulcie Cover, from Hillcrest School, Jos, Nigeria, W. Africa, to 22 S. State St., Elgin, Ill. Mrs. Cover has been house mother at the school for missionaries' children and is on furlough.

Robert McKay family, from Waka Training Center, Nigeria, W. Africa, to R. 4, Johnson City, Tenn. The McKays returned to the States in June on regular furlough.

Post-Conference Offering

The Lord said to Moses, tell the people of Israel to go forward (Ex. 14:15).

Attesting to a "strong tide of devotion in the Brotherhood which is looking toward an unprecedented advance in the whole life of the church," the Standing Committee at Grand Rapids recommended "we take significant steps to fulfill our intention to 'Seek First His Kingdom.' . . ."

Not all members had the opportunity to share in the Conference offering. In some churches where special offerings do not occur members were not advised to hand their Conference gift to a designated local official.

Lowered giving of recent months and unmet Brotherhood obligations justify an announcement of a Post-Conference offering. July 17 is the suggested time for congregations to engage in this Post-Conference offering experience—a significant step toward fulfillment of vital commitments in missions, service and other areas of concern.

Nonresidents will please send their gifts, designated for the Post-Conference offering, to the General Brotherhood Board, 22 S. State St., Elgin, Ill. Local treasurers are urged to remit not later than July 26.

Brotherhood Theme: Seek First His Kingdom

Northeastern Ohio women's work will have a rally in the East Chippewa church, Ohio, on July 21, beginning at 9:30 a.m., E.S.T. Mrs. R. H. Miller will be the speaker.

Miss Anna Warstler of Goshen, Ind., has accepted the call of the General Brotherhood Board to the directorship of women's work, beginning Sept. 1. James Renz has been asked to carry responsibility in home and family life on a half-time basis along with his work in temperance, beginning also on Sept. 1. Miss Ruth Shriver will terminate her work as director of women's work and home and family life at that time.

McPherson College

Rev. Paul Miller, pastor of the Panther Creek church, Iowa, was the commencement speaker for the class of 1955. During the granting of degrees, Rev. Miller was given the honorary Doctor of Divinity degree. The degree was given for his outstanding work in the rural pastorate.

Sixty-two were graduated this year with thirty-one receiving B.A. and thirty-one B.S. degrees. Seniors graduating with honor in the 1955 commencement were Isaac Grillo of Nigeria, West Africa, and John Vance of Idaho, cum laude; Kenneth Brown, Kansas, Paul Coffman, Iowa, and Betty Neher, Illinois, magna cum laude; and Ruth Strickler, Kansas, summa cum laude.

Student volunteer camp leaders for the summer will be Betty Holdereed of Oklahoma, and Joyce Flory of Iowa. Each summer the college arranges for volunteer leadership for the various youth and adult camps held in the Western Region. These young people give their summer on the same basis as regular BVS workers. Mr. and Mrs. Max McAuley, Glenn C. Swinger, of the Public Relations Department, and others will be working in the summer camping program also.

Don Goodfellow, a graduating senior, will be doing two years of volunteer service for the International Volunteer Service organization in Iraq. His fiancee, Eula Mae Murrey, is spending the summer in Belgium under the IFYE.

Kenneth Kinzie, of Chicago, has been appointed as head of the Art Department of McPherson College, succeeding Prof. E. S. Hershberger, who has accepted a similar position at Goshen College, Indiana. Rev. Paul Wagoner has accepted the position of alumni secretary beginning September 1. He succeeds Max McAuley who will be entering public school work.

Irene Shull, sophomore, will be sent to the National Women's Christian Temperance Union convention at Long Beach, California. Miss Shull will give her first place Kansas state oration, "Invitation to Murder."

Seventy-three students are enrolled in the summer session. Most of these are teachers securing additional hours to meet the increasing certification hours required by the state of Kansas.

Included in the graduation class this year were five international students: Mrs. Sarala Pradhan and Vinaya Likhite of India, Isaac Grillo of Africa, Eugene Lupri and Annalese Koch of Germany. Before graduating they presented the college in a chapel service, a beautiful globe of the world with their hope engraved upon it: One Christ, One World, One Hope. "It will be our intent," they said, "to carry the spirit of the McPherson College family into whatever part of the world we settle down to live."

tion concerning weapons of mass destruction. The board called on the national government to stop the making of bacteriological and nuclear weapons and other "lethal instruments of mass destruction" and "to turn toward disarmament and world rehabilitation." The statement urged the Brotherhood "to work and pray with renewed vigor toward fulfilling our peace heritage and toward helping to turn mankind from the ways of destruction" to the ways of peace. The entire statement will be published at a later time.

At the request of the Christian Education Commission the Board agreed to make a survey of all the publication needs of the Brotherhood with a view to guiding later development of Brethren publications. Earlier the Board had reported on its progress in making plans for a new headquarter's building. To provide the most efficient use of new equipment will require a careful study of all publication and printing needs.

Action of the Board at this meeting also made possible the increasing of insurance benefits under the group plan for ministers. These new benefits were to be effective as of July 6.

Background for Conference

THE Civic Auditorium in Grand Rapids provides many excellent facilities for a Brethren Conference. Within the structure there are really three auditoriums, the main one seating around 5,000 persons and smaller ones caring for 800 and 200 persons. Many other rooms offer convenient space for temporary offices and small group meetings. The large exhibit hall is unique in that it contains 44,000 square feet of exhibition space.

Just across the street from the Auditorium is the Pantlind Hotel. Standing Committee sessions and Board and Commission meetings were held here prior to the official opening of Conference.

Previous Conference in This Area

Of the 169 recorded Annual Meetings quite a number have been in the Central Region, which now claims more than 51,000 Brethren in 301 congregations in nine districts. The 1955 Conference is the twenty-sixth to be held in this region since 1876. Sixteen have been held in Indiana, four in Ohio and four in Illinois. The 1950 Conference was held also at Grand Rapids.

Preparing for Conference

ACCORDING to every announcement concerning Annual Conference the beginning date for activities is Tuesday evening, June 14. While this is the official opening of our annual conclave it represents the result of many months of preparation—and even of several days of preconference sessions.

In order to see what preparing for Conference involves we should look in on the Civic Auditorium as far ahead as the Friday before the opening date. Already the bundles of books, pamphlets and exhibit materials that will attract attention in the basement exhibit hall have been unloaded. A few staff members are at work already but their time of most feverish activity will have to wait until Monday when they are freed from Board and commission meetings and can see to arranging their exhibit. For once the facilities of an auditorium are more than adequate for a large and varied exhibit. As the result of careful planning a number of colorfully decorated booths offer delegates and visitors a panoramic view of Brotherhood interests and activities.

The many aspects of Christian education are represented in the youth, junior high, children's and adult work booths, the temperance, home and family life and curriculum exhibits. We predict that the display of the pictures and candlesticks, the gift of the West German Federal government to the Church for the help given to Germany, will draw many people. The church building counselor has one of the larger spaces and expects to do rough drawings for those planning new churches. Foreign missions also have a space larger than the others to take care of its farflung interests. Material aid, student exchange, refugee resettlement, service — volunteer, alternative and summer— are representative of Brethren Service. Evangelism, the ministry, and church extension also have places as do stewardship and the pension fund. Space is also assigned to Bethany Seminary, the colleges and Bethany Hospital.

The publishing house has an extensive sales exhibit where books, church and church school supplies, hymnals, Bibles and other printed materials can be examined and purchased or ordered.

While we are noting the "advance guard" who help to provide the setting and arrangements for a successful Conference, we should give credit to many whose duties begin several months in advance. Serving on the Conference program committee this year were Kurtis F. Naylor, chairman; Charles E. Zunkel, secretary; A. Stauffer Curry; M. Guy West; Warren D. Bowman; and Chalmer E. Faw. Working closely with them in locating the Conference and making detailed arrangements for facilities were three Brethren from the Central Region: Galen

T. Lehman, Russell V. Bollinger and Mark Y. Schrock. Although much of their work went on behind the scenes, these are the men who bear the brunt of handling hundreds of details that make possible the smooth running of meetings involving several thousand persons.

Our series of credit lines would not be complete without listing several other persons who carried special responsibilities. The Conference director, the man who handles announcements, makes last-minute decisions and maintains order in the midst of complex schedules was Olden D. Mitchell. Of Clyde Holsinger's service as choir director and Alvin Brightbill's work as song leader, there will be later reports. Howard Royer served as publicity director and J. Henry Long as exhibit director. Wendell Eller was in charge of photography and recording, and Robert Royer served as head usher. The Conference organist was Genita Speicher, the pianist Gary Deavel.

Through the efforts of these and other workers, a number of facilities were provided for Conference goers. Few people were aware that there was a general office where the necessary typing and mimeographing was handled speedily. Provision was made for a lost and found department and for the speedy delivery of mail. Through the courtesy of Bethany Hospital and the Brethren Medical Worker's Fellowship, a first-aid center was established for the benefit of any who were injured or became suddenly ill.

A new feature this year for the convenience of everyone was a daily announcement sheet that made possible the arranging of additional meetings or announcing of changes of program.

Two other committees that helped in providing efficient service for all delegates and guests were the lodging and registration committees.

Standing Committee Goes Into Session

Standing Committee invited the General Brotherhood Board members and staff to sit in the first session of that body. This has been the pattern for five years or so. Since this first meeting is concerned with the state of the church as viewed by the district delegates, the Board and the staff have a vital interest in the reports.

This year the officers of Conference had asked for the report in writing which resulted in concise carefully thought out reports. When the districts in a region had completed their statements, the regional secretary summarized the progress, problems and future plans for that area of the Brotherhood. Then at the close Alternate Moderator Paul M. Robinson summarized all the reports.

As the delegates one after the other reported certain facts and trends began to emerge and to run through all the reports. Space does not allow detailed account of each district and region and since Bro. Robinson's summary caught up the significant points we shall give his resume.

He pointed out first of all that differences are present in the Brotherhood—differences in geography which require various kinds of church strategy; in polity and practices; in points of view. Yet in spite of these differences, there is evident a real feeling of unity that is significant for the welfare of the church. Further, on the whole the church is loyal to the Brotherhood, though dissension and splinter groups are present in a few places.

Real advance, Bro. Robinson noted, was evident in the area of stewardship and evangelism. Nearly every district told of increased giving and increase in membership, but all were emphatic on the need for more education in the stewardship of all of life and for better techniques in evangelism. That the church is a building church was also evident. Most of the districts reported building programs—new houses of worship and remodeling of existing buildings to provide more adequate facilities for growing congregations. Building is also demonstrated in the new churches being established in many areas. The Brethren are learning to go into new communities where there is not even a nucleus of members.

The reorganization of district machinery in a number of the districts points up the need for rethinking periodically the organization of the local church and the district so that the work of the kingdom may be done more efficiently.

Bro. Robinson also called attention to the fact that problems do exist, most of them centering around leadership. There is need for more emphasis on training lay leadership on the local level, for greater vision on the part of the present leadership. We need more and better pastors.

Running through all the reports from the districts and regions was a genuine concern for the advance of the church at home and abroad.

The alternate moderator concluded his summary by remarking on the note of optimism in this year's reports as compared to the reports in previous years.

On Sunday evening Standing Committee heard the report of the General Brotherhood Board through the secretaries of each commission, the manager of the Brethren Publishing House and the general secretary, Norman Baugher. Reporting were W. Harold Row for Brethren Service, C. Ernest Davis for Christian Education, Leland S. Brubaker for Foreign Missions,

Friends-- the fruit of travel

Mrs. Harry K. Zeller, Jr.
McPherson, Kansas

Madaline Standau, who became a good friend of Mrs. Zeller, with her husband and son and her American son, Walton Moyer. Walton (left), a volunteer, lived with the Standaus for several months

A TRIP is an invigorating experience. Whether you cross your state, the nation or the ocean you have the excitement of preparation, the exhilaration of travel and the satisfaction of reminiscing.

During our first month abroad my husband and I visited the Brethren Service units in Germany and Austria, getting a quick glimpse of the many areas of our work. The second month we parted ways. He joined the deputation of ministers, social workers and medical doctors who were participants in an exchange program of the Federal Government of Western Germany. I spent a week in England visiting friends before coming to Germany to study and work in the Brethren Service program. I made Kassel House my home, joining the volunteers in their various fields of work.

I met many German people. With Max Snider I visited in a home where a heifer had been placed some months before and saw the joy this one animal brought to a family of five. With Rachael Garner I helped distribute supplementary food packages in more than a dozen homes where the diet was far from sufficient. With Esther Mohler I dropped into chat with several exchange students who had returned from the United States to be a part of their own community. With Ellis Shenk I visited in the home of a family awaiting resettlement in the United States. With Suzanne Windisch I observed a Volksschule, an Oberschule, several hospitals and attended a number of clubs and teas. And best of all I was invited to visit in German and Austrian homes.

Let me introduce to you some of my new friends. Mutti (mother) Knuth lives in a small apartment in Bremen. Her modest quarters are a far cry from the spacious farm and lovely home she was forced to leave in East Prussia. Her husband was killed before her eyes. She fled with her two sons, came to Bremen and for several years lived with many refugees in barracks. To be uprooted from familiar and cherished surroundings and driven to a strange land would dishearten many of us, but not Mutti, who continued to make a home for her two brilliant sons. Dieter, the elder, came to the United States as an exchange student. He is now foreman in a shipping center in Bremen. I cherish the day I spent with Mutti in Bremen. After sightseeing and shopping we enjoyed an unhurried visit over a cup of tea as we finished our noon meal in the Rathausekeller. I feel I have a personal and lifetime friend in Bremen.

Madaline Standau is a pastor's wife in the village of Niederkaufungen near Kassel. Her life is similar to any pastor's wife. She is interested in the various phases of homemaking, in the activities of the young people's groups in the church and of integrating into the women's program that large group of refugee women who have found a haven in this small village. Soon after my arrival in the Standau home, Madaline and I set out on foot to do the day's "marketing." We crossed the arched bridge over the lazy stream and made our way along the cobblestone street. The quiet village was disturbed only by the chatter of geese. We went first to the butcher shop, purchased cutlets for dinner (noon) and the inevitable bratwurst for supper; then to the baker shop for bread which slipped unwrapped into the basket beside the meat! At the village store (the owner's living room) where dishes, binder twine and iron pots could be purchased, Madaline bought groceries and yeast. I remember the yeast especially because I tried to make kuchen. It dropped like lead on the plate at tea time, but Pastor Standau was kind enough to insist he liked it that way. "The better to dunk it with, my dear," he said.

The sun gleamed over the crisp snow crust as Madaline and I took a long walk up the hill overlooking the village of Niederkaufungen, the city of Kassel visible in the distance. It was beautiful. I could have believed we were in the Blue Hills of Eastern Pennsylvania.

We talked of many things and discovered that the life of a pastor's wife is much the same in Germany and America. I have a kindred spirit in the village of Niederkaufungen.

In a small apartment in beautiful Vienna, across the platz from the Opera House lives Hildegard Josch, her husband and her fourteen-year-old daughter, Ingeborg. By working as a secretary in Hilfswerk, Hildegard is supplementing the meager family income to provide educational and cultural advantages which she covets for her daughter. Opera is close to the hearts of the Viennese; it came back first after the war, often to find itself in bombed out buildings. Ingeborg stands in line several hours each week to buy for a few shillings (about 10c) standing room to the opera, returning many times to the same production.

In Hildegard I feel a friendship with a strong personality whose meager material circumstances do not limit the culture she has to share.

These are a few of my new international friends. I know that the ties of world brotherhood are strengthened as we join hands which reach across the barriers of custom, language and creed. I covet for others the opportunity which I have had in increasing understanding and extending friendship with the people of Austria and Germany.

New Social Action Literature

Some ABC's of Christian Social Action. A handbook for the use of pastors and committees on Christian social action in local congregations. 20c.

Social Action in the Local Church. A leader's manual with an emphasis on integration of social education and action in the church's ongoing program.

Social Action Comes to First Church. A drama in three scenes by Herman F. Reissig. Twelve parts may be read by nine persons; only one rehearsal required. 25c each; $1.75 for nine copies.

Available from the Brethren Service Commission, General Brotherhood Board, 22 S. State St., Elgin, Ill.

NEW PEACE FILM

A TIME FOR GREATNESS is a new film in our library. The film is concerned with peace on the level of international relations. It shows how different nations are trying to use force to solve their problems, only to make new ones. This film is a good discussion starter for youth considering conscientious objection. Sound, black and white, 25 min., $3.00. Order from Audio-Visual Department, General Brotherhood Board, 22 S. State St., Elgin, Ill.

The Community Center

Herman Belcher
Castañer, Puerto Rico

DO YOU like to see boys and girls playing, singing, shouting and having a good time? Good! I do too! I see this happen every day at the Castañer Community Center, where I am in charge of equipment check-out and supervise the recreation program. At the center we have equipment for practically all playground games: volleyball, baseball and foursquares and for indoor games such as dominos, checkers, ping pong, weight lifting and puzzles. Try to imagine folk games, ping pong, tag and a pass game with a large ball going on all at the same time. That gives you an idea of what it may be like almost any afternoon.

The center is open all day, six days a week, four evenings a week from seven to nine o'clock and from two o'clock to five every Sunday.

Next door to the center is a public school for the first four grades. This school has a double session, with one group of children coming in the morning and another in the afternoon, which means that each child is left with half a day with nothing planned in school for him. Since the buildings are so close, the center staff is able to help with the school's recreational program, for the school does not have a supervised playground.

At the community center we try to help the children grow up with a sense of co-operation, leadership, sportsmanship and other Christian qualities. I would like to tell you of an example where we seem to be succeeding in the teaching of these qualities.

Humberto and Darwin Rivera are brothers. Humberto is thirteen and Darwin, fifteen. These two boys are at the center practically all the time when they are not in school. They are waiting for us at night when we open up and are the last to leave. Both are in our clubs and have 4-H chicken projects.

The older youth of the community use the center facilities to practice volleyball, basketball and softball. They have organized themselves into a team and they travel to neighboring towns to compete with other teams. We are proud of their good sportsmanship.

After observing communities without a central place to have good clean fun, I think again how happy I am that Humberto, Darwin and all the rest of our community boys have a place for supervised recreation.

Martha Cocanower

These young people in Castañer enjoy the school facilities and the wholesome recreation which is supplied through the Community Center

1955-1956 Local Church Program Guide Calendar

Brotherhood Theme: "Seek First His Kingdom"

This guide for activities in the local church is merely suggestive and does not completely cover the total program of the church. In some instances, churches will need to choose from a variety of activities listed. Refer to the various program area manuals and catalogs for additional guidance.

OCTOBER 1955

Stewardship Emphasis	Month of October
Rally Day or Loyalty Sunday	Oct. 2
World Communion Sunday	Oct. 2
Men and Missions Sunday	Oct. 9
Churchmen's Week	Oct. 9-16
Laymen's Sunday	Oct. 16
World Order Sunday	Oct. 23
United Nations Day	Oct. 24
World Temperance Sunday	Oct. 30
Reformation Sunday	Oct. 30

Begin the new church and church school year by a carefully planned and promoted rally day or loyalty Sunday and through a rich spiritual experience in the love feast and communion.

The pastor should meet with the pastoral board (or ministerial committee) in regular meetings to plan how best to meet the spiritual needs of the church. Be frank in sharing mutual concerns. This will help the church grow in a happy church-pastor relationship.

The evangelistic committee and the pastor should lay plans for the church's comprehensive evangelistic outreach for the church. A careful survey should be made to find all persons in the community as yet unreached by the church. Write to the Department of Evangelism for the packet on Conservation of Members.

The Christian education and leadership training program for the fall and winter months can profitably incorporate the following:

(1) Monthly conferences for all workers and teachers. The Bible Study Monthly, the Brethren Children's Worker, and a series of special workers' conference leaflets prepared by the Children's Work Department carry program ideas.

(2) Supply your church library with books that will be of help to your teachers, parents and pupils. If you cannot buy all the books you want, you can borrow some from the Brethren Loan Library.

(3) Book the film, For Every Child, to use some time during the year. Plan, also, to use the new departmental filmstrips, Children and the Church.

(4) Plan for a Bible study course or leadership training class.

(5) Be alert to develop potential leaders.

(6) Church leaders and Sunday-school teachers could profitably carry out a visitation program in homes of both church families and prospective church families.

Hold a meeting early in October for parents and teachers of children to explain the use of the closely graded materials and the purposes or goals for which we are working in the church school. Much value and understanding can be gained from parent-teacher meetings of various age groups.

Investigate the possibility of organizing a junior high fellowship. Use the Junior High Kit for program suggestions.

The Sunday-school class, the evening fellowship, youth socials (everything that youth do together) is the CBYF program. Help the CBYF get started in the Youth Action Plan. The new Youth Fellowship filmstrip on organizing and planning a CBYF should be used.

Adult leaders of youth should confront and encourage the youth to join the Youth Division — Fellowship of Tithers. Pledge cards are available. CBYF's need to consider the district and national youth project in their Youth Serves budgets. Materials on the National Youth Project and on the youth division of the Fellowship of Tithers are available from the Stewardship Department. Start a parent-teacher fellowship for those who have youth in the church school.

The Every-Member Canvass and Stewardship packet, mailed to pastors in May, contained resources for enhancing the level of giving of churches. Additional copies of the packet or of any of the materials enclosed may be ordered from the Stewardship Department.

"Remember the Church in Your Will" is the theme for a 1956 interdenominational emphasis. The Church of the Brethren will co-operate. October 1955, is proposed as a time for a beginning educational approach in local churches. Through sermons, talks, discussion groups, literature, posters and pictures, progress may be made. Material will be distributed through the pastor's packet. For early planning, write to the General Brotherhood Board, Attention: Financial Representative.

With World Order Sunday and World Temperance Sunday being observed in October and World Peace emphasized in November, it is suggested that use be made of the undated peace and temperance materials for children. Plan particularly to use the temperance filmstrip, Bill's Decision. Use Hallowe'en as a time when children collect articles for relief.

Use the special World Order Sunday and United Nations Day materials available and plan to conduct a Sunday evening school of International Relations or of World Order this month. Study international issues, American foreign policy and guiding Christian principles. Engage in legislative action on U. S. policy toward the UN, regional pacts, foreign economic policy, military appropriations, disarmament, technical assistance, surplus foods, etc. Sponsor a local or community World Order or UN Day conference; bring in foreign speakers or persons who have been abroad.

Churchmen's Week, promoted by the General Department of United Church Men of the National Council of Churches of Christ is a time of special emphasis upon laymen's responsibility in the advance of missions and world order.

Co-operate with other Protestant churches in observing Reformation Sunday.

NOVEMBER 1955

World Peace Emphasis	Month of November
World Community Day	Nov. 4
Peace Emphasis Day	Nov. 6
Armistice Day, Veterans' Day	Nov. 11
Thanksgiving Home Mission Offering	Nov. 20
Thanksgiving	Nov. 24

The Music and Worship Committee of the Church of the Brethren urges that every congregation observe Nov. 6 as a Peace Emphasis Day. Use a peace theme in the singing and in worship services.

Plan for a Sunday evening school of peace this month. Study the basis for pacifism, the historical position of the church, the program of alternative service, nonviolent methods of settling international disputes. Engage in legislative action against continued and extended conscription and militarism. Sponsor a local peace round table for high school youth. Interpret the alternative service program through local newspaper, radio and TV channels, through local high school channels and through community meetings and conferences. Put new meaning into Armistice or Veterans' Day. Make it a World Peace Day.

The theme for World Community Day is "Building Lasting Peace." Program materials for the day are available from the General Departments of United Church Women, 175 Fifth Ave., New York 10, N. Y.

Have a Sunday evening school of evangelism now, or in late winter, to train the entire membership of the church in personal and visitation evangelism — a revival or preaching mission.

Traditionally Thanksgiving is the season for emphasizing the Brotherhood's evangelism and home mission programs. Materials for general distribution may be secured free to brief members on these programs and to stimulate sharing in evangelism. Plan for a generous Thanksgiving home mission offering. Endeavor to enlist from ten to twenty-five or more new members in the Ten Dollar Club for home mission development. Order copies of the brochure on the Ten Dollar Club and stories of Ten Dollar Club churches as well as enlistment cards. Order, also, materials for the Thanksgiving emphasis.

If your church has not yet used them, use some of the following audio-visual materials: Frontiers Near Home, a filmstrip; Brethren Beginnings in Navajoland, a set of slides on our American Indian work; The City Story, a movie; and Song of the Shining Mountain, a movie on American Indian work. These audio-visual aids help people become aware that we, as a church, will establish new congregations or will soon disintegrate as a group. The United States needs to be evangelized. With the rapid growth in population and the shift of people from country to city, we have a tremendous and urgent problem.

A vigorous program of fellowship cultivation should be carried on, calling upon and inviting in all new persons of the community, to the various group meetings, church school and worship of the church. The responsibility list should be kept up-to-date.

Plan ahead to make special days have Christian significance for children through projects and programs. Christmas programs should lift up Christ and Christian values. Order the Christmas stocking coin folders for the children to use until Christmas. The church can give guidance to parents in the selection of books and other gifts for children.

Begin careful planning for a school of missions in January or some other suitable month. The themes for 1955-56 are India, Pakistan and Ceylon and Indian Americans. Special materials based on these themes pertaining to Church of the Brethren work have been prepared for use along with the general study books.

One or more church leaders should be encouraged to attend one of the recreation leaders laboratories during the Christmas holidays. Recreation labs not only train leaders in the area of recreation, but in general leadership techniques as well.

The second month of each quarter is the time to place orders for the following quarter's Sunday-school supplies. Orders should be directed to the Brethren Publishing House in November, February, May and August.

DECEMBER 1955

Human Rights Day	Dec. 10
Universal Bible Sunday	Dec. 11
Christmas World-wide Mission Offering	Dec. 25
Christmas	Dec. 25
Watch Night Service	Dec. 31

Observe Human Rights Day by a sermon on the subject, by making a special study in adult and older youth church school classes, or by conducting a Sunday evening panel discussion. Read and study the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the Bill of Rights in the United States Constitution and the Bill of Rights in your own state Constitution. Discuss how you can improve human rights in your community. Co-operate with other community organizations in planning and holding a community-wide meeting on human rights, featuring a pageant, a concert, a panel or an inspirational address. Write to government leaders, urging U. S. ratification of the Declaration of Human Rights.

Universal Bible Sunday presents an excellent opportunity to encourage intelligent and devoted Bible study. Try to motivate people to appreciate the Sunday-school class hour as an opportunity to study the Bible. Encourage preparation of the lesson at home and the use of Bibles in the classes instead of relying on the brief text printed in the quarterly.

Order World-wide Mission Offering helps early and seek a generous response from each member in this Christmas Day gift to the cause of missions.

Recognize the college students and others home for the holidays in programs of fellowship occasions.

New Year's Eve may well be observed as a fellowship and worship experience for the church through a Watch Night service.

Write early for the Youth Week Packet for National Youth Week next month. Plan to observe the Brethren Volunteer Service Day on Jan. 29. Young people should make plans to attend the Brethren youth seminar, Jan. 29 to Feb. 3, in Washington, D. C. and New York.

To be continued next week

Youth Camp in India

Ellen E. Cunningham
Bulsar, India

THERE was a great hustle and bustle in the boarding school yard at Ahwa one early morning in mid-February because this was the day the young people were to leave for camp. For twelve months those who had attended camp last year had talked of their experiences and had looked forward to this day with eager enthusiasm. Those who had not attended had gathered inspiration from listening to those who had gone and they had been waiting in almost uncontrollable anticipation for this day. So it was that before breakfast children and young people with bags and bedrolls began arriving in the schoolyard.

At the appointed time the bullock cart arrived and soon was piled high with the baggage. A count was made and Rev. Bhonsle asked for quiet while he gave them a few words of advice and direction and then with bowed head he asked God to give these folks a safe journey and to prepare them for and bless them in their individual camp experiences. Then beginning the words of a familiar hymn some eighty-five boys and girls between the ages of ten and twenty-three years started off for camp.

At about three o'clock in the afternoon they began arriving at Camp Mahal. All of them had walked every step of the eighteen miles through the hot tropical sun over rough, rocky, dust-filled jungle roads. A quick dip in the stream that ran through the camp grounds and a cup of refreshing tea, soon had everyone in the best of spirits.

Next morning, long before day had dawned, those on kitchen duty had been up and hard at work making their coarse breads of ground kaffir corn mixed with water and roasted over hot coals. Others had gone to the river to wash up so that they quickly gathered in the cool brisk morning air when the 6:30 a. m. bell called them for a few minutes of exercise. At seven o'clock the breakfast bell rang and all gathered around the teakettle, first for a period of devotion after which they had their breakfast of tea and coarse breads.

At nine o'clock all gathered for classes. They were divided into three age groups as they sat for an hour in each of the three classes: nature study, Christian living and Bible study.

Ernest Shull helped them to see God's beauty in the natural surroundings in which our camp was held—the thick jungle was full of beautifully colored birds and butterflies, as well as many interesting plants and trees.

Pastor Bhonsle dealt at length on the attributes of Christian living in their non-Christian communities and how important it was that their lights always shine brightly. Bro. Chowdry led them in a further appreciation of their Bible.

The 12:30 bell brought a very hungry crowd to dinner which was served on mats laid on the ground under the shade trees. Following a period of devotion they filed past the rice kettle and next past the curry kettle. No one went away hungry. There was plenty for all and enough left over to feed some of the hungry village people who visited our camp.

After an hour's rest, everyone went to the river for their daily bath and to do laundry. No one had more than one change of clothes. Those that were so fortunate had no problem at all; they would wash one change of clothes while wearing their other. But many had no change so they would wash their only set of clothes and put them to dry while they went swimming in old worn out clothes they had brought for the purpose.

The bell at 4:30 p.m. called everyone together, and after a cup of tea those who were not on kitchen duty would play group games such as volleyball, ring toss, or darts. After a simple supper of breads and lentil soup all would gather around the campfire to sing hymns. Soon in an outer circle the village people would begin to gather to hear Bro. Prabakar, one of our village evangelists who always took charge of the campfire service. In very simple stories and in the language which these village folks could understand he would tell and sing the Bible story. This was perhaps the first time many had heard the gospel story and it was interesting to watch the expression on their faces as they listened in rapt attention to all that was said.

The last evening climaxed the camp program. All the boys and girls sat on the porch and listened to a stirring message by Brother Bhonsle, Let Your Light Shine. At the close of the message the leaders of the camp lighted the candles of all who were present and then, as the village folks who had gathered watched, they formed a cross with their lights.

The girls carry water from river

Thus ended another camp, ended only in a material sense, for the memories of such times live long in the hearts of these folks. We could not help but contrast the simple camp set-up with that of other camps we had attended. The beds were a blanket thrown on the rough dirt floors. Most of the boys did not have a building to sleep in. They had placed a few bamboo sticks together and thrown palm branches over the top for a shelter. The kitchen was out of doors. The stoves were three flat stones of about equal size so placed that they held the big copper kettles about eight inches off the ground. A fire of driftwood was built under the kettles. There were only two kettles—one for rice and one for curry, for they never had more than two dishes at one time. In order to keep the rice from burning they would build a big fire under it until the water was boiling. After putting in the rice they would take out most of the fire leaving only a few glowing embers beneath the pan and a few on top of the lid. Their stirring spoon was a bamboo pole.

Each camper had brought a tin or brass plate. They all ate with their fingers; so dishwashing was a very simple process. All of us would rinse off our plates and fingers at the end of each meal and the dishes would be done.

Everything was most simple but to my mind came a saying I had often heard, "It is not the clothes that makes the person—it is the personality," and I thought it was certainly not the comfortable material equipment that makes a successful camp. It is the spiritual blessings that come to those who "hunger and thirst after righteousness."

Lake Geneva Summer School of Missions

Anna E. Lichty
Franklin Grove, Illinois

THE thirty-seventh annual session of the Geneva Summer School of Missions will be held Aug. 7 to 14, 1955, at Conference Point, Williams Bay, Wis., on the shores of the beautiful Lake Geneva.

The theme for the school will be "Christ — the Way." Bible studies will be on Walking With Christ, according to the Gospel of Matthew. The theme for foreign mission study will be The Christian Mission in a Revolutionary Age; for home missions the study will be Indian Americans.

The Geneva School of Missions is an interdenominational leadership training school. Missionaries from all parts of the world and leaders from many denominations attend. Mission leaders in our local churches will find this summer school of missions very inspirational and helpful in planning for the school of missions to be held in their own churches during the following year, as the books scheduled for study will be reviewed and helpful suggestions for conducting the study will be given. Outstanding teachers and resource leaders will direct the classes in study.

Those serving on the faculty this year include Dr. Emily Werner, who has recently toured Palestine, Mrs. V. D. Melconian, Miss Ada Stearns, Miss Esther Davis, Rev. and Mrs. Paul Turk, Mrs. Mabel Fenner, Mr. and Mrs. Robert Ardman, Mrs. C. Medema, Mrs. Gene Elliott and Mrs. Mary Jean Bartholomew.

Students attending the school are required to attend the Bible class and at least one class in missions each day. Classes are held in the forenoon. The afternoon is for rest and study and recreation. At four o'clock there is a "Meet the Missionary" session when missionaries tell of their work and an opportunity is given to become acquainted with them. There are special classes for girls who are sent by missionary groups and women's societies. Many a girl, under the spiritual influence and guidance of her teacher, has been led to dedicate her life for Christian service.

Persons attending this school of missions are accommodated in cottages and all eat together in one large dining hall. Morning cottage prayer groups and vesper services each evening are very inspirational and uplifting. Plan to attend the conference if you can, or send a delegate or scholarship girl from your women's organization. Our own Church of the Brethren has representatives on the Geneva Board. If you cannot attend for the week you will find it worth while to attend on guest day, Wednesday, Aug. 10.

Castaner Church of the Brethren

Charles E. Zunkel

IT SEEMS natural that with the splendid ongoing ministry, as diversified and full as it is at Castañer, that there should also be a church. Indeed, to this observer, it would be most strange to expect that there would not be an emerging congregation there. And so, indeed, the Church of the Brethren came to be. From early days the staff had its religious services. Worship was a felt need in their lives.

As the Puerto Rican people whom they served and many with whom they worked, saw them gather for worship, some naturally asked if they might join them. Who could deny such a request? Of course, there were other organized churches in this area. There were Catholics, Episcopalians, Baptists and Pentecostals. However, when the Brethren came to Castañer none of these groups was active and vigorous. Our coming did stimulate them to greater activity.

As the Puerto Ricans worshiped with our staff there were those who wanted to become a part of our fellowship. We had no organized church. When we stay on for a period of time in a service project, sooner or later we have to face and solve the question as to the advisability of organizing a congregation.

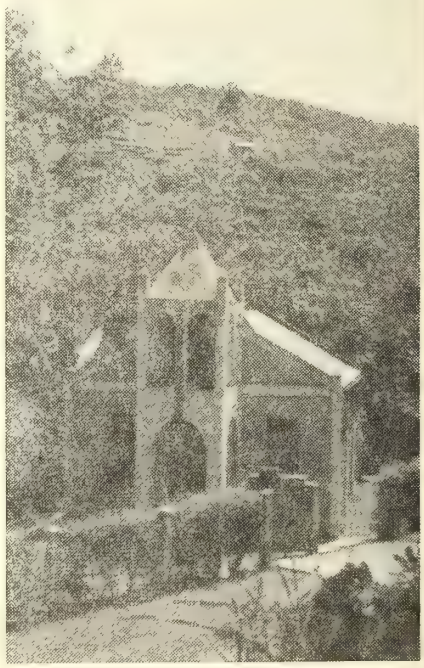
Really, we should face it squarely and anticipate the coming church. The church should not be born by default. It should be planned for, whenever the time comes that it is wanted.

One of the problems to be faced by an ecumenically-minded group is that of comity assignment. There was history for the Protestants in Puerto Rico on this issue. Around 1900 when the Protestant forces began active work on the island the four co-operating groups at that time decided on comity arrangements and assignments. The island was divided for work among the Episcopalians, Methodists, Presbyterians and Disciples. The groups who have come to the island since that time have come in disregard of comity, or have been given areas by already assigned groups.

It so happens that when the Brethren came to Castañer they were invited by the Presbyterians who had the comity assignment for that area. Now we have a growing congregation of fifty souls.

Since we came to Castañer the Catholics, Episcopalians and Baptists have each built a house of worship. The Episcopalians have a church that might seat twenty-five or thirty people and they have services by a visiting rector once in three weeks. Actually fifteen or twenty attend. They have no Sunday school. The Catholics can seat from one hundred to one hundred and twenty-five and they, too, are served in a mass once a month by a visiting priest. The Baptists have a building that will seat one hundred folk. They now have a resident pastor, Rev. Cresbo, who is giving an excellent ministry. The Pentecostals still have no church building of their own but use the building at the Community Center which was originally used by the Episcopalians and Baptists and Brethren.

Brethren services outgrew the building at the Community Center. Now the Academy is used, but it, also, has become too small and inadequate.



Questions might still be raised by some as to whether we should build a church in this particular field where so many other groups already are established. It is possible that we might select a less competitive field in which to serve and eventually develop a congregation of Brethren. Two facts, however, should give us confidence that Castañer is a good place to continue our church ministry. The first is that there are more people in the area who need the ministry of the church than are now being adequately served by the other denominational groups there. The Baptists, who have the largest and strongest church in the area at present, insist that there is too much work for them to do. It is reported that there are fifteen hundred people here in an area four miles square.

Castañer Baptist Church

The second fact which gives encouragement to our continuing ministry is that we already have there a congregation of fifty members who are our people and who look to us for nurture and continuing fellowship. To them we owe a ministry. There is this further fact that the real hope for a growing evangelistic church in Puerto Rico lies in a great outreach to many nearby mountain communities.

At Cerrote we now have one such outpost, jointly ministered to by Brethren and Baptists. There each Sunday from forty to sixty folk gather for Sunday school and a worship experience. Again at midweek service these people return for the further ministry of the church.

Using Castañer church as a base we could well develop a half dozen such outposts. This is the pattern used by other groups such as the Mennonites. Eventually, some of these outpost places could become new congregations. Their evangelistic concern could then lead them to further outpost development.

Castañer church is now planning for a house dedicated to study and worship. Offerings for a building fund have been taken for years; these along with contributions from visitors and friends have now become sizeable. With some assistance from the Brotherhood a new house of worship, designed to meet their need, is to be erected. The District of Florida, of which this congregation is a part, has already been giving substantial aid. High tribute deserves to be given to the devoted Brethren workers who have been true to their faith and shared the gospel along with their ministry to the physical needs of the people. These people have made considerable sacrifice that the church might be established.

Another step which is now anticipated is a Puerto Rican pastor to give leadership to the work. This, too, is being planned for in the near future.

Here, then, is a young church—our church—that is growing in spiritual power as well as in numerical strength. It holds much of promise. Let us support it with our love, concern and prayers!

Nampa—Since our last report, we have accepted the sponsorship of another D.P. family. The other family which our church sponsored has received U.S. citizenship. Our church conducted a three-week lay visitation program under the direction of our elder, Bro. Bruce Tharrington. The visitation was followed by a prayer vigil by the ladies of the church and a week of evangelistic services led by our minister, Bro. Galen Walker. Special music was furnished each evening by the choir or members of the choir. Fourteen members were baptized and fourteen received by letter into our fellowship. Pastor Walker conducted a membership class. Our pastor and his wife and several other members of our congregation attended regional conference at Wenatchee. Our women were hostesses to the district spring rally, which was held April 28. The Brotherhood purchased property in Boise for a new church. Our congregation is looking forward to the beginning of a new church in our district.—Mrs. Stanley Agenbroad, Nampa, Idaho.

Northern Iowa, Minnesota and South Dakota

Worthington—Several of our young people attended the youth rally at the Panther Creek church. One Sunday morning our young people had charge of the entire morning service. Our youth groups sponsored an Indian supper with Brother and Sister Holsopple, retired missionaries, now serving as pastors of the Sheldon church, Iowa, in charge of arrangements. Indian food was served and Indian costumes were modeled by the young people. Both Brother and Sister Holsopple gave talks on customs of India. Rev. Gebhardt of the Adrian Methodist church spoke to us at an evening service. Miss Florence Morgan, Presbyterian missionary to the Navajo Indians in New Mexico, spoke at our women's work meeting one month. The women's work group recently purchased a dehumidifier for the church basement. The Noblemen's chorus of Worthington presented a concert one Sunday evening. A group of our youth attended the regional youth conference at McPherson. A family birthday social was held on March 17 in our fellowship room. Our pastor and five of our young people conducted a service in the Southwest Minnesota tuberculoses sanitarium on April 4. Passion week services were conducted by our pastor followed by baptismal services for four juniors. Our spring communion service was held on Good Friday evening. Our church participated in afternoon Good Friday services with six other churches in Worthington. Our pastor is teaching in a released-time church school in the Presbyterian church. The young people sponsored a sunrise service on Easter morning and invited the Reading Presbyterian church young people. We were host church to the Mennonite a cappella choir from Bethel College at Newton, Kansas, on April 14.—Mrs. Beull Adolph, Worthington, Minn.

Mineral Creek—The district men's work banquet was held at our church. On March 20 we had a potluck supper and social hour in honor of the eighty-fifth birthday of our elder, James M. Mohler. Our new pastor, Herbert Zeiler, has organized the youth work of the church. Pulpit chairs have been given to the church as a memorial to Sister Maggie Jones by her children. We joined the other churches of our town in the annual Easter sunrise service with our pastor as speaker. In the evening of the same day, we had our love feast. A number of women from our church attended the district women's work rally at Warrensburg. Pictures of the proposed mission church in Springfield, Mo., were shown by our state fieldman, Bro. Ralph Scaggs, and Harold Mohler, and pledge cards were distributed.—Clara Fultz, Leeton, Mo.

Ames—Sara Shisler, Bro. Harl Russell and the ladies' quartet from McPherson College visited in our church. Each one made a vital contribution to our church program. Some of the highlights of our church year have been the redecoration of the church sanctuary, a community Thanksgiving service, a Christmas breakfast on the Sunday before Christmas followed by a worship service by the children and climaxed with the Christmas offering, at least five all-church socials, and a home-coming and dedication service. We are looking forward to evangelistic services in the fall and the redecoration of the basement for the children's use. —Merle B. Weimer, Ames, Okla.

Waka—At the first session of our school of missions, Miss Sara Shisler gave a talk about conditions in Africa. On Sunday nights the adult group is making a study of Bro. Floyd Mallott's book, Studies in Brethren History. Our sanctuary was redecorated and carpet was laid on the rostrum, center aisle and foyer. The carpet was a gift from Mrs. Rhodie Stollings and the adult class. A communion table and lectern were made by our pastor, Bro. Alvin F. Klotz. Expense for the pulpit furniture was donated by persons as memorials to the church. The men prepared and served the meal for the mother and daughter banquet. Mr. and Mrs. Paul Sargeant gave a message concerning their recent experience in Europe. Our pastor conducted a series of meetings April 6-10. Ten of our women attended the west-side district rally on April 20. As a part of the program our women presented the skit, Beautiful Hands. Our junior choir sings once each month at the evening services. The district youth cabinet met at our church for a retreat on April 16-17.—Maud Stump, Waka, Texas.

Cherry Grove—At our semiannual business meeting on March 4, church officers were elected. We were represented at the young adult rally and also at the women's rally. On Good Friday evening our young adults sponsored the showing of two films to the entire congregation. The intermediate class had charge of our sunrise worship service on Easter morning and the Truth Seekers class prepared and served a breakfast. Our ladies' aid made comforters and collected and packed bedding and clothing for relief. The women also made baby layettes and co-operated in the collection of yard goods for relief. Pastor Hawbecker and a group from our congregation were in charge of a program at the Mt. Morris Brethren Home on April 24. A group of our men spent two days helping a family in our community whose home and farm buildings were completely demolished by a recent tornado. The young adults sponsored a family night program on May 1 with a potluck supper and the showing of various pictures by our local doctor. Our love feast was held on June 5.—Mrs. Wayne Derrer, Lanark, Ill.

Southern Illinois

Hurricane Creek—At Christmas time our church group showed the film entitled The Christ Child. In February our church was host to a group of the churches in the southern section at a workshop for stewardship, Christian education, ministerial committees and trustee groups. A consecration service was held for the babies of our church. Pastor William H. Bray, conducted pre-Easter services and our love feast and communion. During these special services, two new members were received by letter. The ladies' aid recently finished a comforter for relief and is making plans for a food sale in the near future. In March we participated in the pulpit exchange, Bro. Don Ridgley of Walnut Grove church was with us and Bro. Bray was in the Martins Creek church.—Angeline Dooly, Mulberry Grove, Ill.

Elkhart Valley—Since the last report, six members have been received by baptism and one by letter. Bro. Clarence Fike of Goshen, Ind., held a two-week evangelistic meeting. Bro. R. V. Bollinger of Manchester College was guest speaker for our harvest home services. The young people had a week-end camp at Camp Mack. A representative from the CBYF attended the Washington youth seminar. The women's work organization visited the county old folks' home, presented them with gifts and gave a devotional program. On April 3 the choir gave the cantata, The Living Redeemer, with the offering for the organ fund. Our church co-operated with four other neighboring Brethren churches in pre-Easter services. We have also been host church to two youth conferences. Mrs. Clarence Heckman, returned missionary, spoke at our morning worship on April 24. The film, The Angry Boy, was shown at our family night program. Our church visited the Brethren Home at Mexico and conducted a service.—Mrs. Viola McCormick, Elkhart, Ind.

Goshen City—Another house and lot has been purchased by the local church. This now gives us two lots adjacent to the church for use in future building. The first Wednesday of each month is church night, starting with a supper and followed by choir practice, prayer meeting and other group and committee meetings. Due to crowded conditions, we have two worship services each Sunday morning. From June until August, however, we will have only one worship service at 9:00 with Sunday school at 10:00. Two membership classes have been taught by our pastor, Clarence Fike, whose contract has been renewed for another three-year term. —Mrs. Lewis Dixon, Goshen, Ind.

Michigan

Battle Creek—Bro. Forrest Groff was guest speaker for the laying of our cornerstone. The building is progressing and a number of our men are donating much of their time for the building. Brother and Sister Allen Gandy celebrated their fortieth wedding anniversary at the church. Our Sunday evening services for January, February and March were devoted to peace, missions and temperance. We now have two groups of women workers. The regular women's work group meets the second Thursday of each month for an all-day session and the C.B.L. (Church of the Brethren Ladies) meet the last Tuesday evening of each month. On Palm Sunday six babies were dedicated. The CBYF was in charge of the Easter sunrise service which was held in front of our new church. This was followed by a breakfast at the home of Brother and Sister Burroughs. We are happy to welcome six new members by baptism and five by letter into our church. We look forward to moving into our new church building about July 1. The dedication will be announced later.—Emma Gardner, Battle Creek, Mich.

Northeastern Ohio

Canton, First—On Sunday, Feb. 13, Hazel Messer, missionary on furlough from India, was with us for two services. On March 19-20 Bro. Alvin Brightbill of Bethany Seminary was guest leader for our music institute. The closing service on Sunday evening featured the music of the combined choirs of the Hartville, East Nimishillen and Canton choirs. Grace Eshelman, returned missionary to India, spoke at our evening services on March 27. On April 3 we held our communion services. We presented our Easter cantata, God's Only Son, on April 10. The women's work group is making dresses for the patients at the Massillon state hospital. The mother and daughter banquet was held in the fellowship hall on May 6. A number of our young people attended the spring rally at Olivet. Three new members have been added to our church family.—Mrs. R. J. Brumbaugh, Hartville, Ohio.

New Philadelphia—The filmstrip, Unto These, My Brethren, was shown one Sunday night. One Sunday morning Sister Goldie Swartz brought us a message on India, and in the evening she showed pictures of her work in that country. A young adult class has been organized. Colored slides of the Holy Land were shown at an evening service. Five of our members attended the Christian service training school which was held in our city. We also participated in the union spiritual emphasis week services. Seventeen from our CBYF group attended the youth rally at the Ashland church. On Feb. 6 the young people had charge of the entire morning service. Rev. Fleming Bradberry brought our evening mesage on Race Relations Sunday. Several of our women took part in the union World Day of Prayer service. During our pastor's absence, messages were brought by Bro. Espenscheid, F. G. Reece, Scott Simer and Guy Fern. We held a week of evangelistic services March 27—April 3, with Bro. Earl Hostetter as evangelist. One person was rededicated, four baptized and two await baptism. The children presented an Easter program the evening of April 10. The father and son fellowship was held April 21. Our business meeting was held April 11 with Bro. Harlan Grubb presiding. Brother and Sister Willis Stehman will serve as delegates to Annual Conference. The Homemakers' class purchased a sound motion picture projector for the church. The film, The Family Altar, was used April 24. On May 5 we held our annual mother and daughter fellowship. A lay visitation program is being planned. Our Sunday-school attendance is increasing.—Alta B. Stehman, New Philadelphia, Ohio.

Northwestern Ohio

Pleasant View—The January meeting of our women's work was held at the Brethren Home in Fostoria, Ohio. A gift was given to each member of the home as well as some material for handiwork. At our annual birthday supper, the program included a recognition service for the new members received during the past year. Our pastor taught a class in the country school of religion which was held in Lima, Ohio. The Community World Day of Prayer service was held in our church. A pulpit exchange was worked out with neighboring pastors during Holy Week. Our Easter services included a sunrise service and breakfast. Here in one book is a combination of Brethren Service and Foreign Missions. Published by Haddam House, representing the YMCA and the YWCA this volume brings to students, youth, and others guidance in meeting and helping to solve problems in the area of social change. The author sees in the Christian church the greatest opportunity for positive action. He sets forth the challenge that we must offer a more satisfying solution to the world's ills than that offered by Communism. Failing to meet that challenge will mean the further loss of friends around the world. You will awaken to the social revolution that is rocking the world as you read these pages. 156 pages $2.50 our elder, Bro. Orville Noffsinger, presiding. Since our last report, three members have been received by letter and ten by baptism into our church. The May assembly meeting of the Allen County Council of Churches was held in our church on May 24, with Raymond R. Peters of Dayton, Ohio, giving the address.—Rena Byerly, Lima, Ohio.

Southern Ohio

Covington—Fellowship suppers have been held once a month on Sunday evenings during the winter. Gordon Wilson represented the young people of our church at the youth seminar in Washington, D. C. Our church held services at the Brethren Home in Greenville with George Mendenhall bringing the message. Plans for expanding our present church building are in the making. We have purchased the lot next to the church and Bro. Forrest Groff, church building counselor, has met with our committee. A church directory has been printed and sent to our membership. At our February women's work meeting Sister Goldie Swartz showed pictures and gave a talk concerning her work in India. During the month of February, we held our school of missions each Sunday evening. At our council, Brethren M. G. Wilson, George Mendenhall and Mark Snider were chosen to represent our church at Annual conference. Bro. Mendenhall was also elected to serve for the summer as pastor's assistant. At the March meeting of the women's work, Mrs. Roscoe Inman showed slides of their work in Kassel, Germany. Bob Mendenhall sailed for Germany, where he will serve in B.V.S. for a two-year period. During Holy Week services were conducted by the men's work, women's work and CBYF. On Sunday evening, April 3, three persons were baptized and two received by letter. Our women's work group entertained the church women of our town at a meeting in April, with Don Bowman talking and showing pictures of his trip around the world. Our father and son banquet was held April 21 with Bro. Kenneth Long as guest speaker. On Manchester Day, Charles S. Morris from the college was our speaker. In the afternoon a number from our church attended the district presentation of The Messiah.—Ethel Manning, Covington, Ohio.

Eastern Pennsylvania

Conestoga—Our church met in regular council on March 10, with Elder S. Clyde Weaver presiding. We voted to support a third missionary and to increase our contributions to Elizabethtown College. Elder and Mrs. S. Clyde Weaver were chosen to represent our church at Annual Conference. Youth Sunday was observed with members of the CBYF teaching all the adult classes of the Sunday school. Donald Fogelsanger, student minister at Elizabethtown College, brought the evening message and the CBYF groups from Akron, Mohlers, Middle Creek and Spring Grove were present for an hour of fellowship. Bro. James Renz spent Sunday, March 20, in our church. The CBYF group was in charge of the evening service with Bro. Renz speaking to young people of various neighboring churches. Elder Milton Hershey of the White Oak church was evangelist for our services during Holy Week. As a result of these services, two were baptized into our church. Bro. Paul Z. Rummel of Lancaster, a teacher at Millersville state teachers' college, is teaching a series of lessons in Christian education. Other speakers at our church were Bro. Howard Bernhard of Florin and Bro. Merle Crouse, who told of his experience while serving in Europe in BVS. One Sunday evening Bro. Robert Hess brought the message. Home talent night was sponsored by the CBYF at which time various groups from the church and Sunday school participated. Our women participated in the World Day of Prayer service. Friday night has been set aside as music night with Mrs. Matora Hostetter of East Petersburg as instructor for a series of lessons to help improve congregational singing with special emphasis for the young people in group singing. The county convention of the W.C.T.U. was held in our church on June 8. Daily vacation Bible school will be held each evening, June 27—July 8. Love feast was held May 21 at Bareville. Our CBYF group spent a week end at Camp Swatara.—Mrs. Sara Sheaffer, Bareville, Pa.

Spring Grove—One Sunday evening Bro. Rufus McDannel of the West Greentree congregation spoke to us. On March 13 Bro. Donald E. Miller of the Upper Conewago congregation worshiped with us at the Kemper house and brought the morning message. On Sunday evening of the same day, the Chiques male quartet presented a program at the Blue Ball church. Bro. Robert Faus, a member of the quartet, brought the evening message. Special Easter services were held by Bro. Abram A. Price of the Indian Creek congregation. On Sunday morning, April 17, Bro. Harold S. Martin of the Pleasant Hill church brought the message. On May 1 love feast was held at the Blue Ball church. Visiting ministers were Elder Henry F. King of the Heidelberg congregation, Bro. Jacob Fahnestock of the Richland congregation and Bro. John Miller of the Marsh Creek congregation. —Mary Esther Stoner, Lititz, Pa.

Western Pennsylvania

Locust Grove—At a recent council meeting, Bro. D. Edward Cauffiel was asked to serve as pastor for another year. We have enlarged the auditorium of our church and added eight new classrooms. The ladies' aid group bought new furniture for the front of the auditorium and the Good Cheer class purchased a new piano. The CBYF sent relief clothing to Falfurrias, Texas, where one of our girls is serving as a B.V.S. worker. Our young people also collected food for the relief center at New Windsor.—Mrs. June Dishong, Johnstown, Pa.

Eastern Maryland

Westminster—Our spring council was held March 20, with Elder John H. Eberly in charge. Norman O. Rebert, Jr., a student at Bridgewater College, was licensed to the ministry. Delegates to Annual Conference are Jacob and Leah Zigler

CAMP WORSHIP

Enrich camp worship this year with ideas gleaned from the two titles suggested here.

Spiritual Values in Camping

Clarice M. Bowman

This is a handbook for better camping. The principles outlined and illustrated can be applied in any camp, private or public. The age span ranges from pre-teens to young adults.

What you will discover by the use of this book:

- How spiritual values in camping can be realized naturally and for the most part informally.
- How the camp setting can encourage the discovery of spiritual values.
- How the camp's activities and program can be tailor-made for the discovery of spiritual values.
- How camp counselors can be prepared for moments of spiritual awareness in campers.
- How camp personnel can share spiritual experiences.

The book is for camp directors and counselors. 256 pages $3.00

Worship Ways for Camp

Clarice M. Bowman

Worship is one absolute essential for a successful, meaningful camp experience. Sincerity is an absolute essential for successful worship. This book will provide guidance in the development of both. More than 200 worship aids—graces, benedictions, Scripture readings, offerings, dedication, prayers, and poems, all carefully selected and edited in the language of the camper. Many were actually written and used by camp counselors. 192 pages $3.00 and our pastor, Bro. Harold Z. Bomberger. Our church participated in the county religious census and the visitation evangelism campaign. Special family fellowship services were sponsored by the official board and the board of Christian education. Christian Families Look at Brotherhood, was the theme for February with Mr. Samuel Jenness, superintendent of the schools, as guest speaker for the adult group. Special programs were planned for the various age groups. The theme for the March service was Christian Families Look at World Responsibilities. Brother and Sister Harper Will of South Bend, Ind., were with us and showed slides of their recent trip to Puerto Rico. The women's fellowship sponsored the family night in March. At the family fellowship service in May, Judge James E. Boylan of our city was guest. A dedication service was held for the new senior and junior choir robes. Special services were held during Holy Week and our church was host to the Good Friday community service. On April 24 twenty-one were baptized and thirteen received by letter into our church. —Ruth H. Royer, Westminster, Md.

First Virginia

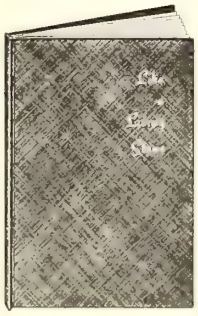
Ninevah—A new roof has been put on our church. We plan to continue the building program since we are having an increase in Sunday-school attendance. A special offering is received each month to promote this program. The ladies' aid is quilting and sewing for relief. Several of our ladies attended the women's work spring conference at Cloverdale. We observed a community World Day of Prayer. Our council met March 26, with Elder H. Allen Hoover in charge. Bro. E. J. Jacobs was chosen as pastor for another year. Pre-Easter services were held in our church.—Mrs. R. O. McGuire, Hardy, Va.

Second Virginia

Middle River—The women of the church met recently in an all-day meeting to sew for relief. Mission lessons were sponsored by the women. A family night supper was held in the social room. A mother and daughter banquet was held on May 12 with Mrs. Eva Bowman as speaker. Elder and Mrs. F. Y. Garber held open house one Sunday. Seven were baptized and five were received by letter into our church. Special recognition was given one Sunday for the older members of our congregation. On March 13 Lloyd Wakeman, who spent three years in Greece, was guest speaker. Pre-Easter services consisted of a sermon by the pastor, Bro. John Gosnell, the Dayton Octet and a musical dramatic presentation. On Good Friday evening we held our communion services. A number of babies were dedicated on Easter morning. Wayne Womer spoke on temperance, April 17. Our church has applied for an Italian refugee couple. At our last council we voted to build an addition to our church for Sunday-school rooms. Our pastor is delegate to Annual Conference. The men's work group has sent one heifer overseas and is planning to send two more, one to be given by an individual.—Mrs. Raymond F. Moore, Fort Defiance, Va.

Pocahontas, Durbin—Since January we have been having midweek prayer services with a different leader each week. Pastor W. E. Hamilton attended the spiritual life conference at Bridgewater, Va. Our communion service was held on April 7. The union Easter sunrise service was held in the Methodist church with our pastor as speaker. The Pocahontas County Ministerial fellowship held its April meeting in our church. Our new elder, Isaac J. Garber of Bridgewater, Va., presided at the business meeting for our congregation which was held in the New Hope church, April 15. Our pastor and his wife were elected delegates to Annual Conference. The women's work group made comforters for relief and gave a ten-dollar contribution to the General Brotherhood Fund and five dollars to the Red Cross. Three women from our church attended the women's work conference held in the Staunton church.—Mrs. W. E. Hamilton, Durbin, W. Va.

First West Virginia



Bean Settlement—Race Relations Sunday was observed in our church with Principal Raymond Ratcliff from the Sanders Negro school at Moorefield as speaker; a chorus from the school presented several numbers of music. The youth group recently held a supper in the church basement. The Sunday school rendered an Easter program. The play, Read Me a Story, was also presented at this time. On April 17 Bro. Ervin Whitacre and Bro. Hubert Abe were present in behalf of the men's work. The women's work group made and donated a quilt to the Salem church community sale. The youth group donated two cases of canned goods for overseas relief.—Mrs. Evelyn Bean, Rock Oak, W. Va.

A Treasured Heritage

FROM one standpoint the meaning of Annual Conference can be conveniently symbolized by a picture like this one. It is the yearly occasion for passing on responsibility from one set of shoulders to another. Some faces are the same from year to year, but leadership is changing. Yet the church continues and the passing of the gavel from one moderator to another — in this case from A. Stauffer Curry to Paul M. Robinson — illustrates how a treasured heritage becomes a part of contemporary history.

Our readers have only to turn the page, however, to discover how manifold are the activities of an Annual Conference. No one person can absorb it all; the most faithful delegate will find in these news reports much that he missed at Grand Rapids. But in all the multiplicity of Brethren interests at Conference there was a common purpose to Seek First His Kingdom. We pray for the same seeking and the same priority in the entire life of our Brotherhood.

The Annual Conference "of the church meets annually to consider matters affecting the welfare of the whole church. The voting body consists of two sets of delegates, those from the districts, which make up Standing Committee, and those representing local congregations. All members of the Church of the Brethren present have full liberty to participate in discussions but only delegates vote."

Relativity

Your editorial on "No Hitching Post," in the May 21 edition of the Messenger was very interesting. Especially with reference to the late Dr. Albert Einstein and his theory of relativity. Even attempting to establish "hitching posts" — something to anchor our faith to — seems in a sense relative when we consider or think about God's great eternal over-all picture and cosmic plan. For example, the cosmology of Moses, with regard to the universe was a primitive concept and relative. In his universe, the sun was commanded to stand still; his earth was flat. Angels stood on the four corners of the earth. Moses' concept of the universe, first advanced in the Old Testament about the year 1000 B.C., and fully believed in by the ancient Jews and the early Christian church, continued in existence until shaken by the theories advanced by Copernicus about 1500 A.D.

We observe relativity wherever we look. Suppose we mix coal with flour and observe the mixture. It would look to be gray in color; not black or white. Yet a bacteria germ crawling through the mixture would see only black boulders and white boulders. To the microbe, the mixture is not gray at all — the question is relative. To man the earth seems very large with a diameter over 7,000 miles, but how about the great star Antares with a diameter of over 400,000,000 miles; if super-imposed on the sun it would reach out and envelop a great portion of our solar system, absorbing the earth, moon and several of the near planets. Again, size is merely relative. Bigness and smallness is only true in relation to what we compare it.

Albert Einstein was not an infidel as labeled recently by one of our cosmopolitan newspapers. The doctor once said that no astronomer could view the heavenly pageantry at night and not believe in God or a divine purpose. Note this statement from the great Einstein:

"The most beautiful and most profound emotion we can experience is the sensation of the mystical. It is the source of all true science. He to whom this emotion is a stranger, who can no longer wonder and stand rapt in awe, is as good as dead. To know that what is impenetrable to us really exists, manifesting itself as the highest wisdom and the most radiant beauty which our dull faculties can comprehend only in their most primitive forms — this knowledge, this feeling, is at the center of true religiousness." — V. P. Mock, Chippewa Falls, Wis.

"Maintaining Rural Values"

In Bro. Elrod's article (Gospel Messenger, May 14) he stated that land distribution is one of the world's biggest problems. In America we have the national machinery in the anti-trust laws to attack the problem. In Kansas a graduated land tax proposed by the Farmers Union (one of the big three farm organizations) has been hailed by the local Kansas City, Kansas, newspaper as a social measure worthy of consideration. It is designed to reverse the population trend; which by the way has already been reversed according to the latest U.S. Census, published May 12.

And as for maintaining "these values" in the city — the issue is the same — keep to smaller organizations as much as possible. The way again is through anti-trust laws, with more support from church organizations if they can see the relationship between "these values" and such laws.

As for the Church of the Brethren, Richard Gregg in his article, "Pacifism 1950" (Gospel Messenger) says we should get back to smaller organizations of all sorts. — John W. Hall, Jr., Kansas City, Kansas.

The Mission of the Church

Why not start a Ten Dollar Club for the work among our colored brethren? If the Church of the Brethren misses this opportunity to practice what she preaches on race equality, she surely will be missing a call of God to take the gospel to those who have asked for it. Did Peter hesitate when the call came from Cornelius?—Mrs. Albert Applegarth, Wawneta, Nebr.

To Be Commended

I wish to express to you and your paper my appreciation for the article in the May 28 issue entitled "What Every Person Should Know About Organs." Mrs. Crill is to be commended for presenting such a fine discussion without becoming technical and losing the interest of the average reader.

As an organist, I found the material very interesting and most encouraging to one in my position.— Mrs. J. Cecil Armey, Fresno, Calif.

Annual Conference is for inspiration

The Task of the Church

In spite of pre-Conference meetings which have absorbed the energies of many there is always an air of expectancy pervading the first general session of Conference. Many of the 2,600 already registered had been in the pastors' retreat all day and had heard the speaker of the evening give three addresses.

In his last address of the day Dr. Joseph Jackson, pastor of the Olivet Baptist church in Chicago, Illinois, considered the Task of the Church in This Hour of Crisis. In the twentieth century, man, said Dr. Jackson, has looked to science as savior and deliverer; man has asked science to build a new world. Through science man has been given confidence and power. But with the unleashing of the resources of the atom and the use of these resources for destruction man has discovered that he is not wise enough or strong enough to save himself.

The speaker then pointed to the uncertainty and dread and confusion prevalent today. He especially noted how divided we in the United States are; we fight all over the world for freedom and democracy and are divided at home about the value of democracy for all citizens.

What is the task of the church in times like these? asked Dr. Jackson. The task is twofold, according to the speaker; first, the church must be the church. It must continue to proclaim its message of a Christ who saves and redeems though it may mean persecution and even death for those who preach the gospel. The church must ever confront men with God, for without a personal experience with God, men have no power.

The second task of the church today, the speaker went on, is to build bridges of friendship between the hostile factions in society. No longer can Christians keep the gospel within the four walls of the church; they must take it to where men work and live. The church must preach peace and justice; it must create a public opinion that will help statesmen to walk uprightly.

Above all, declared Dr. Jackson, we must believe that we owe Christ something for what he has done for us. In a deeply moving story from his own experience he illustrated this. Growing up in a poor farm home in Mississippi he wanted to become a preacher and that meant getting an education. The family helped him to get to college but there came a time when money was exhausted and the family was deeply in debt. His mother then put into his hand sixty-five dollars, the savings of a lifetime, with the admonition to study. What an ingrate he would be, said Dr. Jackson, if he did not preach the gospel, realizing what his mother had done for him. So we owe to Jesus much for his sacrifice for us.

On June 24 Dr. Jackson leaves for a five-week preaching mission in England. Then, by invitation from Christians in Russia, he will be preaching in that country, August 3-18, with three other Baptist ministers. Dr. Jackson asserted that he was not going to Russia to talk politics or economics but to represent Christ; his only purpose in going was to preach the gospel.

An innovation at this Conference was a daily news sheet which carried the many announcements that are always necessary in such a gathering. Its main intent was to keep announcements at meetings to the absolute minimum, for which Conference goers will be grateful.

The Moderator Speaks

THE day of many meetings which centered on the various aspects of the church's program was behind us. As the hour drew near for the official opening of Annual Conference the floor of the auditorium filled rapidly as did also the lower balcony. It was beginning to appear like a big Conference.

The call to worship by Alternate Moderator Paul M. Robinson and by the choir quieted the waiting congregation. Adding richness to our worship experience was the anthem sung by the choir, Seek Ye The Lord, by Roberts. Nevin Fisher of the Elizabethtown College music department was soloist.

Each year the Brethren Church has present at our Conference a fraternal delegate and the Church of the Brethren sends one to the Brethren Conference in August. Rev. W. B. Brant, pastor of the Vinco church in Pennsylvania and moderator of the Brethren Church, was present this year and brought greetings from our sister church.

Tonight was the moderator's night—the time when he brings to the Conference his considered thinking on trends in the church and some future paths the church might take. This year's moderator, A. Stauffer Curry, had chosen to consider the church in the stream of history.

Since Bro. Curry's address has already appeared in full in a previous Gospel Messenger, it is not our purpose to give here a detailed summary of it but just a brief outline, urging you to turn to the June 25 issue and to read it if you have not already done so.

Outlining the currents in which the church moves today, he mentioned first the rapidly growing population which means new churches if we are to keep pace with the increase. Many children will be needing our best resources in Christian education through the church school and institutions of higher learning. Also the many unchurched and the inactive church members require a more effective witness.

The next current Bro. Curry pointed out was that of rising national consciousness. This new pride in sovereignty makes nations react against anything foreign including mission and relief work. Furthermore, totalitarian influence is spreading. The speaker indicated that the Christian church is also meeting the challenge of revived national religions, especially Mohammedanism and Hinduism.

Another characteristic of the point in history in which the church finds itself are the growth of the power to build greater weapons of war and of the awareness of war's futility; yet another characteristic is the trend toward more religious activity and opposed to that, a growing secularism.

The figure of a lighthouse was used by Bro. Curry to indicate the church's function today. The lighthouses offered by the church are a continued awareness of the salvation of God through Christ, a community of redeemed followers of Christ and God's eternal kingdom.

Following Jesus Today

THE invitation to follow Jesus is a refrain from all the four gospels, but what did men find when they followed him for a variety of reasons long ago? What does it mean to follow Jesus today?

Dr. Harold A. Bosley, pastor of the First Methodist Church in Evanston, Illinois, and speaker for the Thursday evening session, in an effective manner set forth the meaning of discipleship for Christians today. Those who first came to Jesus found a man at peace with God, a man at peace with other men, a man at peace with himself, a man who had a message all his own and who offered a hard choice with his invitation. The pivotal word in his invitation is the word deny.

Jesus' teachings seem so hard because he spelled out the implications of what he meant by loving God and one's neighbor as oneself. He promised power to those who would follow him. As he overcame the world he expected them to overcome the world.

The difficulty of following Jesus is illustrated by our failures in forgiveness. The speaker emphasized that Jesus taught unlimited forgiveness. If we would follow Jesus today we must implement his teaching. "There is no justification for retaliation, either in individual experience or in a national policy of massive retaliation. It is evil from the inside out."

The Christian religion, said Dr. Bosley, has been a hard ethical taskmaster. Some Christians feel that they must equate the will of God with something less than the kingdom of God. Others find that when they give up lesser loyalties they take a new lease on life.

Will churches be able to follow Christ? This also is a hard question. They are tempted to institutionalize their practices and lose contact with Jesus' spirit. We have "no greater responsibility than to saturate ourselves with Christ's spirit that he may come alive in our churches." These churches must become centers of a true internationalism, for we are committed to a gospel that includes all men. Our preaching must be open to all and not closed to any. Our task is to try to build the kind of world in which everyone feels at home.

Two articles by Dr. Bosley which have appeared recently in these pages contain other of his comments on the importance of following Jesus today. He was introduced to the Conference by Dr. V. F. Schwalm, who served as chairman and worship leader.

This year's moderator, A. Stauffer Curry (left), and the newly elected moderator, Paul M. Robinson, meet two previous moderators, D. W. Bittinger (second from right) and W. M. Beahm

"Deep Are the Roots"

DEPARTING from the usual evening program on Friday, the Conference Program Committee this year arranged for the McPherson College Players to give the play they had given at the Western Region conference last fall. We are sure that reactions to the play were both favorable and unfavorable for it dealt with a highly controversial subject, the race question. The playwrights' preface says: "What you will find in this play, since it presents you no happy answer, will depend largely upon yourself—whether, upon thinking it over, you prefer a world of racial superiority with the cruelties and dishonesties which such a world ultimately imposes or whether maybe you'd like some changes made."

The action revolves about the return of a Negro American soldier, Brett Charles, to the household in which his mother was a servant and in which he had grown up. Here we find epitomized all the attitudes toward the Negro, from that of considering him a little less than human, through a paternalism which improves his condition but keeps him dependent to simple friendship which accepts him as a person. The Negro's acceptance of his inferior position because of fear of the results if he questions or attempts to change it are clearly shown. Also set forth are his resentment and his desire to be accepted for his worth.

Directed by Mrs. Wilbur Yoder, head of the college speech and drama department, the actors ably portrayed their difficult roles.

A panel of young people at the sectional meeting of youth and adult leaders of youth held Wednesday morning of Annual Conference

Youth and the Cross

THERE was an "accent on youth" in the Saturday evening service. As a prelude to the regularly planned program the Manchester College choir, directed by Clyde Holsinger, presented a brief concert of sacred numbers. These worshipful selections offered both classic and contemporary anthems and included two familiar Negro spirituals.

Another unusual feature of the evening was the acceptance by Moderator Curry, on behalf of the Church of the Brethren, of a gift of gratitude from the Federal Republic of Germany. W. Harold Row explained that the pair of altar candlesticks in use at the service and the ten paintings on exhibit at Conference were gifts from the German government in recognition of the help given by Brethren churches to the rehabilitation of that country. As the candles were lighted all persons who had served since the war as volunteers or service workers in Germany stood in their places throughout the auditorium.

"I Know a Name" was the theme of a Biblical worship service presented by the young people. Using a speech choir in the rear of the auditorium, a group of trumpeters on the platform and the interpretative reading of Scripture by Vernard Eller as narrator, the service presented a challenging appeal to young and old to follow Christ today. The calls of God that came to Moses, Isaiah, Jeremiah and Simon Peter were dramatically set forth in a manner that commanded a new sense of devotion to Jesus Christ and his kingdom.

Robert Richards, whom young people everywhere would recognize as an Olympic pole vaulter, was introduced to Brethren youth simply as the pastor of the Long Beach church. He began by distinguishing two kinds of Christianity, with or without a cross. In our day religion is popular, it is in the news, but it is largely religion without a cross. For this reason so much popular religion is powerless, having little effect in transforming life.

For Jesus the cross was central. He knew that God's will for his life required that he face the cross. His central message affirmed that suffering love redeems; it provides the only way that evil can be overcome. The cross indicated the way by which sin could be eliminated. Because Jesus accepted the cross, human life can be redeemed and history is altered.

Yet not only Jesus but all men, continued the speaker, should live and walk in the light of the cross. If Jesus were preaching today he would again say, "Sell what you have, take up your cross and follow." Today we have a choice between taking up the cross or suffering the consequences of sin and evil in the world. Either we suffer for the right or we suffer because of wrong. Either we deny ourselves for the good, or we are forced to give up many things because of the results of evil. If we refuse to give our lives for his sake, we eventually lose them in the destruction that follows from evil.

The cross is still the greatest power in the world. The church today could become as powerful as the New Testament church by taking the way of the cross. It gives power over sin, it enables us to stand up for unpopular convictions, it encourages us to witness and evangelize, it provides the solution for social problems because only at the cross can all races and peoples come together.

After telling the story of several well-known young people who denied themselves for the sake of living as Christians, Bro. Richards concluded by urging young people to make a dedication of their lives to the way of the cross. Quite a large number of young persons quietly stood to indicate their act of consecration.

Annual Conference is for Transacting the Business of the Church

WITH the singing of the two hymns usually used at the first business session of Conference, For Christ and the Church and I Love Thy Kingdom, Lord, and the reading of the account of the Jerusalem council as recorded in Acts 15, Conference was ready to take up the business. From Monday to Wednesday Standing Committee of eighty-eight representatives from the districts had considered the business coming from local churches through the district, from Conference-appointed committees and from the General Brotherhood Board.

The delegate body (the Credentials Committee reported 937 in addition to Standing Committee) filled the front half of the great auditorium; Standing Committee was seated on the platform with the officers of Conference.

One of the most eagerly awaited items of business is always the appointments for the various offices and committees of the church and the nominations for moderator and General Brotherhood Board vacancies. The appointments as approved and the results of the election are given in a separate column.

The only other business was approval of Standing Committee request to discontinue the Committee on Understanding and Reconciliation. If need arises during the year the officers of Conference are empowered to appoint another committee.

The delegates heard A. J. Metzler, manager of the Mennonite Publishing House at Scottdale, Pennsylvania, and moderator of the Mennonite General Conference. He brought greetings from his church. At the beginning of the afternoon session Dr. T. K. Thompson, director of the department of stewardship and benevolence of the National Council of Churches, also spoke briefly to the entire Conference.

Duties of a Local Church Moderator

What is the function of an elder today? The question came originally in a query from the Second District of Virginia to the 1952 Conference. A committee of five was appointed to the task of making a study and reporting the next year. Their report, though comprehensive, did not pretend to answer all the questions raised and the committee was continued for another year. Last year they presented their recommendations in more detail, only to have the paper recommitted to an enlarged committee. It was this new committee's report that became the business of this year's Conference.

S. Earl Mitchell, chairman of the most recent committee, explained that their report dealt only with one phase of the problem, that of the duties and relationships of the moderator of the local church. He reminded the delegates that former Conference decisions had given laymen the right to serve as moderator. The new recommendations, he believed, were in keeping with past actions. He moved the adoption of the report.

As debate on the report continued three amendments were adopted and two other proposed amendments failed to gain support, although one of them lost by only three votes.

A number of comments were made by delegates both supporting and opposing the report. A few Brethren felt that it would change the character of the elders' body in many districts. As one brother expressed it, "Let the elders' body be the elders' body." Others contended that the idea of opening the membership of the elders' body to include others who served as moderators of local churches was not at all revolutionary. They pointed to the fact that there were fourteen lay members on Standing Committee this year.

The report was adopted by the voice vote of a strong majority of delegates. It provides for further study of the ministry, which may bring other answers to the question of what an elder's function is. The committee to make such a study includes James Elrod, chairman, Floyd Mallott, T. F. Henry, J. H. Mathis and J. A. Robinson.

General Brotherhood Board Report

The order for the day at the beginning of the Friday morning business session called for the report of the General Brotherhood Board. At this time members of the Board and members of the general staff and the regional staff sat in a group on the platform. They were introduced to the Conference by Norman Baugher, general secretary.

A comprehensive report of the year's activities and complete, audited financial reports of Board and Brethren Publishing House operations were printed in several pages in the Conference booklet. Instead of reading these reports in detail, Calvert N. Ellis, chairman of the Board, called attention to the major responsibilities of the Board as it administers the program of the Brotherhood. He reminded delegates that the Board was guided in its decisions by the desires of the church. An opportunity was given for any one to ask questions concerning the Brotherhood program.

A carefully prepared study of the camping program was presented by a committee appointed two years ago. The report, which was unanimously adopted, contained a thorough study of Brethren camps. Among the specific recommendations were several that should be of special interest to local church leaders. The report urged that each church provide one leader for each four or five campers it sends to camp. As a minimum goal the report recommended that each church try to provide at least a one-week camping experience for each member of the church school at some time during his childhood or youth. Day camps and local church camps were suggested as means of strengthening the program of Christian education.

Without discussion on the part of delegates three other reports, one of them merely a report of progress, were quickly accepted. These were the review of the statement of ministerial placement and policy, the manner of reporting names and membership in the Yearbook, and the question of developing a Brethren center in Washington. No attempt will be made to develop a special Brethren center in connection with our church in Washington, but the Board was encouraged to think further concerning the need for having a denominational representative in Washington.

In addition to hearing a report from representatives to the National Council of Churches, delegates were privileged to listen to a brief address by Eugene Carson Blake, president of the National Council. He brought greetings also from the World Council of Churches.

Dr. Blake spoke of the "Call to Mission and Unity" issued by the World Council and the International Missionary Council. The call is significant because it attempts to express a double truth. To win the world to Jesus Christ we need a united witness.

In clearing up some misunderstandings about the function of ecumenical councils, Dr. Blake said, "The day of ecumenical coercion is past." Christians should try to learn from each other and they must respect the convictions of others. It is neither the aim or the hope of the National Council or the World Council to become a super-church. The leadership of these groups attempt to spread a common witness in areas of agreement on Christian convictions. We must be willing, said the speaker, to lose ourselves in something bigger, if that is God's will for us, so that the life of Christ may be in man and known through the church.

Olin Krehbiel, pastor of an Indiana Mennonite church and moderator of the General Conference Mennonites, was present at the opening of the Friday afternoon session. He spoke briefly of building bridges of fellowship between church groups.

Because there had been time in the morning only to present the report of the committee studying a memorial at Schwarzenau, that report was the first item of business. The delegates approved the erection of a suitable marker in Schwarzenau to be dedicated in 1958. Also approved as a part of the same report was a gift of about $15,000 toward the cost of a public school at Schwarzenau to be known as the Alexander Mack school.

The Fraternal Relations Committee, besides giving a resume of their work during the year, called upon "local churches, districts and other church units to enter into co-operative activities with other Brethren groups wherever possible." In connection with this report Conference gave approval to the request of Standing Committee for exploration of closer relations with non-Brethren groups of similar beliefs.

Two other reports were approved without discussion: those of the Ministerial and Missionary Pension Board and Bethany Biblical Seminary.

Resolutions

An expanded exchange program "which will make possible contacts with the Chinese, the Russians and all other people for the purpose of mutual acquaintance and sharing" was proposed in the resolutions adopted at this Friday afternoon session. Since the resolutions will appear soon in this paper we shall mention only a few here. They urged that "Christians from all countries be allowed to visit each other." A vote of confidence was given to young men of draft age who choose alternative service. The delegate body also approved the acceleration of refugee resettlement, commended efforts of the administration to bring about "peaceful negotiations between peoples and nations," viewed with concern the growing influence of second-class literature and horror and crime comics, and pledged its churches "to serve more effectively and courageously the needs of our local communities."

At the opening of the Saturday morning business session a recognition service was held for the forty-seven ministers who had died since last Conference.

Before the scheduled items of business were taken up a representative from the American Bible Society and one from the American Leprosy Mission spoke briefly of the work in their respective fields. The Church of the Brethren has given some funds to these organizations for a number of years. In turn the American Leprosy Mission has given support to the leprosarium at Garkida, Nigeria.

The last report, that of Bethany Hospital, was quickly accepted.

Foreign Mission Policy and Strategy

One of the most important papers to come before Conference in recent years was that on foreign mission strategy and policy, which the delgate body enthusiastically endorsed. After analyzing the important factors in our present world situation and reviewing present mission work, the paper considered future policy and strategy. Six objectives were listed and enlarged upon. The churches abroad are encouraged to assume financial and administrative responsibility as rapidly as possible and to affiliate with the over-all Protestant body in their areas in order to make a more effective witness. More and more responsibility is to be placed in the hands of national Christians, recognizing that more leaders must be trained and missionaries be prepared psychologically to surrender responsibilities. Missionaries are urged to be constantly on the alert to discover new ways to strengthen the national churches. The training of properly qualified leaders must be the first call upon the missionary's time and energy, the missionary teaching, counseling and fellowshiping with national Christians. It is contemplated that the training of these leaders will be done in co-operation with other Christian bodies.

Missionaries will be selected carefully. Only those willing to be counselors, advisers and colleagues working with or under nationals at any task will be considered. Above all, they "must be free from any feeling of racial superiority in any form."

Seeking to increase a sense of oneness of the Christian church is another objective listed. Missionaries are not to transplant denominational rivalries into mission lands.

Conference next approved a study of the Credentials Committee. Rufus B. King, chairman, Clarence Fike and Moyne Landis were named to make the study.

Referred to the General Brotherhood Board were two queries on the term of service of and selection of members to Standing Committee. The study of the distribution and use of Annual Conference Resolutions was also assigned to the Board.

Two other committees were authorized. DeWitt Miller, W. Newton Long and Clarence Sink will study the selection and tenure of members of the General Brotherhood Board. Charged with the responsibility of discovering "the official position and practices of the church in its full ministry and education in peace and brotherhood" are W. Harold Row, chairman, Hylton Harmon, Lorell Weiss, Jacob Dick and J. Herbert Miller.

Just as recent Conferences have been assigned the task of defining the work of elders and moderators, this year's Conference was asked to provide for a study of the office and duties of deacons and their wives. In response to two queries, Conference voted to assign this new study to a committee composed of the following: Edward K. Ziegler, chairman, Earl Bowman, William Beahm, Russell West and Willard Powers.

With but little discussion an amendment was approved with relation to the Pension Plan (ministers have already been informed of its provisions) and an action was taken providing for accident insurance for all who attend Annual Conference.

One query that prompted unusual interest originated with the National Youth Cabinet. Through the Brotherhood Board they asked permission to omit the printed lesson text from the Brethren Youth Quarterly. Their purpose was to encourage greater use of the Bible itself as the text in youth classes. Standing Committee proposed that some liberty be given the editor of the quarterly but urged the inclusion of some Scriptural portions. The young people came forth with a substitute proposal in line with their original request. This was considered as an amendment but it was in turn amended. To resolve the situation, Conference permitted a committee to withdraw for a few minutes and return with a statement that proved satisfactory to all. The effect is to develop the quarterly as a Bible guide with the Bible itself becoming the text. The memory selection and whatever other scripture seems appropriate will be reprinted in the quarterly. Sunday schools are urged to provide Bibles for classroom use.

Stewardship

Before the Brotherhood Fund goal for the new year was introduced as a matter of business, delegates considered an outline for a stewardship education program as proposed by Standing Committee. Looking toward a greatly increased Brotherhood Fund goal for the anniversary year in 1958, the proposal calls for an enlarged stewardship program and sets definite goals for every church and for each individual. Churches are urged to conduct every-member visitations and to give at least as much in outreach as is spent locally. Individuals are asked to give a minimum of $2 per week for every $1,000 of annual income and to use envelopes for weekly giving.

After this proposed emphasis was unanimously adopted, delegates proceeded to approve a goal of $1,325,000 for the coming year. In the closing moments of the business period the Conference approved the appointment of five missionaries, heard greetings from foreign fields and approved the sending of letters to President Eisenhower and Secretary Harold Stassen concerning the urgency of working for disarmament and peace.

Conference is for Bible Study

The Kingdom We Seek

WHAT does the New Testament say concerning the kingdom of God which, according to our Conference theme, should be sought first of all? The Bible hour periods at Grand Rapids were planned to encourage study of the parables of Jesus that set forth the kingdom we seek.

Nine of the parables of the kingdom had been selected as the basis for Bible study at Conference. The texts of these passages were printed in the Conference Booklet so that every person in attendance might have them available for study. The general topic was developed in four successive addresses, dealing with commitment to the kingdom, its growth, its work and its consummation. Each presentation was made by a Brethren college professor whose field was Biblical interpretation. These messages will appear shortly as a series of articles in the Gospel Messenger.

Robert A. Byerly, professor at Elizabethtown College, spoke on Wednesday morning on three parables concerning the response of men to the kingdom of God. He suggested four principles in dealing with the parables of Jesus that should be helpful in their interpretation. They were related primarily to give one major message. They are brief stories, not to be taken as allegories, in which every detail is symbolic, but as illustrations of one predominant idea. They were given for life, not to establish a particular dogma. It is important to recognize that Jesus did not condone the action of all persons about whom he spoke.

The parables of the hidden treasure, the pearl of great price and the sower are stories emphasizing personal commitment. The person is the unit of activity in responding to the kingdom. Some people came upon the kingdom as a surprise and a discovery. Their response is to set aside other plans in order to claim it for themselves. Others find the kingdom as the result of searching. When they find this pearl of great price, they sell everything else in order to grasp it. Still others may resemble the various kinds of soil where the seed of the Word of God falls. The story of the sower emphasizes that God must have all of us. We are called to commit our lives to him and to serve Jesus Christ and his kingdom.

How does the kingdom grow? In answer to this question Dr. R. H. Miller, professor at Manchester, examined three familiar parables of Jesus: the parable of the earth producing of itself, the parable of the mustard seed and the parable of the leaven.

Since the kingdom may be defined as the reign of God, its growth includes the increase of good, righteousness and love in the earth. Growth is a miracle, but there are certain attitudes that are its enemies, such as the desire to impose our own specifications for growth on others or the inclination to restrain growth in others, to keep them small, because of selfish reasons.

Growth is a miracle because of God's own creative being. Dr. Miller emphasized the teaching of the parable that "the earth produces of itself." There is an automatic factor in the earth God made that is favorable to growth. Therefore, the seed is potentially a harvest, the flour is potentially a loaf of bread, the kingdoms of this world are potentially the kingdom of God. What is guaranteed is that his kingdom will eventually triumph. This parable teaches us humility, hope and tolerance.

Jesus' story of the mustard seed, said the speaker, points to the visible, institutional aspect of growth. "Every good deed is part of the kingdom of God," yet good works are always beset by snares to evil. On the other hand, Jesus' story of the leaven emphasizes the inward character of the kingdom. The leaven was hidden. Fundamental good increases by infiltration. The leavening power of the gospel ranges far beyond institutional limits. Each of us can hide in the world a bit of God's leaven and can discover the miracle of growth in his kingdom.

The third Bible hour message was based on the parable of the talents and was brought by Burton Metzler. Bro. Metzler pointed out after describing the three steps in this parable—entrusting the money, managing the money and settling accounts—that the focus is on the importance and necessity of faithful work in the kingdom.

The speaker observed that this parable says to us that abilities and opportunities are thrust upon us and with them come responsibilities that we cannot escape. It can also be noted that endowments differ. But this should not make one with more feel superior or the one with less envious for each shall be held accountable for what he does with what he has.

There is no room in the kingdom of God for the fearful, the cowardly or the lazy. One talent is as important as five if it is used faithfully. God judges each individual on what he was given, not in comparison to what others have done. In conclusion, Bro. Metzler said that the time to be faithful in the work of the kingdom is now.

"The hope of a future where things are straightened out gives us the courage to go on." With these words Dr. Marshall R. Wolfe introduced the final Bible hour study on the subject of the consummation of the kingdom.

The Biblical basis of this topic included two more parables, the parable of the tares and the weeds and the parable of the last judgment. The first of these may have come in answer to the normal reaction: "Yes, the kingdom it at hand, but look at the world." The same question arises today. The world is so full of evil. But although evil can condition the world, it cannot defeat the good. God is still growing his kingdom. Though evil has its day, the parable insists that it will also have its end.

What is the principle by which God will sort out evil from the good? The parable of the last judgment gives the answer: on the basis of simple goodness. Simple goodness begins when a person accepts Christ. The consummation comes for us when we are counted enough like Christ to go home and be with him. The future, said Bro. Wolfe, is in God's hands. In his own good time he will bring about victory over evil.

Every man must build his eschatology (his view of final things) upon his conception of God. We cannot conceive of God as ending the world in a carnage of battle and blood. Our understanding of the end of all things should be in keeping with our understanding of the God whom Jesus revealed to us. It is wise of Christians not to worry about the mechanics of the future. We can rest assured that it is in God's hands.

Worship leaders for the four Bible periods were Robert E. Martin, Harold Z. Bomberger, J. Herbert Miller and Ralph W. Anderson.

Special Interests at Conference

Adult Work

Adult activities at Conference time take many forms. There are meetings for men, meetings for women, meetings for homemakers and special training sessions for all kinds of adult leaders.

At the beginning of the sectional conference period on Wednesday, men and women came together in the large auditorium to hear Dr. C. Ernest Davis present Some Social Factors Affecting Adult Work. He presented the results of a number of studies showing that there are thirteen and one-half million adults enrolled in Sunday schools — the greatest educational enterprise at present time in North America. He pointed up the wide range of ages in adult work and noted that population is rapidly increasing among those over sixty-five.

"We are all ministers," said Edward K. Ziegler in discussing the topic, Making Your Vocation Christian. For Christians there is no such thing as secular work. All work gives an opportunity for Christian witness. We cannot afford to work at "trivial" jobs, since every significant job can be one in which to glorify God and witness for him.

Women's Work

Annual Conference provides an opportunity for the women's work organization to hold a regular business session. Mrs. Paul Halladay, chairman, presided at the Wednesday morning period in the Civic Auditorium.

Norman Baugher, general secretary of the Brotherhood Board, announced the termination of Ruth Shriver's work as director of women's work and read an expression of appreciation that had been prepared by the Brotherhood Board. Miss Shriver is completing twenty-eight years of service to the staff, the first nineteen in children's work, the last nine in women's work and home and family life. Anna Warstler, a missionary to India, has accepted the responsibility as director of women's work for a two-year period, beginning in September.

Elected to membership on the National Council of Women's Work were Mrs. Clifton Crouse from the Southeastern region, who will be director of aid service; and Mrs. Lynn Blickenstaff from the Pacific Coast region, who will be home-builders director. A goal of $55,000, which will go to the support of the entire Brotherhood program, was set for the year beginning Oct. 1.

Mrs. Leland Brubaker, who accompanied her husband on a deputation visit to Nigeria, spoke to the women concerning Nigeria as "our responsibility and opportunity." She called attention particularly to the needs and problems of women in Nigeria. She commented on the low standard of living and the fact that families do not eat together, that social pressure may keep even Christian families from eating together. According to Sister Brubaker there are opportunities to work through the government and our mission has received thanks for the work that has already been done.

We have the technical know-how to relieve many of the ills of Africa. We can educate the children of Africa since only ten per cent of the people in Nigeria can read and write. Our missionaries teach religion in the school. There is also an opportunity to help in agriculture, to provide better food, more vegetables and fruits. The speaker concluded with a challenge to women to give more to face up to these responsibilities.

At the Thursday morning post-breakfast conference for district and regional women's work officers, Mrs. Paul Halladay led the devotional meditation and presented the spiritual enrichment materials for next year. The women's program in this area includes Bible study, prayer and seeking God's kingdom through worship, stewardship, evangelism and church loyalty.

How can we get women to accept more responsibility? In reply to this question Mrs. George Detweiler said that the women's work road is a road of awakening. It is also a road of commitment and a road of opportunity and responsibility. Those who accept responsibility and take this road should ask themselves such questions as these: Do I have a "holier than thou" attitude? Am I friendly? Am I willing to do all types of work? Can I control my tongue? Do we love all people as we work with them? The women's work road is also a long-view road and a road of the loving heart. The latter referred to the time when women would be less active and may need to sit back and pray and work quietly.

Friday morning conference was planned for local, district and regional women's work officers. At this time members of the National Council presented various aspects of the women's work program. Mrs. Calvin Bright called attention to aims of missionary education and referred especially to mission study materials which were available for study in the coming year. The foreign mission theme for study is Christian Missions in a Revolutionary World. The home theme is The Indian American. In presenting the program in home and family life, Mrs. Nevin Zuck said that the modern challenge of motherhood is the same as it has always been—to be a godly woman. She suggested that in planning a women's work program we must find the needs of women in order to meet them. It is impossible to plan a canned program for this purpose. Ruth Shriver presented the material in the president's packet for use by local officers.

Men's and Women's Work Fellowship

R. E. Mohler, for twenty-five years executive secretary of Men's Work, was honored by the National Men's Work Cabinet at the fellowship luncheon of the men's and women's work. Besides a citation, read by Mark Roller of the cabinet, a gift of money was presented to Bethany Seminary in honor of Bro. Mohler. Ruth Shriver, who will be completing her work as director of women's work the last of October, was also recognized.

Shall we abolish the laity? Desmond W. Bittinger, in answering this question, said that Jesus had abolished the laity when he commanded them to go and preach and teach. Bro. Bittinger went on to mention some aspects of the laity's job. Included were the need to be on fire for God, to be examples in the home, to work willingly and zealously in the church, to extend Christian influence in the community and to spread the love of God everywhere that there may be no barriers.

Brethren Service

Sectional Meetings. Because of the many facets of Brethren Service two sessions were used to present by means of panels this area of the church's witness. The importance and necessity of the witness through service was set forth by Jacob T. Dick, recently returned to the States after serving as director of work camps in Germany, Ruth Early, assistant refugee resettlement, W. Ray Kyle, director of material aid and W. Harold Row, secretary of the Brethren Service Commission. Not only is material aid still needed in Europe but also the witness of Christian service. It was brought out that doors are about to open to areas behind the iron curtain and we must be ready to extend our areas of service.

A panel consisting of Harold Z. Bomberger, John H. Eberly, Ralph E. Smeltzer and E. Paul Weaver considered political action. They suggested various methods of making our views heard; through state and county organizations, through personal contacts with congressmen in our own homes or church, through visits, letters or telegrams to Washington, through forum periods, through study and discussion in congregations. It was pointed out that political action is another method of Christian action.

One of the problems facing the church today is that of our teenagers and the draft. William Everhart, Ivan Fry, Betty Lou Hershberger and Dan West discussed this problem. Many young men, they said, are not entering alternative service because the voice of the church on this issue is very weak. The church must let youth know what the opportunities are and how they can get into the program. Not only are young men concerned with alternative service; young women can influence decisions for the military or for alternative service. Some educators are advocating presenting all sides of the Selective Service Act to high school students to help them arrive at their decision.

Brethren Service Dinner. This particular gathering was called a Brethren Service family reunion by W. Harold Row, who introduced the staff and recognized all who had at some time participated in the service program. Group singing and two selections by a quartet were a prelude to the featured address. The speaker was Archibald J. Carey, Jr., lawyer in Chicago, Illinois, and delegate to the eighth Assembly of the United Nations.

By posing and answering a number of questions, Dr. Carey pointed out that the United Nations was an association of sixty nations located in four buildings in New York City, and operating through six major agencies and about twelve specialized agencies. One of the major agencies, the General Assembly, convenes annually in September. It is made up of ten delegates from each member nation.

Having dealt with the structure of the UN, the speaker went on to emphasize the importance of UN decisions though it has no enforcement powers. Its importance lies in the fact that the decisions of the UN are in the nature of moral judgments which are more and more influencing the governments of nations.

In answer to the question of withdrawal from the UN Dr. Carey stated that the United States cannot and must not withdraw from the UN. He gave two reasons for this answer: if the U.S. withdraws Soviet Russia will be the dominant power; secondly, the UN is the one place in the world where peoples of differing ideas and backgrounds can sit down together and attempt to build some semblance of unity.

The UN has only two major goals, declared Dr. Carey. They are to banish war and to secure the dignity of every individual in the world. Obviously these are long range and will not be accomplished immediately.

The nations within the UN are united on the need for a world organization, on an unrelenting pursuit of peace and on the idea that all men are created equal. The members of the UN are divided on the matter of leadership. Shall they follow Russia or the democracies led by the U. S.? The nations of the world are well aware that in the U. S. distinctions are made on other bases than character and achievement. Thus segregation and discrimination create a deep distrust of our country's professions of freedom. The only way to dispel this distrust is to make our democracy so complete, so compelling that the other nations will join us in building a better world.

Brethren Work Toward Racial Integration was the topic for discussion at a Brethren Service postbreakfast conference on Thursday morning. Participating in the panel discussion were Mary Leckrone Kuszmaul, Harold B. Statler and Rhett Petcher. In the development of the discussion the following ideas were set forth:

The church needs to serve its community regardless of the race of persons who live there. The Christian attitude is to look at a man as a man. One of the worst things that can happen is for emotions to become disturbed. It is necessary for a lot of quiet work to be done with individuals. However, the church must not be afraid to tackle the problem. Each situation may need to be handled in a different manner.

The problem of racially integrated churches will not be solved by white people alone. It must be a co-operative venture on the part of both races. We need to be thinking about these matters so that when people of other races come into our fellowships we will be prepared. Brethren need to learn how to include Spanish-speaking peoples in our fellowships.

The Friday morning postbreakfast subject was alternative service and draft counseling. Earl S. Garver served as chairman. On this panel the following participated: Paul Mason, Russell Bollinger, Issac Smith, Dean Broylen, and Ora Huston.

It was suggested that fellows making an appeal for I-O classification should be sure of their position, take the time necessary to get after it, prepare a statement to file and secure evidence from some who can vouch for their sincerity. The young man is often asked what he has done to witness to a CO position. It often helps if he has given some voluntary service. A pastor should have a speaking acquaintance with the draft board. A pastor should go to the board before one of his young men must appear.

It was suggested that the church should have a peace committee which would plan meetings for boys with sport activities followed by an educational program, including peace in all areas of moral living. At the same time the church should prepare materials intended for both boys and girls, since girls have much influence on the decisions that boys make.

On Saturday morning John Eberly was chairman for a discussion on International Goodwill Through Our Exchange Programs. Five exchange students who had lived in Missouri, Illinois, Pennsylvania, Ohio and Michigan were present. Host families in recent years were also introduced. It was reported that this was the sixth year that the high school student exchange, a total of 658 students, have been sponsored co-operatively with the State Department. Dr. and Mrs. William Beahm will be chaperoning the returning students this year. Three students will be coming from Latin American countries into our program. Those who attended the meeting were encouraged to write their congressmen saying that they are interested in seeing the program continued.

Home Missions—Urban and Rural

The two sectional conferences for leaders in rural and urban churches were listed under the heading of home missions, but the topics discussed would apply to practically every city and country church. Both sections presented a panel of pastors and fieldmen and utilized also the services of resource leaders. Both sectional meetings were well attended.

T. K. Thompson, director of the department of stewardship of the National Council of Churches, listed a number of the characteristics of city life that constitute a challenge for city churches. These problems can be met by a vital church program. Christian stewardship is the answer to trust in money values; fellowship will meet the impersonal quality of city life; Christian doctrine can offer help to those whose lives are meaningless; visitation evangelism will help in following population shifts; new churches are needed to help city and suburban Christians find deeper values for daily living.

In commenting on specific programs for the city church Gordon Bucher urged that stewardship be taught as giving to God, not as a means of raising funds. Donald Shank recommended fellowship evangelism, which he regarded as a "natural" for Brethren, as a means of reaching new families for Christ. Kurtis Naylor discussed the need for a vital worship experience that will satisfy persons with varied denominational backgrounds. He urged also that more responsibility be given to laymen. "When laymen start dreaming, the church comes alive." Harper Will suggested that commitment to Christ alone is the answer to secularism.

The section on rural churches considered ways of reaching the rural community. Norman Harsh, chairman, thought churches should be classified according to their outreach and local evangelism. Lyle Klotz pointed out many opportunities for community outreach and asked the group to consider which are the best ways of reaching the community. Samuel Harley indicated both negative and positive factors in reaching rural youth. He urged leaders to "capitalize on natural opportunities" that rural areas offer for creative youth activities.

Herbert Fisher described the "climate" that proves most helpful in reaching young adults. A large number of persons on boards and committees, fellowship evangelism, a variety of interest groups, the inclusion of families with small children in worship services — all of these contribute to creating such a climate. Joseph Piesen pointed out many reasons why members become active and suggested several methods for reactivating the inactive.

A former Brethren missionary who is now secretary of Agricultural Missions, Inc., Dr. I. W. Moomaw, told rural leaders that the great problems of the world today are rural problems, they are human problems and they are religious problems. He outlined five points of emphasis for the rural church: a stronger rural church program, including a higher quality of worship; a greater challenge to youth (of the 700 million young people in the world 66% are rural); a more vigorous concept of stewardship of God's gifts (one cubic inch of soil contains as many organisms as there are people in the world); a stronger rural ministry; and an outreach of mission and service to the world in which we live.

Family Life

The Wednesday afternoon family life sectional conference provided a triple feature plus lively discussion.

DeWitt L. Miller as speaker presented the subject, The Modern Family an Uncultivated Frontier. Bro. Miller pointed out that we have come to a common realization that family life of yesterday is a thing of the past and that we must dispense both with nostalgia about the past and with embarrassment about our present failings if we are to make real progress.

The pattern with dad as the benevolent dictator is thoroughly un-Christian, nor do we desire mother to assume this role. The third alternative of parents abdicating is equally undesirable. We reject also the pattern which implies that man's work is outside the home and woman's work within the home.

Today's families include 1,071,000 married teen-agers and the most mature teeners are not the ones who marry as teeners. We must provide the sort of society to which youth may be expected to adjust. He does not wish to conform to patterns of a society from which he has been excluded.

What may the church do? We can examine our present program to see whether they are really meeting the needs of families. We might disband the traditional Sunday school and provide a graded curriculum for the home, organize classes for parents,

Reviews of Recent Books

Books are reviewed here as a service to the church. A review does not necessarily constitute an unqualified recommendation. Purchase can be made through the Brethren Publishing House, Elgin, Illinois. Titles recommended for church libraries are marked with an asterisk (*).—Editor.

Gift From the Sea. Anne Morrow Lindbergh. Pantheon Books, Inc., 1955. 128 pages. $2.75

With feminine gentleness and dignity and poetic perception, Anne Morrow Lindbergh shares with the reading public her meditations during a two weeks' solitary vacation on a beach. She ponders on how to remain balanced in spite of the forces that tend to pull one off center. Wife of a famous husband, mother of five children and mistress of a well-established suburban home with all of its demands from the outer world, she makes visible the values of the inner life. She says a woman should spend some time during the year, some part of each week and each day alone in order to give herself purposefully and completely. In an erupting world, she concludes, the basic substance of life is in the here rather than in the there, in the now rather than in the future, in the individual rather than in the mass.—Edith Barnes.

William Tyndale. Cateau De Leeuw. Association Press, 1955. 125 pages. $2.00.

Joseph. Laura Long. Association Press, 1955. 126 pages. $2.00.

John the Baptist. Slater Brown. Association Press, 1955. 125 pages. $2.00.

Any Christian home with junior-high and youth members would do well to have these volumes replace its comic book and adventure story fare—and for that matter even the biographies of secular heroes (soldiers, explorers, scientists, politicians, etc.) Our young people are bound to become better Christians if their heroes are "Heroes of God."

Of the latest releases, "William Tyndale" is definitely the superior book, perhaps because his story is not well known and thus brings with it a freshness that the others do not have.

"John the Baptist" is good, though it does a much better job of transmitting the excitement of John's adventuresome career than of portraying his religious significance. It is very worth-while reading in any case.

"Joseph" is the weakest of the three. The Biblical facts are all there, but the personality of Joseph never comes alive. He is too much of a "goody-goody" who can do no wrong. However, even at their poorest, these books are vastly superior to much of the literature that is given our young people.—Vernard Eller.

Management of the Mind. Edward J. McGoldrick, Jr. Houghton, 1954. $3.00.

Taking a large number of unwanted down-and-out alcoholics, the author, at Bridge House in New York City, has developed techniques that have been successful in almost two thirds of the cases. This is an excellent percentage in view of most attempts.

The approach of Bridge House includes both a resident and an outpatient program. The basis of the therapy is an educational approach plus personal counseling based on the assumption that individuals have the will to overcome their problems but need knowledge of how to use the will power they have. Management of the Mind is the key to unlock the power to do that. The book also includes a series of exercises for use for twenty-one days to assist in the program.

It is excellent for use with alcoholics, families of alcoholics and each of us.—James Renz.

KINGDOM GLEANINGS

Elder Leander P. Kurtz, grandson of Henry Kurtz, the founder of our first church paper, died June 18, at the age of ninety-one. He had been living at Goshen, Ind.

"Elsie Shickel died at Vellore today," Kenneth McDowell of Bombay, India, wired the mission office on June 28. Sister Shickel had served the church in India since 1921.

Thousands of replies from many countries have come into the homes of Welsh children, in response to letters they wrote to celebrate World Goodwill Day on May 18. This was the 34th annual celebration of its kind by children of Wales.

The missionaries appointed by the Grand Rapids Conference, Iris Neff, Mr. and Mrs. Glenn Shank and Mr. and Mrs. Robert Swank, are attending the missionary training conference at Allegheny College, Meadville, Pa. They will be there until Aug. 4.

Classes and individuals are advised that they should not use the term squares on the customs declaration label when sending medical packets for our hospitals in Nigeria, W. Africa. The term bandages is more descriptive for custom purposes. A sheet of instructions regarding medical packets for Nigeria can be had on request to the Foreign Mission Office, 22 S. State St., Elgin, Ill.

Consolidated Finances is a paper describing a system of church finance of the Everett congregation, Pa., designed "to facilitate both the unity of the work and the individual efforts of the church organizations. Funds shall be consolidated and administered by one treasurer . . ." is in the description of the new plan which can be obtained by writing to the pastor, Robert G. Mock, 103 N. Spring St., Everett, Pa.

The General Board of the National Council of Churches is considering the advisability in sending a deputation of United States church leaders to Russia. The declared purpose would be to afford an exchange of views concerning the life and work of the churches in the two countries, including the efforts of the churches to achieve a just and durable peace. The proposal is in harmony with the actions of several constituent communions of the National Council.

The pastor of an interracial church in Los Angeles has said that his church has taken on new life since Negroes were admitted to active membership. He said, "Nothing but good has come of the move." McCarty Memorial Christian church in Los Angeles was faced with the problem in 1944 because of changing neighborhood conditions. Deciding to stay and operate on a desegregated basis, the church soon elected a Negro to its board of deacons. Today 52 of the 456 members are Negroes.

Making Evanston Local

AN ECUMENICAL conference is an end in itself. Evanston in particular was concerned to penetrate the life of the churches. In addition to the unprecedented provision for press and radio coverage, Evanston directed much of its thinking to later action by local churches and church members.

The Message of the Conference and the reports of most of the sections were "commended to the churches for study and appropriate action." More significant, the Assembly requested "that the churches report the results of their study and action to the Central Committee" of the World Council.

In the United States, the National Council of Churches has been asked to co-operate in the post-Evanston follow-up. One of the ways it has done so has been through study guides based on the Evanston finding. The most comprehensive of these booklets, Every Church and Evanston, is now off the press.

Prepared under the direction of a committee representing various units of the National Council and the social education and action secretaries of the member-churches, Every Church and Evanston is the result of wide consultation. Written not primarily for theologians or theological students, nor even for the average minister, but for the rank and file lay membership of the churches, it seeks to draw out the implications of the Evanston findings for local situations. It contains striking suggestions for local action as well as study.

Leaders of discussion groups using the material are reminded of the mandate of the Evanston Assembly requesting the churches to report their study and action and are asked to return the report form which is included in the booklet to the headquarters offices of their denominations. There has been no effort of similar scope in the ecumenical movement to involve groups from local churches in responsible participation in the ecumenical conversation.

Some will feel that, in the booklet, issues of social education and action are emphasized more strongly than issues of faith and order. The material, however, is in rough proportion to the material in the reports from Evanston itself. The preponderance of emphasis upon social issues points to a problem regarding the closer integration between life and work and faith and order with which the ecumenical movement will be dealing in the years ahead. The proposed World Council of Churches conference in the United States in 1957 on The Nature of the Unity We Seek will be a stage in this discussion.

Some may also question the basic value of study guides as a means of stimulation and education on ecumenical issues. This is an open question to which the experience with Every Church and Evanston may help to provide an answer.

This study booklet is launched with wide support in the churches and with strong endorsement from church leaders. Rt. Rev. Henry Knox Sherrill, as president of the United States Conference for the World Council of Churches, has written a foreword and Dr. Eugene Carson Blake, as president of the National Council of Churches, has written an introduction. Dr. Franklin Clark Fry, chairman of the Central Committee of the World Council, commends the booklet to the heads of the member churches in the United States.

Every Church and Evanston should help local congregations to consider the great issues of the faith which are engaging the churches of the world.

Quoted from an editorial in National Council Outlook, May 1955, Study Suggestions:

"Every Church and Evanston, along with the Evanston reports, makes an ideal quarter elective unit for adult and older youth church school classes or for a Sunday evening school of Our Church and Evanston. Why not try one of these study suggestions and, at the conclusion of your study, have the group fill out the findings report included in Every Church and Evanston" and send it to the Social Education Department, General Brotherhood Board, 22 S. State St., Elgin, Ill.

Copies of Every Church and Evanston, at 50c each, and copies of the Evanston Message and the six sectional reports on which Every Church and Evanston is based at a cost of only 20c in the Christian Century reprint are available from the social education department, at the address given above.

"You, Your Church and Your Job"

THE Evanston Assembly of the World Council of Churches gave emphatic highlighting to the layman as the "bridge" between the church and the world of daily work. These insights from the assembly have been interpreted in terms of the American layman and the American work scene in a six-session study guide under the title, You, Your Church, and Your Job.

For an adult study class, men's or women's group or other local group or committee wanting to know where to begin with the subject of religion and daily work, this provides a down-to-earth starting point for both individual study and group discussion. For others who have participated in daily work conferences or have used materials from the North American Lay Conference, the approach of Evanston presents a distinct next step both for study and for practical application to on-the-job choices of church people everywhere.

You, Your Church, and Your Job is a thirty-two page pamphlet with interpretive comment, discussion questions and suggestions for study and action in local groups. It also includes the text of the Evanston report on The Laity — the Christian in His Vocation. The guide is available from the Social Education Department, General Brotherhood Board, 22 S. State St., Elgin, Ill.

For a local church school of Christian Daily Work, this pamphlet is readily adaptable to a two-, three- or six-session presentation. The Evanston emphasis stresses the personal responsibility of lay men and women as representatives of the church in their own occupation spheres. Therefore, this new guide is recommended for personal reading during the summer by members of a group which plans to discuss it in fall and winter programs. We suggest its early distribution to encourage advance thought and study in this way.

A Tribute to Those Who Work Behind the Scenes

Esther Mohler
BVS'er in Kassel, Germany

AFTER we have seen a great play, what do we do? We praise the great actors who stood in the limelight. They deserve praise — but what about the stage managers, the ticket salesmen, the property managers and the prompters? Could it have been a play without them? Hardly. They deserve praise too, but seldom do they receive it. They must keep working faithfully, knowing only that they are helping some one else to do his job.

This also happens in all of life. Take Brethren Volunteer Service in Europe for example. The volunteers who serve in lonely field projects or head up important programs do a fine job. They receive credit for it — and rightly so. But what about the volunteers who remain at Brethren House to prepare the food, clean the house, repair the cars, handle the finances, receive the guests and take dictation? Could the work of the other volunteers go on without them? Absolutely not!

Let us give tribute to all those who stand behind the scenes and do the common everyday monotonous tasks which "somebody must do." Actually, I believe, their task is more difficult than that of those in the spotlight, for they must keep a cheerful philosophy toward their work without the aid of someone else's appreciation.

The same principle applies on a larger scale. Sometimes workers in the States feel that their work is of little importance beside that of European workers or they may feel a little envious of the fellow who gets more publicity.

Baby sitting

It is obvious that for the most good to be accomplished, we must erase these feelings. There is something that each of us can do, no matter whether we belong to the "actors" or to the behind-the-scenes workers. Those who do the common tasks need to remember that "there is no end to the amount of good a person can do, if he doesn't care who gets the credit." The person in the spotlight must remember that what he does is possible only with the help of the others, and he must show appreciation to them.

"For as in one body we have many members, and all the members do not have the same function, so we, though many, are one body in Christ, and individually members one of another" (Rom. 12: 4-5).

IDEAS—PLANS—METHODS

1955-56 Local Church Program Guide

JANUARY 1956

School of Missions (Home and Foreign) ..... Month of January
Week of Prayer ..... Jan. 1-8
Church and Economic Life Week ..... Jan. 15-21
Brethren Volunteer Service Day ..... Jan. 29
Youth Week ..... Jan. 29 — Feb. 5

Renew efforts in lay or fellowship evangelism from now until Easter. Get audio-visual materials from the Audio-Visual Education Department to aid in enlisting the lay people for this work and in training them how to do it.

Plans should be laid for a church membership class in which you will invite all adults and young people who would like to study what it means to become a Christian to share in a series of classes between Jan. 1 or Feb. 1 and Easter. A similar class should be set up for the older juniors and junior high youth, giving opportunity toward the close of these classes for individual decisions to be made for Christ. It is unfair to bring into the church family new members who have not had this opportunity for training in their Christian life.

Plan now for a summer program in evangelism. If you can use a Youth Caravan team for part of their eight weeks of service, write to the Department of Evangelism for further information.

Conduct a School of Missions. See November for suggestions.

Gospel Messenger subscriptions and renewals should be sent to the Brethren Publishing House early this month or in whatever month your church uses as subscription month. Have you considered designating a particular Sunday as "Gospel Messenger Sunday"? This might easily coincide with your renewal period. The Gospel Messenger office has available a booklet giving numerous suggestions for such an emphasis. Each home should receive the church's weekly paper of inspirational, instructional and informational materials.

Do you have a parent-teacher fellowship? The Brethren Children's Worker and the Youth Counselor's Manual give practical suggestions for this fellowship. See comments on this under October.

Add books to the church library for leisure-time reading.

Adults, especially leaders of women's work and men's work, should make plans to attend the Brethren adult seminar, February 27 — March 2 in Washington and New York.

FEBRUARY 1956

Brotherhood Emphasis ..... Month of February
Christian Education-Bethany Offering ..... Feb. 5
Race Relations Sunday ..... Feb. 12
Ash Wednesday (beginning of Lent) ..... Feb. 15
World Day of Prayer ..... Feb. 17
Brotherhood Week ..... Feb. 19-26
Commitment Day (for total abstinence) ..... Feb. 26

The many services of the Christian Education Commission staff and of Bethany Seminary deserve liberal gifts on Feb. 5. Order interpretative offering supplies from the Brotherhood Fund Department.

Emphasize interracial brotherhood this month and plan some interracial experiences for your church family. You might wish to plan a Sunday evening School of Race Relations or a School of Civil Rights and Liberties. Engage in legislative action for fair employment and housing practices, for public school integration and for all forms of civil rights legislation. Sponsor a pastoral and fellowship exchange with a church of another race; or, better yet, co-operate with a racial minority church in a common service or a common project. Invite persons of other races into the fellowship and membership of your congregation. Plan now to send someone to a Brethren Service Commission summer institute on race relations.

Plan your summer program for children. Some day camping plans should be made. Write to the Camping Department for suggestions and guidance materials.

Arrange for your vacation church school leaders to attend the vacation church school institutes in your area during March or April. The Sunday-school teachers can benefit from these meetings, too.

Look ahead to other training opportunities planned for church leaders during the summer months. The church should encourage attendance by paying the expenses of workers. Plan to help some young person participate in a work camp in the States or overseas.

Co-operate in the community observance of the World Day of Prayer if there is one. If not, plan a service in your church or prayer meetings in homes and invite others of the community to attend.

Hold a School of Temperance culminating in the observance of Commitment Sunday. Write the Temperance Department for suggestions.

MARCH 1956

One Great Hour of Sharing ..... March 11
Palm Sunday ..... March 25

Relating the good works of our relief and rehabilitation program and stimulating support for these and future good works are objectives in the One Great Hour of Sharing emphasis. Order materials early for this major Brethren Service offering.

Are plans for your vacation church school well organized? Order your materials early; the theme for 1956 is Our Bible Heritage.

Continue to point up the values of participating in summer leadership training opportunities, spring institutes, workshops and camp leadership training programs.

If you have not conducted earlier schools in the Brethren Service field, plan for a Sunday evening school of relief and rehabilitation or of social welfare: first session, material aid; second session, refugee resettlement, student exchange and international work camps; third session, Brethren Volunteer Service; fourth session, social welfare needs in your community and in your congregation. Secure study materials from the Brethren Service Commission. Invite in former Brethren Service workers and BVS'ers. Study and visit the social welfare agencies in your community. Collect food, clothing, medical supplies and livestock. Resettle a refugee family. Apply for an exchange student for next year. Plan to send an exchange student overseas or someone to a work camp or someone into BVS.

Begin planning for National Family Week, which comes the first week in May. Order current family life materials from the Family Life Department.

Easter ..... April 1
National Christian College Day ..... April 15

Easter to Pentecost may be the high point of the entire year's program of evangelism. Carry on a strong intensive program of visitation evangelism for one week, followed by a continued regular program once or twice a month by carefully selected and trained workers.

A spring outing or other fellowship gathering will be a rewarding experience for the church family.

Add children's books on nature and hobbies to your church library.

Begin to plan an observance of children's day that will further the Christian growth and nurture of the boys and girls.

Local churches should supply camp leadership. One leader should be furnished for every four to six campers sent to camp. When teachers share in the camp program, the experience has a greater carry-over value to the church.

Support the college in your area by a generous offering on National Christian College Day. Invite a representative of the college to share in the worship service on that Sunday.

Plan to devote the last two Sunday evenings of April and the first two Sunday evenings in May to a School of Family Living. Or plan at some other time in the year to hold a week-end Institute of Family Life.

MAY 1956

Family Life Emphasis ..... Month of May Rural Life Sunday ..... May 6
Family Week ..... May 6-13
Mother's Day ..... May 13
Annual Conference Offering ..... May 20
Pentecost Sunday ..... May 20

In May our thoughts turn to Annual Conference. The Annual Conference Offering is a time of significant sharing in the total Brotherhood program. Materials may be secured to aid in interpreting the work and commitments of the church.

Many churches have adopted the plan of holding a dedication service for little children on Mother's Day. It makes a fitting and impressive climax to the National Family Week observance.

Pentecost may be the greatest day in the life of the church, as the climax of the year's program of evangelism. Prepare for it as a day for baptism and reception of new members. Help the new members feel at home in the social and work life of the church.

Make arrangements for representatives of your church to attend area mission institutes. Write to the Missionary Education Department for schedules.

Recognize young people graduating from high school and college, perhaps by a banquet or other special event. Their achievements should be noted and shared in the church. Challenge them to accept opportunities for service in the church program. Welcome returning college students in June and remember to give them a place to serve in the church during the summer.

Elect new women's work officers and provide funds to send them to summer coaching conferences.

Get the current family life promotional materials and make plans for all aspects of the family life program for 1956-57. Provide for purchase of new books and pamphlets in this field. Subscribe for several magazines in the family life field for your church library.

Have you tried the weekly or biweekly all-church picnic idea during the summer months? Potluck supper, time for visiting and games for all the family help to keep the bonds of fellowship strong during the summertime. Occasional vesper services could climax the picnic experience.

Are you promoting attendance at the various age-group camps, the vacation church school and your day camp? Leaders should attend a camp leaders' training conference.

Children's Day ..... June 10
Annual Conference Sunday ..... June 17

Annual Conference is a great experience of fellowship and inspiration in the life of the Brotherhood. Some of its spirit should permeate each local church. Annual Conference Sunday may be a time in which the congregation can sense its unity with Christ in the world-wide fellowship of the Brethren if a leader mentions the Annual Conference program and reviews a few items of business briefly. The worship service which follows the same theme used at Annual Conference will help to expand this sense of oneness. Plan for new and stimulating ways of sharing the experiences of your returning delegates.

All adult leaders of youth are urged to attend the National Training Conference en route to Annual Conference. This includes junior-high leaders, Sunday-school teachers, youth counselors, pastors and all who work with young people in your church. Plan to send delegates to this important training conference.

Order all recommended women's work program materials for the year 1956-57 and have women's work officers make careful plans for the year ahead. Ask all women of the church, through a questionnaire or a discussion meeting, to indicate what women's work activities they would like to see launched for the year ahead.

Organize summertime reading by teachers and workers in preparation for their fall responsibilities. Have teachers observe teaching methods in a good vacation school in June or July.

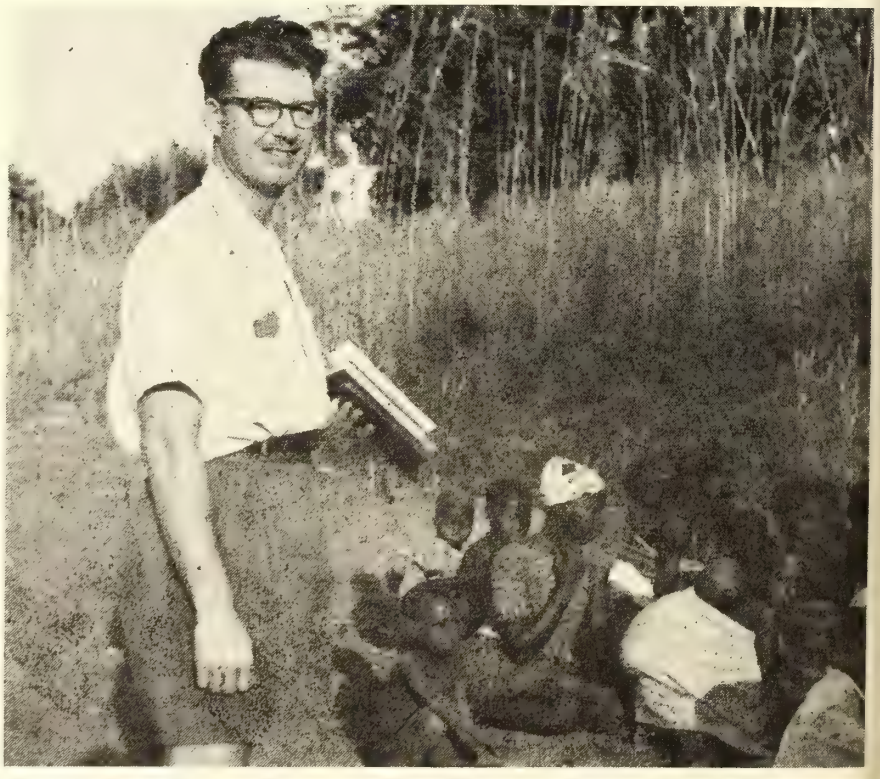
A Week of Meetings in a Nigerian Village

"This spring has been most interesting for Rozella and me," writes Charles Lunkley from Garkida. "From March 28 through April 3 we were out at Dzongola, a village about twenty miles from Garkida where a new church was begun recently. Our week there was most rewarding.

"They have been getting along fairly well with their church building and now have the walls up. The young people there — I say young people because the older folks have not come into the church too well as yet — made all the mud brick for the walls and the benches for seating. They hired a man to lay up the brick for them.

"When we got there late on Monday afternoon they had covered one end of the unfinished church with grass mats and put partitions in it which gave us quite a nice place to live. The women had carried sand from the river and spread it on the floor.

"They had also brought firewood and two large pots for water, which they filled every day. We went equipped with our two-burner camp stove, a big box for a table, a couple of folding chairs and our camp cots; so we were set up quite comfortably. Out of their generosity we were given eggs, chickens, rice and other food.



"Each evening we had services. Rozella played her accordion and I sang a song occasionally. The little church was filled each evening with children seated on the floor so close that one could not get through. Many older folks were outside. Even the village chief came almost every night. A young man who had been to Garkida for school was my interpreter since their language was different from the one I knew.

"We closed our week at Dzongola with a love feast on Sunday afternoon. It was rather unique. We had no towels for the feet washing service, but among people who do not use towels that was not serious. Neither did we have any cups for the communion service, so we sent out word that each person was to bring his own. We served the communion wine (strawberry Koolaid makes a very good communion drink) in can lids, medicine tins, vaseline jars, tin cups, bowls, gourds, and bottle caps. But who paid any attention to the containers — we were remembering the Lord's shed blood in holy communion. We were worshiping."

Reaching All Ages at Gulak

From Robert Bischof comes this encouraging account:

"During the months of February and March I visited the classes of religious instruction in the Gulak area examining candidates for the covenant and baptism. I baptized seventeen and heard the covenant from about twenty-five people. I was well pleased with this as there were elderly people, young couples and of course young people in these groups. We are reaching all the age groups."

Waka Love Feast Overflows Schoolroom

From Ivan Eikenberry in Nigeria comes this report on a love feast:

"Yesterday we had love feast here at Waka Training School. One hundred twelve communed. It was a bit of a problem to get the planning done satisfactorily and it was only by the close co-operation of the students and residents that we were able to squeeze 112 communicants into the 30′ x 40′ classroom. In fact we had to put an overflow on the veranda for the supper. It is always a thrill to be present at such a service here at Waka because in a very real sense the intermingling of tribes in feet washing, eating the fellowship meal, the breaking of bread and the drinking of the cup of the New Testament demonstrates the unity of fellowship in Christ."

Earl Zigler Reports Emphasis on Tithing

Recently the Bamanvel church, one of our finest rural congregations in India, has shown some anxiety for the debt that had been incurred on their church. We spent a week end with them, having a meeting Saturday night until 11:30 and another on Sunday morning. We took time to analyze their resources as well as to investigate the Biblical challenge of stewardship.

As a result, all who were present unanimously decided to dedicate one tenth of their income to the Lord and thus take care of their debt. The women are sewing Prabhuni Theli (the Lord's bags) so that each family will have one for their tithe.

Report From Ecuador

A few days before leaving Ecuador, Faye Koontz wrote the following:

"The days of preparation for homecoming seem almost an impossibility. They are filled with caring for the sick. Patients are coming from little villages quite a distance from the mission. Saturday three sons came with a chicken, wanting me to come to the house to see their father who was sick. In a little dark room, on a wooden homemade bed, with no mattress and a straw mat canopy over the bed, lay the patient, crippled with rheumatism and in much pain. How happy I found the family today. Father was much improved and was eating well and talking of walking again in a few days. God has greatly blessed my efforts in these two and a half years here. Of course, many we have not been able to help but many have become our friends through the medical work and we have had a chance to tell them of Jesus and his great love for all."

Agricultural. Two varieties of four-month blight resistant potatoes are being tried and, so far, one looks as if it would out-produce the native six- to seven-month potato. Commercial fertilizer has been used on mission crops and has created an interest among local farmers in trying this type of fertilizer next year. The 4F Club (similar to the American 4H Clubs) planted wider rows for corn and on the contour; it is the same amount of corn planted per acre, but in cultivating there is less cutting of roots. There is continued interest in vaccinating stock against diseases and a rising need for veterinary service which the agriculturalist finds difficult to meet owing to lack of training in this field.

Medical. Many new homes are opening up for us for medical work and people are coming from surrounding villages to our clinic. Many mornings the steps and porch are full of men, women and children waiting their turn for medical help. Through our help in the village of Calderon when there was a bus accident, we are receiving more patients and have more friends there in the village. God is blessing our work in a wonderful way and many opportunities are opened for telling the gospel story.

Gaining Friends for the Lord

"One day Rachel and I with one of our workers and his wife," Earl M. Zigler tells us in a letter, "called on a lady who was seriously ill. She was the wife of a former worker of ours who had been a Christian, but who had left mission service and for some years has been away from the church and even actively antagonistic to it. I think she had never been a church member. When she fell ill, her husband was away from home and she was cared for by her very superstitious relatives who had no faith in modern doctors and medicines, but instead took her to witch doctors for ceremonial treatments. She gradually grew weaker and weaker and when finally her educated husband arrived home, he found her in a critical condition. He immediately got a government doctor and put her in his care. She slowly began to respond to treatment.

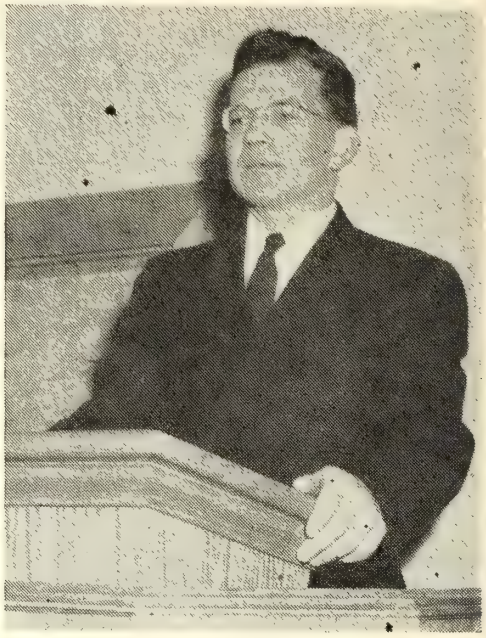
"She was still in a critical condition the day we called on her. Her husband was not there when we arrived but her folks received us courteously. When we suggested having prayer for her she was eager for us to do so. Her relatives, although apparently dubious about it, said they had no objection. We prayed for her and by the time we left there was an atmosphere of cordiality existing. She has since recovered entirely and recently sent a thank-offering to the church in appreciation to God for regaining her health. Her husband is now much more friendly. That visit seems to have gained some new friends for our Lord and who knows but that the future may bring them entirely to his feet."

From the Garkida Church

Mary Dadisman writes

"During the past three or four months more than a thousand people have come to get freed from their various parasites, hernias, tumors, etc.

"I think you would be interested in hearing of our Easter services at Garkida. The day started early with a sunrise service. Following the sunrise service we went a mile or so to the river for baptism. There were thirteen applicants; one man and wife, three women and girls and eight men and boys. The regular church services were at 11 a. m. with love feast and communion at four o'clock. There was good attendance for all of the services but not as good as it has been sometimes.



"A new church building is ready for the roof now but there is the usual struggle as in any church building program to get money to finish the building."

Minority Rights in Nigeria

H. Stover Kulp reports that he and representatives of other Christian missions in Nigeria met with government officials to discuss more favorable conditions for the operation of Christian missions. "The government accepted the missions' point of view," he writes, "and also are going to put forward a proposal to those who will be drawing up the Nigerian constitution for 1956 that it should contain a minority rights statement similar to the UN statement of human rights. We know," he continues, "that much prayer was being offered for the success of these meetings and that God answered the prayers."

Evergreen--
Church and Pastor

Clyde H. Knight

Harold E. Kettering in pulpit of Evergreen church

Below: the Evergreen church in Greene County, Virginia

IT WAS a good day for the people in Greene County when in September 1944 Harold E. Kettering arrived to take up his work as a minister. He brought vigor, stamina, faith, courage and, above all, a heart full of love and compassion for people. He came directly from Bethany Biblical Seminary. He had also had a summer's work in clinical training at the Elgin state hospital and another summer at the University of Illinois in agricultural training to prepare him for the rural ministry. It was not long before Bro. Kettering sensed the needs among the congregations and he immediately set out to meet those needs.

One in particular was the need for a new church building at Evergreen. This congregation began in 1880, when a group of members met under a chestnut tree. This place of worship continued until 1896, when the first church house was built, the land donated by the late Durrette Vernon. Labor on this church was done by the members, and some workers from the Shenandoah Valley came in to help. Timber for the building was donated, cut and hand dressed by the local people. The Mill Creek congregation assisted with the pastorate, Elder Isaac Long serving as the first pastor.

We must not forget the many faithful servants who worked among our people during the days gone by, namely, S. A. Sanger, C. M. Triner, G. A. Maupin, H. S. Knight, Chester Harley, Newton Poling, Miss Nellie Wampler, Mrs. Ellen Wampler Norris, those who served in the Greene County Industrial School, and many others.

On April 19, 1953, our new church was dedicated. Under the direction, inspiration and labor of our pastor the dream for a new building came true in the erection of a beautiful stone structure. The building of this church was accomplished by the untiring efforts of many people.

The building began with a Brotherhood grant of $7,000; $16,798 was raised locally; donations of labor, truck and tractor service and materials added up to $14,097.95. The total cost of the church was $41,473.64.

A bank loan of $2,500 was made, only $557 of which remains unpaid. The building fund started during the latter part of 1945. Lord's Acre projects, women's work and canvassing brought in quite an amount. The church building counselor, Forrest Groff, sent the plans in 1951. The ground-breaking ceremony took place May 20, 1951. Construction began July 1951, and the cornerstone was laid on Nov. 18, 1951. The building was completed in March 1953.

We were fortunate in having a member of our own congregation who was capable of constructing the church. Bro. J. Arthur Allen was mason, carpenter, cabinetmaker, plasterer and concrete finisher. In fact, he completed every portion with the aid of local help and volunteer labor from outside. Among those who helped were Floyd Priser, Eugene Wells and Gerald Fields, who came through the Brethren Volunteer Service program.

Under the guidance of Bro. Kettering the organization of the building project was carefully planned and each committee worked faithfully to see the completion of the church of which all are very proud.

Bro. Kettering has witnessed many achievements other than the construction of the building. Through his labor and guidance a community hall has been erected in Bacon Hollow, to which fifty or sixty young people come for recreation. The basement of this hall is used for another practical purpose — broiler growing. During the past four years 300,000 broilers have been raised and eight or more people have gained practical experience in the operation. The broiler industry has expanded in surrounding areas because of Bro. Kettering's example and encouragement.

To me Harold E. Kettering is an unusual young man. He has a fine Christian disposition and knows how to deal with people, with problems, with those who criticize adversely. He does not give people up but works with them for clearer understandings. He has demonstrated the attributes of patience and perseverance in many instances. His compassion and sympathy have won him many friends. We thank God that we have such a man as our leader whose interests are far-reaching and whose mind is strong and alert. The personality of Bro. Kettering is his daily sermon, and his forgiving and understanding spirit put salt in his character.

Bro. Kettering left for Europe on April 12, accompanying a boatload of heifers destined for Germany. He is visiting international work camps in Austria and will serve as consultant on church community refugee housing. He plans to visit Italy, France, Switzerland and assist in work camps of Brethren centers. He will return to Greene County in August.

On Aug. 25, 1940, Bro. Kettering married Miss Esther Heagy of Pennryn, Pa. They have three children, Joel, Michael and Mary Lou. Mrs. Kettering, who received her B.S. degree in education at the University of Virginia in June 1954, teaches the first grade at Stanardsville elementary school.

Another achievement of Bro. Kettering is the establishment of an association to provide perpetual care for the Evergreen cemetery. The fund now is $3,600 and the appearance of the cemetery has improved greatly. His achievements in all these areas won for him the 1952 award for the Rural Minister of the Year of the Church of the Brethren. This award was presented at the Annual Conference in Richmond, Va. Of course, it would have been impossible to realize these accomplishments if Bro. Kettering had not had the support and co-operation of his congregation but his initiative and sound judgment and leadership made them possible. We are proud of our pastor and his family. God send more men like Harold Kettering into other fields of service and endeavor.

Plan now for an appropriate Independence Day observance. July is a good month to hold a Sunday evening school of Christian citizenship. Make your plans now. Arrange to send someone to a summer institute on Christian citizenship and on international relations.

JULY 1956

Independence Day ..... July 4

The church should strive to develop a truly Christian patriotism. Use the patriotic hymns in the Brethren hymnal to enrich worship services on the Sunday preceding Independence Day.

Many Fourth-of-July picnics will be planned. Help those in your community to plan a constructive program of merit — one in which the Christian and historic traditions are kept alive.

Conduct a Sunday evening school of Christian Citizenship. Engage in legislative action on local, state or national issues for better government. Interview legislators or candidates or collect information about candidates and issues and provide such information to the congregation. Urge all members to register. Survey the needs of your community. Invite in community leaders to speak about their responsibilities and problems.

During the summer months your church may have the opportunity to co-operate in union Sunday evening services. If there are no union services, plan some outdoor vesper services for your church fellowship.

An overnight or a week-end camp spent with the youth fellowship can do much to increase the interest and strengthen the unity among the young people. Summertime is one of the best times to work with the youth group in an informal way.

Begin now to get ready for the next church year by electing officers and appointing committees for the church organization. Enlist teachers for the new year through personal conferences.

Use laymen and lay ministers in the Sunday services while the pastor has a summer vacation.

AUGUST 1956

The church board should be working on plans for the new church year. Programs can be outlined and the various study guides and materials ordered. Various commissions or committees should plan their emphases and programs. Consideration should be given to how these programs and activities could be implemented more fully through co-operation with the youth department, women's work, men's work, Sunday-school classes, or perhaps Sunday evening schools.

Arrange an impressive service for the installation of teachers and church officers in September.

The CBYF should elect officers under the Youth Action Plan, so these officers can share in the church installation service. Plan an early retreat of the CBYF cabinet to outline activities and budget for the year.

A church workers' retreat would be helpful in evaluating the work of the year just closing and in projecting improvements for the new year. It can be a time of deep inspiration for all church leaders. It may also be a time to work out Christian education goals for the local church and a job analysis for each type of responsibility.

Anticipate the needs of the church school staff, such as new books, new supplies, filmstrips, audio-visual equipment, subscriptions to magazines, etc., and place orders accordingly.

SEPTEMBER 1956

Labor Sunday ..... Sept. 2
Brotherhood Achievement Offering ..... Sept. 16
Promotion Day ..... Sept. 30
Christian Education Week ..... Sept. 30 — Oct. 7

Recognize Labor Sunday by an appropriate sermon and in other suitable ways.

Complete plans for the recognition and installation service for the entire church staff of workers.

Unite in an effort to achieve the Brotherhood Fund and thus achieve sacred commitments at home and overseas. Send for interpretative materials early. Remember the National Youth Project goal.

Preceded by thorough organization and an intensive training of canvassers, an every-member visit will be conducted this month by many churches to secure commitments for the coming year's church program.

The new junior high curriculum will be used for the first in October 1956. The Board of Christian Education, junior high leaders and parents should become familiar with this new curriculum by attending a training conference held in the district.

Christian Education Week presents an excellent tie-up of the closing Sunday-school year with the opening of a new year.

Make preparations for the observance in October of World Order Sunday and United Nations Day. Plan for a School of International Relations or World Order.

Program Materials

The following departments of the General Brotherhood Board offer materials to be used at various times throughout the year in the local church:

Adult Work	Men's Work
Audio-Visual Education	Missionary Education
Brethren Service	Ministry
Camping	Music and Worship
Children's Work	Stewardship and Finance
Evangelism	Temperance
Home and Family Life	Women's Work
Junior High	Youth

Be sure you have the Catalog for Church Workers (No. 55), published jointly by the Brethren Publishing House and the General Brotherhood Board.

Order Bibles, curriculm materials, books and church school supplies and program materials from the Brethren Publishing House, 22 S. State St., Elgin, Ill.

Throughout the year the Audio-Visual Education Department offers excellent audio-visuals for special programs, discussion groups, etc. Consult the audio-visual catalog for selections.

Make use of the Brethren Loan Library.

provide expressional activities for children. Sunday evening may be kept for family activities. We must begin to teach and live on the basis of spiritual values. Musts for each family include: time for individuals to be alone; time to be alone with each member of the family as an individual; time to be together as a family.

Under the title, A Community Family Life Program Gets Underway, a three-man team composed of Raymond R. Peters, Homer Royer and Paul Kinsel gave a glimpse of the community family life program in the greater Dayton area.

Bro. Peters pointed out that this family life program, carried out in co-operation with the Department of Family Life of the National Council of Churches of Christ, grew out of a growing sense of the responsibility of the family to help shape the moral influence of the larger community.

Fifty-seven churches co-operated in a Sunday through Wednesday clinic designed to determine: What is a Christian family? What should be included in the church program for the family? What should be the community program for the family?

One of the direct results of the study was the decision to telecast a weekly program, Bless This House. This program is now going into its thirty-ninth week and is receiving much favorable comment.

The program itself, a combination of drama and panel discussion is planned to provoke additional discussion and study in smaller groups as they gather in homes. A number of church school classes as well are using these presentations as the basis of their study discussions.

Final feature of the Wednesday afternoon conference was the viewing of the new film, Head of the House.

The Saturday morning post breakfast conference of regional and district family life workers was given to the sharing of programs of the various regions and districts.

Youth and Junior High Activities

A full program of activities for youth and junior high at Annual Conference included daily morning sessions, sectional and luncheon conference, picnics, guided tours and an evening recreational period.

The morning session for youth and junior high included a worship service based on the theme of the Conference, informal singing and recreation and a preview of the day which presented Conference leaders who outlined the daily schedule and explained many aspects of the total Brotherhood program. Paul Fike was master of ceremonies for each of these morning periods. The youth leadership in each of the five regions were in charge of the worship and recreation periods.

In the sectional conference for youth and adult leaders of youth a panel of five persons under the chairmanship of Lauree Hersch led a discussion on pacifism. Gladden Shrock defended the I-A position that one should accept his civil responsibility. Guy Wampler, Jr., defended the I-A-O position, saying that one can accept his responsibility and yet not have to kill his fellow men. Max Parmley defended the I-O position, saying that although this is idealistic, it is the way to follow Christ. Curtis Leicht presented the I-W program and the service that it renders. Irene Shull commented on the girl's responsibility to make a decision concerning pacifism and to understand the problem facing all young men.

Bob Richards was the guest speaker for the morning program on Saturday. He was also the speaker for the Saturday evening Conference session which included a worship service by the young people present. Following that service a recreation period was planned in the basement of the Civic Auditorium. Group singing followed and a worship service in which the young people repeated the commitment they had made following Bob Richards' talk in the evening.

At the regular Sunday-school hour on Sunday, Stewart Kauffman taught the lesson. He stimulated young people to think what they are living for. The opening worship was lead by members of the speech choir.

At a sectional meeting for junior high leaders on Wednesday sixty were present to view a filmstrip and to see sample copies of the new junior high curriculum. Vernard Eller made the presentation. The meeting closed with discussion on how to develop the junior high fellowship led by Paul Weaver.

On Wednesday, Thursday and Friday special tours planned for junior high youth were held each afternoon. Approximately 100 junior highs participated. On Wednesday they toured Grand Rapids and a furniture factory; on Thursday they visited Holland, Michigan, and a Dutch wooden shoe factory; Friday's tour included a visit to Grand Haven State park and a swim in Lake Michigan.

The junior high Sunday-school class was led by Robert Ebey, pastor of the Sugar Ridge church. He spoke on the help junior highs can give the local church.

Desmond Bittinger was the speaker for the special luncheon for leaders of youth and junior highs. Speaking concerning the fires of youth, Dr. Bittinger said that it takes fire to generate energy to make things go. The ideals that will be realized tomorrow will come through the hearts of youth. They must come alive in youth today. He observed that young people are different and act differently not only in different situations, but even quite differently in short periods of time. He said let the young people be different from each other and let them develop at different speeds. He insisted also that young people are teachable. And he concluded that young people move forward on their hearts. They have the capacity to love, also the ability to enlarge their loves. Direction in this kind of growth can be given by adult leaders of youth.

Foreign Missions

At the sectional meeting on Wednesday afternoon, one missionary from each of the three fields told of the work being done in his particular area in this revolutionary period. Since this is a time of revolution, what can missions do about it? William Beahm answered this in the concluding talk of the afternoon. First of all, we must recognize the threat and peril in the two major kinds of revolution in the mission world: nationalism and communism. Having done that we must explore new ways of presenting the gospel and meeting the needs of men. Emphases and methods must be changed and adapted to changing situations. Last of all if we are to survive revolution there must be perspective and conviction.

A look was taken at each mission field at the three postbreakfast conferences. Visitors to each of the fields within the last year spoke of their impressions of the work being done in the area they had visited: Dr. Vernon Kinzie for Ecuador, R. H. Miller for India and Norman Baugher for Nigeria. Since each of these three have written for the Gospel Messenger about their visits, we shall not here summarize their messages. Kurtis F. Naylor, Anna M. Warstler and Sara Shisler were the worship leaders.

Foreign Mission Dinner

Dr. Abdul Haqq, an Indian Christian from the Henry Martin School of Islamics in India, was introduced to the foreign mission dinner assembly by Amsey Bollinger, who told the group that the speaker had previously addressed a Brethren Conference in India. Dr. Haqq described the contemporary situation in India with respect to missionaries.

He reviewed the history of Christianity in India from its origin as far back as the fourth century or perhaps earlier, its development under British rule, to its place in the new India. He gave credit to Christian missionaries for their eagerness to help the oppressed and the outcastes. He explained that opposition comes chiefly from the Hindus. Some are neutral, some oppose Christianity on the basis of ancestral beliefs and a conviction that religion and nationality go together, some oppose the Christians as Saul of Tarsus was opposed to them and others oppose the church for political reasons.

Direct evangelism is difficult for missionaries from abroad. But missionaries are still needed in India, especially to assist in agricultural, medical and educational work. Evangelism must be carried on by the nationals themselves.

India, said Dr. Haqq, will some day make a real contribution to Christian theology. And the Christian faith has an answer to the searching of Muslims and Hindus who are trying to find a personal God. Since our Christianity is a missionary religion, we should make the most of our opportunities in India before the opposition becomes greater. More important than building or redecorating churches should be our concern to win not only India but all of Asia for Christ.

Special recognition was given at the dinner for two missionaries who are retiring from active service, Olive Widdowson and Goldie Swartz. George Detweiler, chairman of the session, also called on all former as well as present missionaries to stand. A large number were in attendance.

Educational Dinner

Four men who have served faithfully for many years on the faculty of Brethren colleges received distinguished service citations from the Christian Education Commission at the annual educational dinner.

Dr. V. F. Schwalm, president of Manchester, presented John Ezra Dotterer, professor of mathematics, and Oscar W. Neher, professor of biology for the citation. Dr. Desmond Bittinger introduced Maurice A. Hess, professor of English at McPherson and a member of the Old German Baptist Brethren Church. Rufus King, acting for President Warren Bowman of Bridgewater, presented Marshall R. Wolfe, professor of Bible, for this recognition. The citations were awarded by Dr. Paul H. Bowman, chairman of the commission.

As toastmaster, Dr. Paul M. Robinson introduced the various college presidents and recognized those who serve as faculty members or as trustees of our Brethren schools. Dr. Glenn Clayton, president of Ashland College, was the speaker for the occasion. Referring to higher education as a Christian enterprise, he called attention to the fact that we live in a time of greatly expanding industry. In this time it is important to ask why our Christian colleges were established in the first place. They served as a means of training ministers and church workers and they sought to perpetuate in the community their own way of life. The speaker emphasized the need for careful planning for the future. The college does not stand apart from the community; neither does it reflect the standards of the community. Perseverance will be successful. If the colleges have their roots in Christian soil, they can survive; but important planning decisions are immediately due.

Christian Education

Sunday-school superintendents and members of local and district boards of Christian education met for a sectional conference on Wednesday afternoon.

According to Virginia Fisher the district boards must function through the local churches. They must help in every local church to raise the importance of Christian education. Among their duties are these: to use their budget wisely, to hold regular and frequent meetings, to appoint age-group directors, to establish film libraries, to compile mailing lists and to encourage adequate organization of local boards.

Olden Mitchell reminded members of local boards that "people are what they are taught to be." Among their responsibilities are the following: plan to get the job done, set a high goal, develop a program of growth, have a book ministry of the church, use special teaching techniques, make homes the center of teaching, plan for clubs, day camping and other activities.

Temperance Luncheon

"The problem of beverage alcohol is the most vital, the most pressing social problem of our age," a distinguished Chicago jurist reported

L. W. Shultz, Bob Tully and Paul M. Weaver (left to right) join in the singing of camp songs at luncheon for camp leaders to a group of 200 temperance workers at the Thursday temperance luncheon. A former alcoholic and member of Alcoholics Anonymous, he requested his identity not be disclosed. Because of a recent illness he was unable to bring his message in person. It was read to the group by James Renz, temperance director.

In reference to his twenty-five years of chronic alcoholism, the jurist commented, "Had I received proper religious and temperance instruction as a youngster I would not have become an alcoholic."

Pointing up a challenge to church workers, he averred, "We must face squarely the fact that unless the church today provides man with working tools and spiritual values necessary to withstand insecurity and frustration, beverage alcohol can and will afford him a convenient escape."

A condensation of this statement will appear later as an article in this paper.

Stewardship

Techniques and purposes of the every member canvass in local churches were described by Brethren Ralph Turnidge of Bakersfield, Calif., Gordon Bucher of Springfield, Ill., H. Lawrence Rice of Roanoke, Va., and H. Spenser Minnich of Elgin, Ill., at the stewardship and local church finance workshop Wednesday afternoon. Harl Russell, stewardship and Brotherhood Fund secretary, presided at the meeting, attended by 250. Dr. T. K. Thompson of the joint department of stewardship and benevolence of the National Council of Churches spoke concerning the United Church Canvass efforts in November. During a discussion fervent interest was noted in every-member visitation to relate the story of the work of the church and to enhance stewardship commitment. Bro. Russell indicated more than 250 churches will conduct every-member canvasses this fall.

"Stewardship, simply defined, means life from God, life for God," said Dr. T. K. Thompson at the Brotherhood Fund luncheon Thursday noon. Others who addressed the 120 persons present were Brethren Norman L. Harsh of Eglon, W. Va., who spoke on the role of the district executive in Brotherhood Fund promotion, and Samuel A. Harley of North Manchester, Ind., who described the Middle Indiana stewardship emphasis initiated with skill shops conducted by Harl Russell and followed by a district-wide Sunday-school study. Bro. Russell was chairman of the luncheon.

declare the evidence of spiritual growth in American life. Read, then evaluate your own growth in things spiritual.

America's Spiritual Recovery

This book written by one who, having in his congregation notable men in top positions in the government, is in a commanding position to evaluate the present status of religion in America. He does not skip our shortcomings but points definitely to signs that America is entering a period of spiritual recovery, an awakening based on the faith of our founding fathers. This book is a summons to each one to intensify, expand, and give momentum to this "dawning spiritual renaissance." The volume is dedicated to president Dwight David Eisenhower, who by personal example and public utterance is giving testimony to the reality of America's spiritual foundations. 192 pages Cloth $2.50

My Spiritual Diary
Dale Evans Rogers

This is an intimate, honest, humble accounting of one soul to its Creator. Written in diary form, this notable personage tells of the long, hard road from defeat to ultimate victory — a road she has known so well. The "little angel" of ANGEL UNAWARE enters now and then in the daily writings. Excellent personal devotionals, when adapted to your personal situations. 144 pages $2.00

Children's Workers

The program for children's workers at this year's Conference was built on the theme, Understanding Children. This included the post-breakfast conferences as well as the sectional meeting. The former will be reported in a later section.

Paul Bowman, Jr., was the resouce leader for the morning session on They Learn What They Live. He enumerated the four steps in the learning process — the desire to know, experience, thinking about experience and arriving at an idea that changes the person. He emphasized the fact that the learning process can be carried on only by the individual himself; others supply ingredients for learning. Furthermore, the process is a continual one.

He then applied these principles of learning to teaching. Unless the teacher uses the first three steps in learning he will not achieve the fourth. He pointed out that teachers must discover what desire for learning is in the children they teach, they must relate the children's previous experience to the situation and provide new experiences. The critical point of teaching comes at the third point. The teacher's role is to help the children arrive at their own conclusions, not to tell them what to think. If these three steps are adequately done the fourth step follows naturally.

Following Bro. Bowman's talk a panel consisting of Mrs. Russell Michael, Mrs. Levi Shively and James Elrod raised questions about the time when learning begins, the relation between the teacher and the home, the training of the teacher and the kind of curriculum.

Understanding Children was the theme for the children's work program at Annual Conference — sectional meeting, postbreakfast conferences and luncheon. Starting out with the postbreakfast conference at which Mrs. Charles Weaver developed the topic of Why Study Children, each session added more light on the how of children's learning.

Knowing how a child learns will help the teacher to realize that each child will develop at his own pace, Ed Crill told the children's workers on Thursday morning and that for the best interests of the child he should never be forced into a learning situation for which he is not ready. He also expressed concern at the speeding up of the maturing process evident today.

Betty Lou Hershberger, director of children's work in the Western Region, detailed for the teachers and parents present at the Friday postbreakfast conference the characteristics and needs of each age, covering the physical, social and intellectual development of the child. Knowing what can be expected from a child at each age, allowing for individual differences, will help the teacher to plan his teaching to meet the needs of his particular age group.

Understanding leads to intelligent guidance, said Mrs. Harold Row as she brought to a conclusion the sessions on understanding children. She suggested three roads to understanding: (1) understanding oneself, for it is the adult personality that the child encounters and that creates his emotional environment; (2) accepting the child as he is; (3) traveling with him in securing adequate physical rest, in exploring God's world, in showing love in the family, to those around him and to God.

Those who had completed the requirements for the Fellowship of Growth in Service were recognized at the luncheon meeting of children's workers. Mrs. John Myers, former children's work director, was honored and Mary Spessard, the new director, was introduced. Miss

College Student Luncheon

A. Blair Helman, who has been both pastor and university teacher, gave the college students who gathered for luncheon at the Y.M.C.A. a factual review and a thoughtful evaluation of relations between the United States and Russia. He outlined the significant developments in our policy toward Russia over the past hundred years, giving special attention to the events leading up to the cold war period. He believes the cold war is breaking, although it may be difficult to know in which way. On the basis of recent changes in policy on both sides the speaker said he believed a war between the Communists and the free world was not inevitable since neither side can devise a strategy of victory.

A foreign policy that will keep the equilibrium and avoid war must include the following: more effort to make democracy work at home; support of authentic revolutions around the world; technical assistance programs; support of the UN in its peace-making functions; preservation of civil liberties; leadership in a program of disarmament. Brethren youth, concluded Bro. Helman, should take advantage of this time to train for leadership in the work of peace and reconciliation.

"Brethren Life and Thought"

This is the title of a new Brethren publication expected to make its bow in September. A meeting on Wednesday at Grand Rapids gave an opportunity for the Brethren Journal Association, the sponsoring group, to introduce the proposed quarterly journal. Edward K. Ziegler, who is the editor of the journal, explained that such a publication will not compete with other publications since it will use articles of scholarly study and interpretation, contributions that are usually too lengthy or too technical to find a place in the Gospel Messenger. The new journal will not be an official church publication, but obviously the editorial board will see that its contributions will be constructively helpful in its influence on the church.

Brethren Tours Luncheon

One of the features of the luncheon attended by fifty past tour members and friends was the modeling of headgear from many lands. All those who had been on a tour spoke of its value, especially to churches who send their pastors. These tours are planned to help our people see Europe and the Holy Lands with a purpose.

Recreation Fellowship Dinner

About fifty persons interested in the recreational program of the church ate and fellowshiped together. It was probably one of the few meal conferences without an address and was enjoyed all the more because of it. Those present provided their own entertainment in the way of songs, stunts, get-acquainted and table games. Bob Tully told about the early days of the recreational fellowship and Ed Crill explained about the fellowship card. He reported that at the recent meeting of the National Recreational Committee the manuscript for the book, Recreation and the Local Church, was completed. It was also decided to get out quarterly a fellowship newsletter, The Re-Creator.

Brethren Medical Workers

The idea for an organization of those in the healing arts had its inception just five years ago at Conference. About six of those present at the initial meeting were present at this year's luncheon meeting. In the business period action was taken looking toward establishing a rotary loan fund for medical students. Dr. Merlin Brubaker of California was elected vice-president.

Dr. Darryl Parker, who was scheduled to speak, was unable to be present. Instead, those doctors and nurses who have served on Brethren Service and mission projects spoke briefly of their experiences.

Dr. Leppink pointed out that no continentals are used in the work at the Castañer project in Puerto Rico that Puerto Ricans can do. In Africa, the need is for public health education, said Dr. Paul Petcher. Dr. Nickey from India spoke of the high standards of service set by Christian missions and of the government's consciousness of the need for making more medical facilities available to the village people.

The need for doctors is great in Ecuador according to Dr. Vernon Kinzie, who visited that field. As in the other areas the greatest need is for public health education.

One of the serious problems in all parts of the work is that of securing nurses to staff the projects.

Camp Leaders Luncheon

Seventy-five camp leaders met for a Saturday luncheon in the Y.M.C.A. L. W. Shultz, manager of Camp Mack, was chairman of this meeting. Much interest was shown in the address given by Robert Tully, minister and member of the Indiana University faculty. His talk, The Church's Opportunity in Outdoor Education, stressed how the church already has the machinery to do the job. It is important for church people to realize that in our day and time conservation of all resources is Christian; that it is time for the church to take a look at outdoor recreation and hold up its ideals and purposes; and that nature is not God — but in the beginning, God made his manifestations there. The program was closed with some general observations on the action of Conference on the camping query and a brief report of the National Camp Planners Conference held June 7-10 at Camp Mack.

Brethren Welfare Workers

Since the earliest years of the Church of the Brethren its members have been thinking about welfare. According to J. H. Mathis, who spoke at a luncheon meeting for welfare workers, this early concern was revealed in Conference decisions about slavery, in relief activities and in supporting homes for the poor. He described two areas that need our attention at the present time: in care for the aged — we should establish "islands of mercy" for older people; and in care for those with mental and emotional illnesses. Social welfare workers should blaze new trails in interfaith co-operation and in providing needed services for people of all races.

Elected to guide a newly formed association of Brethren Welfare Workers are the following: John Eller, president; Harvey Long, vice-president; and Ira Mikesell, secretary-treasurer.

Gift from the Sea

ANNE MORROW LINDBERGH

Here is one answer to the conflicts in our lives. The setting of the book is the sea shore; the time, a brief vacation which has lifted the author from the every day existence into the sphere of meditation. In a blend of complete sincerity and delicacy, so uniquely her own, Anne Morrow Lindbergh shares with the reader her awareness of the many frustrating elements we face today. With radiant lucidity she makes visible again the value of inner life, without which there is no true fulfillment. The thoughts in this book are wound about the sea, a beach, an island and a seeker-herself. Of special interest to women. 128 pages. $2.75

Gospel MESSENGER
JULY 30, 1955

WHEN GOD COMMISSIONS HIS CHURCH

BY THE laying on of hands, accompanied by fasting and praying, the earliest Christian missionaries were set apart and commissioned for a work to which the Holy Spirit had called them. In a similar service of consecration, by the laying on of the hands of elders and by the prayers of the Brotherhood (we seem to have forgotten about fasting) new missionaries, new service workers and new pastors were commissioned at the conclusion of the Grand Rapids Conference.

The service is impressive not only for what it means to the individuals who participate directly but also for the reminder that every member of the church should respond to the commissioning of the Holy Spirit. Otherwise, the power at work in our designated representatives is severely restricted. Their hands are strengthened by our prayers, our gifts, our devotion to the will of God where we live. Without our help the arms of the church are shortened and the work of Christ is impaired. We are part of his body, if we are members at all. His body is crippled when any of its members are inactive. A consecration service should be interpreted not only as the church commissioning its representatives but also as God commissioning his church.

Demands on Family Life

I appreciated your thought-provoking and frank statements, particularly concerning the demands of the church on family life, in your editorial, "In Defense of Parents," (April 30). This has been a problem of much concern to us as we see night after night filled with meetings of one sort or another, until as you say, "we wonder what family life can remain after the church has made its stringent demands." It has not been unusual for our four-year-old to end up in tears at the supper table when she discovers daddy has another meeting and must rush to it immediately following supper.

And yet we dislike criticizing our church because it is an active and growing church but, because it is small, it must count on a "faithful few" to carry the bulk of the load. But we find ourselves being torn between the church and the school with so little time left as a family that, when we can afford it, we actually take trips away from home in order to be together, away from the telephone bringing requests for another meeting or activity. It is difficult to get across to our children the idea of the traditional simple life of our Brethren when it has gotten so complex! — One Busy Mother.

The Rich Man and Lazarus

"The rich man also died and was buried; and in Hades, being in torment, he lifted up his eyes, and saw Abraham far off and Lazarus in his bosom. And he called out, 'Father Abraham, have mercy upon me, and send Lazarus to dip the end of his finger in water and cool my tongue; for I am in anguish in this flame.' But Abraham said, 'Son, remember that you in your lifetime received your good things, and Lazarus in like manner evil things; but now he is comforted here, and you are in anguish.'"

We in the U.S.A. might well ponder this part of Luke's Scripture. Our fields, with the blessings of sunshine, rain, machinery and some human effort, have produced such a great abundance of wheat and other farm products that 217 "moth ball" ships in the Hudson and James Rivers in the east and 235 "moth ball" ships anchored at Astoria, Oregon, and Olympia, Washington, together will store 100 million bushels of surplus wheat. Millions are starving. What do we offer them? At an annual expenditure of thirty-four billion dollars we have bombers, airbases, H and atom bombs, to keep the hungry masses from our 200 million dollars worth of wheat.

Are we so dull that we can't see the analogy?

Where are our consciences that we don't flood with letters and other requests our representatives to Congress, to release our surpluses to the starving Hindus and Chinese?

Let us remember the rich man's words: "I beg you, father, to send Lazarus to my father's house, for I have five brothers, so that he may warn them, lest they also come into this place of torment." But Abraham said, "They have Moses and the prophets: let them hear them. . . . If they do not hear Moses and the prophets, neither will they be convinced if some one should rise from the dead."—Imre Domonkos, Oberlin, Ohio.

Vacations

Every summer most churches pass through what is known as the "summer slump," especially, the city and town churches. This is largely because of vacation time for factory and business men. Family reunions also come in for their share. Even chuches grant their pastor vacation time.

Where do folks spend their vacation and what do they do? Some travel across the country; some go on fishing trips; some go to bathing beaches or to mountain resorts; some go abroad—to Europe or the Orient.

What is the purpose of vacations? Is it not for relaxation or rest from regular work? As a lad I learned that rest is just a change of work and through the years I have found this to be very true. Through the thirty-five years of pastoral experience, all but two of my vacations were spent in holding evangelistic meetings. And how refreshing to see souls born into the kingdom!

Now I am not seriously opposed to vacations, that is, if they are spent profitably. Whoever heard of the devil going off on a vacation? I think he must work overtime during the vacation season in order to win folks. What would happen to you and me and all mankind, yes and nature too, if God took a vacation? We must work the works of him who sent us, while it is day; the night comes when no man can work.—C. C. Cripe, Bremen, Ind.

"And the kingdoms of this earth shall become the kingdoms of our Lord," sang the choir in its performance of The Messiah

SEEK FIRST HIS KINGDOM

Harry K. Zeller, Jr.

JESUS began his earthly ministry with the matter-of-fact announcement: "The time is fulfilled, and the kingdom of God is at hand." This kingdom looms large in the teachings of Jesus. It is the all-embracing idea of his ministry. He told his followers to pray for the coming of the kingdom. Few petitions fall from the lips of Christian people more often than the familiar words, "Our Father . . . Thy Kingdom come." Jesus advised all who would achieve life's highest goal to seek this kingdom first.

What is this kingdom for whose coming we pray, whose search is now the central precept of the church?

Is it what the Jews, who first heard Jesus speak of the kingdom understood it to be? It is clear that Jesus did not lead an independent movement against Rome. Such a holy commonwealth, an idea cherished throughout all Jewish history, did not and has not precipitated the kingdom of God.

Is this kingdom of God which we seek first the church? There are some who believe that when the Holy Spirit came in the white heat experience of Pentecost, the church was not only born but actually became the kingdom of God. Since Jesus said so little about the church and since Jesus said so much about the kingdom of God, it seems clear that he had in mind something more extensive for the kingdom than a glorified church. There is no effort in the New Testament to equate the kingdom of God with the visible church and most scholars believe we fall short of the meaning of the kingdom if we confine it to the church.

Is this kingdom wrapped up in the second coming of Christ?

Everywhere the New Testament breathes the air of a new environment which is the kingdom of God. The present tense of the verb replaces the past tense. Gone is the familiar Old Testament exhortation, "Behold the days are coming . . . " The proclamation is emphatic—Jesus inaugurates his ministry with the words "The time is fulfilled and the kingdom of God is at hand." Five times the New Testament insists that the kingdom is something available to man as of right now. There can be little doubt that the kingdom of God became a reality in the world with the first coming of Christ, who thought of the kingdom as a power available at once and to all who would seek it first. This kingdom is a power already released in the world, set on its way, and nothing can stop it!

No less than five kingdoms are mentioned by Jesus. He speaks of "The kingdom" without any identifying words; of "my kingdom" with a personal pronoun; "my Father's kingdom"; and of both the kingdom of God and the kingdom of heaven. Jesus did not distinguish among these kingdoms, nor did he ever define the kingdom with precision satisfactory to the editor of a dictionary. It is not too much to say that Jesus found it difficult to convey the meaning of the kingdom. He employed parables, inference, allusion and figures of speech to interpret an idea that was broader and bigger than a word.

We think of a kingdom as an earthly empire. In the New Testament the kingdom is "a sphere of influence." In his translation Moffat employs the term realm for kingdom. The kingdom is not a choice piece of real estate; it is a spiritual concept. The throne of the kingdom is in no palace, but in the souls of men. The extent of this kingdom is marked by no boundary, but only the all-embracing love of God. It is not meat or drink, but righteousness and joy and peace. This kingdom includes every thing that is good, true, beautiful, honest, sound and of good report in the universe. This kingdom foretokens the whole world growing better and brighter; all people becoming stronger, gentler, truer, happier and kinder. This kingdom forsees every virtue known to man finding new lovers; it holds that nature, the elements and life itself will all be brought to fullness under the moving sway and mighty power of God's influence. When we pray for such a kingdom we are asking for nothing less than that the light and love and power of God may increase and abound everywhere in the world.

There is no more daring and demanding idea in all revelation than the kingdom of God.

We do well to inquire concerning the Lord of this kingdom. What kind of monarch is he whose realm knows no end? The God of the kingdom is a ruler whose sovereignty is that of a father. Not, "Our Father . . . Thy family come," or "Our King . . . Thy Kingdom come," but "Our Father . . . Thy Kingdom come."

The God of the kingdom we seek is a paradoxical mixture of the near and the far. The God of the kingdom we seek combines the intimate and the austere. He rules only with the love of a father though he holds in his hands the power of a king.

Who shall dwell in this kingdom? Jesus called unto himself an even dozen disciples and designated three of these as his more intimate associates. From all he asked for sacrifice, but he did not look upon any of his followers as slaves. "No longer do I call you servants . . . but I have called you friends." Paul reminds us that God bestows upon us different talents, "some should be apostles, some prophets, some evangelists, some pastors and teachers." John suggests that all who dwell in this new realm are citizens of the kingdom.

Certainly the New Testament viewed as potential members in the kingdom the fickle Galatians, the materialistic Corinthians, the sensuous Ephesians, the unstable Thessalonians and the wayward Romans. Nor would any current testament of faith omit the warmhearted Frenchman, the unpredictable Russian, the hard-working German, the unreleased African, the high-riding American. Here is a kingdom conceived to include the lettered and the unlettered, the crude and the cultured, the widow's mite and the rich young ruler's mint, the saint in his rapture and the sinner in his ruin, the charm of youth and the afterglow of age.

Disciples, friends, apostles, prophets, evangelists, pastors, teachers, creatures, citizens—is there any one characteristic common to all of these who are possibilities for the kingdom? Any one quality or experience which makes them potential participants in the Kingdom of God? Must they have the same baptism? Repeat the Apostles' Creed? Make their communion regularly? We see at once how helpless all our rules of thumb become as measurements. One thing that they all have in common—they are seekers of the kingdom. They make this search the first thing in life—"Seek first his kingdom." For them the Christian life is a journey, not an arrival.

What is this Christianity? It is a way of life. Who is this Christ? He is the Way. Who

SUMMER DAWN

MAY ALLREAD BAKER

The willows lean like pale green clouds
Above the crystal pool.
And in the valley, soft gray mists
Weave shadows dim and cool.
While pearly vapors trail their scarves
Of lace across the sky,
On twig and leaf and slender grass
The bright, dew-diamonds lie.

But now a crimson flush is spread
Upon the crystal pool,
Although the willows lean above
Like green clouds fresh and cool.
The pearly vapors turn to pink,
The soft, gray mist is gone;
A mourning dove, with rosied throat,
Salutes the rosy dawn.

Reviewing Annual Conference

COMPARISONS are odious, even when they are suggested in the spirit of helpful discussion. For this reason we would hardly venture to compare the Grand Rapids Conference with others of recent memory. This was not the biggest Conference, though attendance was about up to expectations. It did not face up to such burning issues as those that have confronted some annual meetings, but it handled its business in a straightforward and brotherly way. It did not provide a stage for colorful figures to entertain us or a platform for novel ideas to disturb us. It was marked instead by thoughtful discussion of some of the opportunities that await us if we can sufficiently commit our lives and our resources to seeking first God's kingdom.

Unlike some church conferences, this one was little interested in telling national leaders how to run the country or in belaboring the obvious evils that abound on every hand. One special resolution of the Board called attention to weapons of mass destruction; we made our usual protests against militarism; but even in these issues our resolutions were directed more toward accepting our own responsibility, toward getting down to business in our homes, churches and local communities. Especially were we made aware of present opportunities to bring in new members, to establish new churches, to give a stronger witness for our convictions. We recognized that one of our greatest needs is for a sense of stewardship, a willingness to share our resources not just in response to an emergency need but in response to the call of God.

The Conference took a square look at the present situation that faces foreign missions and called for a new policy and strategy that will place greater emphasis on the growth and leadership of indigenous churches. We hope that in future years other aspects of our program can be reviewed with the same maturity of outlook.

The Conference program demonstrated the place that good music and drama can play in our worship services. The presentation of the Messiah by a choral group familiar with its choruses should be a recurring feature of the Sunday program. The drama presented by the McPherson players, though there was some question as to its appropriateness for an evening session, was so well played that it stimulated consideration of a thorny problem—and proved that a well-chosen and tastefully presented drama might convey a greater message than three or four sermons.

Thanks to Vernard Eller and a verse-speaking choir composed of young people, the lost art of Bible reading was revived so that we discovered how seldom we catch the thrilling cadences and the exciting ring of familiar Scripture passages. Certainly such worship experiences are much preferable to the routine opening exercises that used to precede some of our Conference messages.

Now that the 169th Conference is over and delegates have caught up on their sleep and vacationers have returned home a few suggestions for future Brethren conclaves may be in order. For what they are worth, consider these proposals:

1. Although we had more delegates than ever before, only two thirds of our churches were represented. Distance may account for the failure of some to represent, but there are still too many whose votes went unrecorded. Every church should write Conference expense into its budget both to lend its support to making Brotherhood decisions and to profit by the fellowship with other churches.

2. We talk of our need to develop leaders, but even Standing Committee in its appointments fails to spread jobs as widely as it might. Some names recur frequently in appointments or nominations while others, equally capable, are overlooked. Why not follow an unwritten rule to use a name only once and to consider how overloaded many leaders have become? We have the leadership if we will use it wisely.

3. It is time to recognize that Annual Conference is an institution that cannot be set up quickly as a one-night or even a one-week exhibit without considerable planning and expense. Why should we overwork our regional and national staff personnel and exhaust their budgets to provide a feast of good things for everyone to enjoy? We ought at least to employ a part-time Conference director who can follow through in arranging for a mass Conference with specialized interests. And what would be wrong with charging a modest registration fee so that every one who enjoyed Conference would bear his rightful share of the expense?—K.M.

It is important to note that its [Annual Conference] original function was positive and not negative. Its mission was to defend doctrine by constructive processes, by clearly and fearlessly defining the faith of the members, . . . to formulate a system of doctrines and establish a series of principles for the guidance and protection of the church of God — Brumbaugh's History of the Brethren.

We Hold Our Peace

Telling the good news of the gospel is a moral compulsion for the Christian; in sharing with others, his own joy in following Christ is increased.

Leland S. Brubaker

H. Armstrong Roberts

THE writer of the Book of Second Kings has preserved for us a very interesting story (2 Kings 7:3-20). Samaria was the capital of the Northern Kingdom and had often been captured and demolished by enemies. Right at this time it was being besieged by the Syrians under King Ben-hadad, driving the Samarians to hunger.

Four miserable lepers outside the city gate were holding council among themselves. They said, "If we stay here, we will starve. If we go into the city we will also starve for the people have no food. Let us go to the camp of the Syrians. Maybe they will have mercy on us and will give us food to eat."

In the meantime the Lord had made the Syrians to hear the sound of a great army approaching, so that they fled the camp. When the lepers arrived they found the camp deserted. They ate and drank their fill and even hid some clothes and some gold for their future use. Then they remembered their own people and decided that they wanted to share their good fortune with them saying, "Behold, this as a day of good tidings and we hold our peace." The lepers hurried back to the city and there they told the king what had happened. Then the people of Samaria had food and drink for themselves.

Man's joy is never greater than when he shares it with his fellow men. If something is of real importance to us it becomes all the more important when we share it with someone else. We reach our highest joys as we share more fully with all God's children everywhere. This is doubly so when we are Christians. Jesus taught us as his disciples to go into all the world, preaching, teaching, healing, telling the good news.

This matter of sharing, then, becomes a Christian moral compulsion, one that we cannot and dare not try to escape. The early Christians had nothing to share but this good news which they had received from Jesus. But this was the drive that has taken the church into every known land of our modern world. Sharing is one of the great joys and privileges of the gospel of Christ.

The world is crying out for help. There are hundreds of millions of so called "little people" who have recently been privileged to live in sovereign states. These are the people of the Philippines, Burma, India, Pakistan, Ceylon and Indonesia. They are really crying out to the rest of the free peoples of the world for help and their needs are terrific.

Two-thirds of the people of the world are hungry. There are millions in this day that have a continued struggle to keep body and soul together. Their hunger brings them to the place where they will choose bread instead of security. Yet, we have our baskets full to overflowing. Our granaries are full to overflowing even now and some people find it hard to share even our surpluses with the people of the world who have nothing. Storage of our surplus foodstuffs costs the United States $700,000 a day.

The world is not just hungry for food; it is hungry for a new way of life. Revolutions are abroad in our world and peace seems far away. Men in many places are seeking wistfully a new way of life. What have we to say about this cry that comes from so many sections of our modern world? Turn around and face your world.

There are some important words for this hour. One of them is the word urgency. The proclamation of the gospel has always been urgent. Jesus used his daylight hours and many times worked far into the night to accomplish his mission. Paul, a great hero of the early church was literally driven to the ends of the known world to carry the good news. The rest of the disciples of Jesus felt that this was a matter of life and death and they were the only ones entrusted with the message. This was the answer to the age-long question. This was the answer to the scramble for life and would take away its aimlessness. Jesus, his disciples and the early church felt that there was a real urgency about preaching the good news now and everywhere.

We need a greater concern for peoples of our modern world. Yohanan Mar Thoma, Metropolitan of the Syrian Church in India said recently at a religious meeting, "God is more likely to ask us about our concerns for people than about our faith." In Acts 17:6, we find that Paul and Silas had been at Thessalonica for a matter of three weeks, but in that short time they had created a real city-wide conflict. We need a new and greater concern for peoples today than we have at the present time.

If we have a real sense of urgency about the gospel, if we have a deeper concern for peoples of our world, then we will have a sense of mission. We are called, every Christian of us, to be a missionary. Every community here and abroad is to be considered a mission field. Every church is to be considered a mission board. ALL of us are commissioned by God to witness to the gospel and to make it effective in our daily life. As a church we ought to declare ourselves openly as a great missionary society entering and taking for Christ every village and town in our world. "God sent not his son into the world to condemn the world, but that the world might be saved through him" (John 3:17).

This is a day of good tidings. What are our good tidings? That Jesus Christ has brought us a way by which our sins can be forgiven. That this life is not the end, it is but the beginning. That our spirits are immortal. Jesus said, "This is eternal life, that they should know thee, the only true God and Jesus Chirst whom thou hast sent" (John 17:3). Paul said in Rom. 6:23, "The free gift of God is eternal life in Jesus Christ our Lord." Our good tidings is that Christ has come to seek and to save that which was lost.

Do we hold our peace? We are all amazed at how the early church was able to grow. It was not because they had all the money they wanted nor because they had fine buildings in which to hold their services. It was because they had a great compulsion to share the good news with their neighbors and friends.

This is a day of good tidings and we hold our peace. Let me give two simple but important illustrations. Last year, 1954, the total gain in membership for the Church of the Brethren was 3,340 members. This is the largest gain that we have had for some years. In 1949 we suffered an over-all loss in membership of 711. Yet this year with the great gain that we have made means but 3.2 new members for each one of our 1,040 churches. Surely this can mean nothing but that we are refusing to tell the gospel to the people all around us.

Then take our church finances. Last year, 1954, the Church of the Brethren people gave for all purposes, so far as records are kept, an average of $42 per person. Even though this is a gain over the last several years, it is still below what we could do if we would. This represents but

Dr. Jackson, whose sense of mission is taking him behind the iron curtain to preach Christ to the Russian people, was the Tuesday evening speaker at Annual Conference

2.3% of the actual income of the Church of the Brethren based on national averages. If we, as members of the church, would have given our full tithe then we would have received in the church coffers the sum of $34,780,000 instead of the $8,054,000 which we did receive. If we would have given our tithe as a church we could easily triple all of our program.

God's judgment is upon us today. It is to be seen in the newspapers, heard over the radio and seen on the TV screens. Our mad race in armaments, the sweeping attacks of godless philosophies, the rise in juvenile delinquency and the waste of money spent for things not useful but even harmful to us, all point to the fact that the church and its followers need to share the good news as it never has before.

Let us rise to the challenge of our day. We are bringing to a close this great Annuál Conference of our church. There is a dedication of life as well as of tithes and offerings. Let it also be the time when each and everyone of us resolve to tell the gospel story more than we have ever done before: to tell it in Europe, where democracy and communism are waging a bitter struggle for the hearts and minds of youth; to tell it in Africa, where new ideas are battering against age-old barriers of poverty, superstition and disease; to tell it in Asia, where in the wake of war, millions are hungry, homeless and fearful of the future; to tell it in the United States where plenty abounds. Let us join hands with youth and adults all around the world in the dynamic struggle for freedom, peace and the Christian way of life. We do not well if in this day of good tidings we hold our peace!

makes this journey into the kingdom of God? We, of the way. We, who are pilgrims on the road to life. We, who seek a city not made with hands, whose builder and maker is God. We, who hunger and thirst after righteousness in the faith that we shall be filled. We are the company of those who seek the kingdom where dwells our God.

True, in the manner of the Bible itself, we think of our life as a pilgrimage from the darkness of wrong to the light of life. The Bible opens on a primordial chaos with the swirling fury of darkness enveloping everything. God smiles, drawing back the black mantle of night to clothe the earth in the golden glory of the day. In rapid order he creates a beautiful garden eastward in Eden, filling it with every manner of fruit and food, animal and creature, and at last peopling it with the flesh which has the breath of his own spirit. But sin rears its ugly head and the purity of Eden vanishes before eyes that are now evil. Our first parents walk out of paradise into the hard hurting world which humanity has known through all these long centuries. It is a torturous journey which humanity takes, following first the children of Israel to slavery in Egypt, through the wilderness agonies to the land of Promise where they taste all the woes and wars of the kingdoms of this world. These children falter and follow false Gods, but never lose the lure of the one true God, from whom to be turned away is to fall into utter darkness, to whom to turn is to find life and eternity. Man's off-again on-again allegiance requires of God a fuller revelation and a greater sacrifice, so Christ comes to the earth that men might become new creatures for the old. This Christ moves among mankind with purity and perfection, but humanity hounds him at last to the skull-shaped hill called Calvary, where his cross juts crudely into the sky. And so the darkness settles over the whole earth again. Mankind must begin anew his pilgrimage toward the City of God. This time the journey has new aspects. Because the grave could not hold the Christ, streaks of light fall on the altar stairs which slope through the darkness up to God. As the pilgrim turns toward the light he discovers he walks not alone, he has a companion on the way. On this journey we still set foot in the year of our Lord 1955 with the City of Lights far, far in the distance.

The pilgrim represents the still searching, still striving, still growing, still journeying Christian. We have not yet arrived. A Christian is not one who has gone all the way with Christ for none of us has gone all the way. The Christian is one who has found the right road and is walking in it. Here we are all pilgrims, who, for the much journey that is behind us, still follow the way that leads to the kingdom of God.

By a strange paradox the nearer we come to the kingdom, the farther off we discover we are from it. We are all of us so far short of the perfection of God in Christ that we still seek first his kingdom. We still search for a kingdom as pilgrims to whom this lovely, troublous, undaunted human life is but a highway leading at last to the City of God.

The kingdom of God is not an empty domain. It is not ideas floating around in space. It is people, people who seek a better world, who strive to be finer Christians, who work that all others may have the glories of the Christian life which they share. It is the people whose lives are a constant, unending search. It is people whose lives are hid with Christ in God Those who seek first such a kingdom do not enter it; they are the kingdom.

This kingdom is not a kingdom at all as men can think of the kingdoms of this world, but a realm of love. It is not ruled over by a king, but by a father. This kingdom is in their hearts and they are the kingdom. What a fascinating paradox! What a marvelous hope!

What we are dealing with is too big to define entirely. Like the love of God, it is beyond human comprehension. All definitions of this kingdom fall short of the mark. Jesus himself kept coming at it with pictures, with dreams, with inspirations. Each time he says, "The kingdom of God is like . . . " your mind begins to draw a picture, but you seem to hear him say in soft voice, "I haven't told you the half of it." Paul tries his hand at it with the words, "Eye hath not seen nor ear heard neither has it entered into the heart of man the things which God hath prepared for those who love him." The story is not complete, nor will it be until we have all finished the journey which is life.

First, last and always seek this kingdom. Join in that pilgrimage which leads from life as it is to life as it shall be. As you make that journey you may take a sharp upward turn; like Moses of old, "you will walk the earth no more because you go forever to be with the Lord." Or, in an unsuspecting moment, you may round a bend in the road from which you will see John the Revelator, standing on the beetling cliffs of Patmos, shouting out across the tumbling centuries, "Hallelujah for the Lord God Omnipotent reigneth."

The road will lead on up to that place where the tabernacle of God is with men, to that time when God shall be with us and we with him, to that eternity in which we are his people and he is our God.

When "Possess" Means Seize or Gain

Luther A. Weigle

THE verb possess is used fifty-four times in the King James version of the Book of Deuteronomy, and nearly one hundred times more in the rest of the Bible. In almost all of these cases it has the sense of seize, acquire, gain or take possession of as in Deut. 1:8: "Go in and possess the land."

Shakespeare used the word in this sense. In the third part of King Henry VI, act I, scene 1, line 26, the Earl of Warwick encourages the ambition of Richard Plantagenet, Duke of York, to gain Henry's throne:

"Possess it, York;
For this is thine and not King Henry's heirs'."

In The Tempest, Act III, scene 2, line 100, Caliban tells Stephano how to oust Prospero from control of the island:

"Remember
First to possess his books; for without them
He's but a sot, as I am, nor hath not
One spirit to command."

The Greek verb which the King James Version translates by "purchased" in Acts 1:18 and 8:20, and by "obtained" in Acts 22:28, is rendered as "possess" in three other New Testament passages, with the result that the English reader is not aware of their true meaning. "In your patience possess ye your souls" (Luke 21:19) is correctly translated, "By your endurance you will gain your lives." The Pharisee's statement, "I give tithes of all that I possess" (Luke 18:12), is properly, "I give tithes of all that I get"—that is, the tithe is based upon income rather than upon capital. Paul's counsel to the Thessalonians that each should "know how to possess his vessel" (1 Thess. 4:4) means "know how to take a wife."

The last of these passages has been so much misunderstood that it will be well to quote it more fully: "This is the will of God, your sanctification: that you abstain from immorality; that each one of you know how to take a wife for himself in holiness and honor, not in the passion of lust like heathen who do not know God."

Studying the Word of God

HOW may the average church worker be trained to realize the shifting of "our little systems" while a God, the same yesterday, today and forever, continues to work through his chosen people? Would it not help if he could be led to see the period of the patriarchs giving way to that of the tribe, and nomadic life being replaced by the period of dwelling in ceiled houses, the loosely federated tribes giving place to the monarchy, tabernacle replaced by temple, temple, in part, by synagogue? How may the wisdom that comes through the long view ever be achieved by anyone except as he knows history? And if it is religious insight that he wants, how dare he be ignorant of the sweep of Hebrew history that is presented to us in our Old Testament?

The person who remembers only what his own eyes have seen and who knows only what he has heard his parents and grandparents say is of necessity limited in vision, tied to the errors of his own generation, restricted in outlook and judgment, "cabin'd, cribb'd, confin'd." When under the providence of God the books of our Old Testament were gathered together and preserved for us, it was made possible for every believer to escape such restrictions and limitations. For the person who knows his Bible is acquainted with the history of one people, and that a most important one; he has seen the slow and difficult emergence of a nation; he has watched the growing religious concepts of a gifted people until at last, in the fullness of time, that people and those religious beliefs became the cradle for the Incarnation, the perfect revelation of God to the world.

Yet there are people who wonder why we must have Sunday-school lessons from the Old Testament! A group of adults, with the characters of Samuel and Saul and David to study, lament the tedious task of "getting something" out of such a lesson and say how much better it would be if Brethren, who of course are much wiser than the benighted souls of 1000 B.C., would spend their time talking about peace and how to secure it. Another group, with the stories of Hezekiah to stir their intelligence and imagination, conclude only how un-Brethren it is to think of battles long ago.

Most of us know that as a nation we are illiterates so far as the Bible is concerned. Do we realize to how great an extent we Brethren are illiterates? And instead of being ashamed about it, we have decided that it is a sign of our wisdom and superiority. The how-to-do-it books, the courses in parenthood and modern psychology and how to win friends and influence people, are supplanting Bible study in our Sunday schools until at least one pastor can tell of a family that came to him and asked if there was a class they could attend where they could learn something about the Bible.

Once when the professor taught a course in Literature of the Bible, he found that parents were a little embarrassed to discover that their children knew little about the Bible. Now when the professor reproves a class because they cannot explain a Biblical reference to Moses or one of the prophets, the students remind him serenely that it is not considered wise now to teach the Old Testament stories to children and of course they do not understand the reference.

But, someone is certainly saying to himself, we are a New Testament church; the New Testament is our creed and standard of conduct. That is true, and surely all who read and teach the Old Testament should realize that its acts and its sayings must always be judged by the New. But that does not mean that the Old has no value for us. God is a God in history and we should so know him. It was as the God of Abraham, of Isaac, and of Jacob that God appeared to Moses in the burning bush.

"We have heard with our ears, O God, our fathers have told us, what work thou didst in their days, in the times of old," so sang the Psalmist.

"Blessed be the Lord God of Israel, for he hath visited and redeemed his people . . .

As he spake by the mouth of his holy prophets, which have been since the world began . . . " So was the coming of the Christ child celebrated.

"God, who at sundry times and in divers manners spake in time past unto the fathers by the prophets, Hath in these last days spoken unto us by his Son . . . " The Old Testament is assumed as the background for the New.

"God of our fathers, known of old . . . " So goes the poem which we find in our hymnbook. But what do we know of that God? It is current practice for some ministers to tell the disturbed person to resolve his problems by sitting down in a chair, relaxing, drawing a few long breaths and thinking about God. But what kind of a God does he think of? What does he know of the great and marvelous works of the person to whom he is turning for help?

There are dangers present in the use of the Old Testament and what we are witnessing today is in part a reaction against unwise use. If God becomes only a God of history and not a living Presence at work in our generation, if knowledge of names and events be substituted for intelligent and thoughtful understanding of those events, if the letter dominates over the spirit, then our study of the Old Testament becomes fruitless. But if it is silly to memorize the names of all the judges of Israel, does it therefore follow that we should be so ignorant of Hebrew history that the faith chapter of Hebrews becomes merely a recital of proper names? "And what shall I more say? for the time would fail me to tell of Gideon, and of Barak, and of Samson, and of Jephthae, of David also, and Samuel, and of the prophets . . . "

A Christianity divorced of its history has its dangers too and they surround us. The workers for peace often seem curiously unaware that the chief difficulty in bringing about world brotherhood is people. And nowhere are people more brilliantly portrayed, in their best moments and in their worst, than in the Bible. Probably seldom in history are the lives of three men, so capable, so gifted, as Samuel, Saul, and David so closely connected. Their period was a crucial one, the transition from the loose government of the tribes to that of the monarchy. The study of their successes and failures, the influence of each on

Scofield from Ewing Galloway

Archeologists spend years unearthing the cities of antiquity to gain more light on the life in those times; the reading of the Old Testament helps us to see God at work in history the others, gives more practical insight into human nature than any ten modern books on psychology. Hezekiah is one in what may seem at first glance to be the somewhat monotonous succession of first bad kings and then good kings of Judah. But we might learn from our present series of lessons that no reform, no law, no Passover feast ever settles things, for every new generation must be taught and the forces of evil are always waiting to take over when good people lean back and rest from their labors. And the dream of a warless world, of a time when " . . . they shall beat their swords into plowshares, and their spears into pruninghooks; nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more" belongs to the period of this series.

Our Annual Conference has for our own denomination something of the significance of a great Jewish feast. It has tremendous possibilities for good but in itself it carries no guarantee that those good fruits will always ensue. It may be a time for political maneuvering in committees and business sessions, for the worst of church manners in general assemblies. Or it may be the time when wise policies are adopted through genuinely democratic procedures, when our naturally strong sense of unity and brotherhood may be further strengthened by our association together, when the church as a whole may receive fresh inspiration and impetus to move toward spiritual frontiers. Will we recognize clearly the ends toward which we are working and use our Conference, so rich in memories to many of us, for these good ends? Will we accept our Bible—not just part of it, but all of it—and putting to use the intelligence with which God has endowed us and using all the insights which consecrated scholarship has given us, widen our horizons and deepen our understanding by a genuine study of the Word of God?

When we face the problem of how to use our institutions and our customs to the glory of God, of how to study and interpret the Bible so that it becomes fruitful to all good works, we come to the place where all our questioning leads us—to an overwhelming sense of the love of God that was in Christ reconciling the world to him, and to a dependence on the Holy Spirit, our comforter and guide, who, it was promised, should lead us into all truth. As we respond unto that love, as we yield ourselves obedient to that guide, the God that works in us both to will and to do of his good pleasure may be trusted for results.

"Give ear, O Shepherd of Israel, thou that leadest Joseph like a flock; thou that dwellest between the cherubims, shine forth.

"Turn us again, O God and cause thy face to shine; and we shall be saved."

Sunday at Annual Conference

SUNDAY is the big day at Conference. This is the time of maximum attendance, the day when Brethren who cannot take off time from other responsibilities and who live within driving distance come for the week end or for Sunday sessions alone. Special busses bring local church groups from near-by communities. This assures a capacity crowd for the morning service—and a problem of finding eating places that will open on Sunday to serve such a large crowd.

Sunday, June 19, was no exception. For the morning service every available seat was taken. A large attendance was guaranteed also for the adult Bible study period with the lesson brought this year by Mrs. Lucile Long Strayer. Our readers can sample a portion of her message and read digests of the morning and evening addresses, which appear as articles in this issue. The afternoon service was a two-hour presentation of Handel's The Messiah, sung by the Conference choir and directed by Clyde W. Holsinger. Soloists were Mrs. James Oren, soprano; Mrs. James Boitnott, alto; Ralph McFadden, tenor; and Marlin Brightbill, bass.

The church convocation service in the evening included a unique worship service arranged by the worship leader, Alvin F. Brightbill. The moderator and the assembly read responsively a "convocational inquiry" before the message by Leland Brubaker. Both in this worship service and in the concluding consecration service, six trumpeters contributed to its effectiveness. They were Richard Coffman, Carl Showalter, Peter Hartman, Bryon Royer, Richard Mishler and Wendell Myers.

As the cover photo in this issue illustrates, a climax of the evening service is the consecration of new pastors, new service workers and new missionaries. Conference concluded with the induction of the new moderator, Paul M. Robinson.

VARIATIONS ON A THEME

Earle Fike, Jr.

HOW tragically is God at the mercy of those who interpret his Word. For many of the original themes in the Bible are scarcely recognizable when we finish with our modern variations. Go with me back through the Scriptures and, midst all the dissonant variations of our day, hear a clear and beautiful symphony, a theme which in God's mind is one of the greatest in all of His Word. "Peace on earth . . . good will to men." This would suggest that peace is the will of God! Is this a theme? Or is it another tragic variation arranged by a minority of religious dreamers?

Listen then as it resounds from the top of Mt. Sinai: "Thou shalt not kill." And again as Isaiah looks longingly into the future: "For unto us a child is born, unto us a son is given: . . . and his name shall be called Wonderful, Counsellor, The mighty God, the everlasting Father, The Prince of Peace. Of the increase of his government and peace, there shall be no end." Or again in the hills of Galilee where the Man we call Lord and Master said, "Blessed are the peacemakers: for they shall be called the children of God."

But the beauty of the theme scarcely has a chance to begin until our own variations begin to be played. We hear such things as these: "War is just a part of human nature. It's bound to happen. People are like that. And after all the Scripture says there shall be wars and rumors of wars. Who are we to go against that! The Scripture must be fulfilled."

If ever there was a scripture that has been worn to frazzles from misuse it is this one. For it has long been the excuse for the confusions that we feel; an excuse for the fact that we have wars and do not seem to be able to do anything about them. Put your answer in the form of a question. If you were asked to predict what will happen on our highways over a national holiday, what would you say? Probably you would say there will be accidents and many people will be killed. There will be accidents and more accidents. But would predicting it place your seal of approval on it? Would it mean that you think it is a virtue? That you condone and want to support it? Hardly.

The Bible in many cases predicts war, but it never holds it up as a virtue to be developed. But peace is upheld as a virtue, as one of the highest virtues. It is encouraged by Christ in words and even by his very life. And thirty exhortations to peace and yet we take this one prophecy and place it against more than love!

And is it really human nature to kill? We think so because we often get involved in petty squabbles in our homes and churches. But to kill? Listen to what Bill Davidson, writing in the Nov. 8, 1952, Collier's Magazine, says, "In any given action

Pastor of the Meyersdale church, Pennsylvania

It is not human nature to kill: in spite of intensive training in the art of killing the army can count on only one in two to shoot of World War II, only twelve to twenty-five per cent of all combat soldiers who were armed and in a position to fire their weapons at the enemy were able to pull the trigger."

This is no jab at the courage of American soldiers. Courage is not connected with this and the army knows it. It is a matter of a four-thousand-year-old standard of morality—it is a matter of religious training. It is not human nature to kill. By intensive education the army still can count on only one out of every two to pull the trigger at the enemy. That is the figure from Korea. Next time you feel it is human nature to war, think about the fact that we must re-educate human nature before it can perform the simplest functions of war, killing another man.

Turn now and go back again into the beauty of God's Word. Listen again to Isaiah. "And he shall judge among the nations, and shall rebuke many people: and they shall beat their swords into plowshares, and their spears into pruninghooks: nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more." Or listen to the words of the greatest Christian missionary. Paul says, "Avenge not yourselves, but rather give place unto wrath; for it is written, Vengeance is mine; I will repay, saith the Lord."

But hardly is the beauty of this theme written upon the air until it becomes confused with a jangle of discordant variations on the original theme. We hear: "These people must learn a lesson. Justice must prevail." Or our friends, the Roman Catholics, would say, "Wars may be just or unjust." Or others say, "In the name of Christian love we must fight for those who are oppressed."

The position of love as opposed to justice is always a tough problem. And people in our time

In the name of justice millions were killed in battle and millions more in bombing of cities, and cities and countryside were destroyed have decided that it is their duty to administer justice, as well as love. Paul Scherer says, "In the name of justice, there were 30 million deaths in the armed services, 9 million prisoners, 9 million missing, 27 million orphans, 40 million dead civilians, 15 million widows, 60 million wounded, and 30 million refugees. The question of justice in the light of such facts becomes slightly academic." What Scherer is saying is that such a wasteful effort to be just and afterward loving defeats both love and justice. Shall we slaughter that love may abound? Shall we have twenty-five disfigured Japanese girls under the supervision of Rev. Tanimoto serve as an example of our love for the people of Hiroshima? Will our interest, however sincere, equal our justice dropped on their city some ten years ago?

But if there is a just war, who decides whether it is just? Is it not rather strange that the Catholic faith that supports this view has Catholics killing Catholics because each feels that the war he supports is a just war? And the same goes for Lutherans killing Lutherans; Presbyterians killing Presbyterians; and so it goes. If there would have been a Church of the Brethren in Germany in the second World War, there would have been Brethren killing Brethren. Christians everywhere killing their brothers because someone has said a war may be just. The Word of God gives no individual the right to decide what is just and unjust, whether it be pope, priest, minister or farmer in the field. "Vengeance is mine saith the Lord." The way of love is hard, but it is easier than judging wisely about another's actions.

Look again at the original theme, untampered with by modern variations. As we look at the words of our Master we read: "Ye have heard that it hath been said, Thou shalt love thy neighbour, and hate thine enemy. But I say unto you, Love your enemies, . . . and pray for them which . . . persecute you." Or take the beautiful words, "This is my commandment, That ye love one another, as I loved you."

But again we are plagued with the noise of variations as Christians shout, "We are afraid for our religion. If we do not fight, Christianity will be destroyed." Even so great a man as Kenneth Scott Latourette would join the throngs and say, "However incompatible the spirit of Jesus and the armed force may be, and however unpleasant it may be to acknowledge the fact, as a matter of plain history the latter has often made it possible for the former to survive.

God forbid that this be true. If it takes an armored giant with bloody sword to keep alive the belief of our Lord and Master, I want no part of it. If it takes an H-Bomb and twenty-five girls from Hiroshima with scarred faces, if this is the price we must pay to see and remember the cross, I want no part of it. As a matter of plain history Mr. Latourette could have pointed out that the time Christianity grew fastest was during the time armed force tried to wipe it out, and it did not fight back. Lives were lost to be sure, but in the name of Christ rather than in the name of war.

Would Christianity die if we did not defend it with a sword? Is it a military necessity to fight for the cause of Christ? Go with me back two thousand years to a stormy day and a place called Golgotha. Here on a cross hangs the King of kings. "Save yourself, come down if you can. If you are really the Son of God prove it," they shout at him. Was ever there greater need? Was ever necessity more boldly flashed in front of anyone? Imagine if you can, Christ descending from the cross and, sword in hand, slashing to pieces those who taunted him. Standing with bloody sword in hand above the bodies of the slain, smiling grimly through his teeth, "I guess that proves it. They'll never snuff me out."

No, it does not fit, does it? It is not the way of love. In its birth Christianity did not depend on force to get started. It will never have to depend on force to keep alive. But if it would stay alive it must put down the sword before it slays itself. There is no such thing as necessity for the sword in true Christianity.

Peace is the will of God. It is a theme in the Word of God and not a dreamer's variation.

Annual Conference Resolutions

THE 169th recorded Annual Conference of the Church of the Brethren assembled at Grand Rapids, Michigan, June 14-19, 1955, expresses gratitude:

First, to our loving Father who made it possible for us to be here, who has set before us challenges both new and old while we are here and who has watched over our deliberations and given us guidance as fully as we were willing and able to accept it;

Second, to all those who have led us in our deliberations, guided us in Bible study, inspired us in message and song and who have helped to provide for our needs and make pleasant our physical welfare while we are here.

In the year of opportunity which lies ahead of us we hereby resolve:

A. To surrender ourselves with abandon to God, our Father, that his will may more completely be made known to us and more perfectly fulfilled within us.

B. To become more effective servants of God through His church in order that the things for which our Savior died might grow and progress without barrier in all parts of our world and without stratification in all aspects of our society, even unto the uttermost parts of the earth.

Enriching Our Spiritual Lives

1. We reaffirm our faith in God. Man's way leads but to confusion and deepening despair. God's way leads to light and hope. In his way we wish to invest our total faith. We resolve, therefore, to turn from those who would seek to lead our intellects only, as well as from those who would seek only to stir our emotions. We turn instead to a God who is able to rule our hearts, our intellects and our eternal spirits. We accept his call to oneness. We bow to his will and call him "Our Father."

2. We reaffirm and deepen our personal commitment to Jesus Christ, our Teacher and Savior. Under his blessing we will seek to empty ourselves of self, we will undertake to make central his purposes within us, we will endeavor to cast aside lukewarmness and preoccupation and to walk continually with him in order that his spirit may dwell within us and that we may become like him.

3. We recommit ourselves to the service of the church. Believing that the church has sometimes stood almost powerless in a needy world because it has lacked faith, we resolve to be a part of its increasing faith. We believe in the church as the instrument of God and as the witness unto salvation through Jesus Christ. We shall undertake to make the church more central in our lives; we shall give of our time to its needs and mission; we shall support it generously with our means, giving both our time and our money as unto the Lord; we shall more earnestly pray for its growth and progress.

In order that these resolutions which we have made may be more than words upon paper, we shall seek to help them come alive within us by these and other means.

We will devote time individually to daily Bible reading and prayer.

We will bring our families together in Bible study and family worship.

We will attend church regularly and participate in the services of the church.

We will seek to establish and to participate in studies of the Bible and of the underlying principles of the Christian faith.

We will enter into studies of the doctrines, beliefs, and outreach of the Church of the Brethren and will seek increasingly to become a part of the work of our beloved Brotherhood.

We will seek to understand the emerging ecumenical movement and will endeavor to participate in it as fully as seems to us to be in the will of God.

We will support our pastors and church leaders with unflagging zeal, helping them to lead the church into increasing growth and expanding service.

We will undertake to enlist our families and the youth of our churches in personal commitment to Jesus Christ and to his world-wide service.

Deepening and Enlarging Our Spiritual Service

1. We dedicate ourselves to a continuing and expanding program of evangelism. Whereas we are pleased with the increased emphasis in evangelism in our church and among Christian churches in general, there are still many who have not heard of the way and many who having heard have not understood. We resolve to evangelize in Jesus' name through personal contacts, group contacts, preaching evangelism, any method which effectively spreads the Good Word. We resolve also to follow this with programs of continued teaching so that those who are evangelized may grow in grace and abound in the will of the Lord.

2. We set for ourselves a goal of wisely and continuously establishing new churches wherever it is possible to do so. This will include areas in expanding city developments, areas among the underprivileged and needy and areas where

Because of the vacation period for Brethren Publishing House employees there will be no Gospel Messenger published next week. Regular weekly publication resumes with the Aug. 13 issue.

George and Wilma Kreps of Pottstown, Pa., have been appointed to serve on the Ecuadorian field for a two-year period. Plans are now being completed so that they will be able to leave for Ecuador about Sept. 1.

A. L. Sellers of New Paris, Ind., is available for Bible study classes of a week or ten days duration through this coming fall and winter. He will deal with appreciation for the prose and poetry of the Bible and the technique of memorizing verse and their use in everyday affairs.

Some 70,000 churches and synagogues will be constructed or substantially altered in the United States in the next ten years at a cost of nearly six billion dollars. This is the opinion of George Cline Smith, economist of the F. W. Dodge Corporation, and based on the construction awards for future construction.

More than six million American children were expected to attend vacation church schools or church camps this year. In preparation for the 1955 season, some 35,000 teachers received special training at workshops conducted by 20 state councils of churches and 50 city councils. Most of the schools were conducted by local churches and by co-operative church groups.

The House of Representatives passed the Compulsory Reserve-UMT bill on July 1. The Senate Armed Services Committee held hearings on the bill July 7 and 8. By the time you read this the Senate probably will be considering the bill; Brethren Service recommends, if the Senate has not already acted, that church members wire or write immediately their two senators urging them to oppose the bill.

The new Church of the Brethren at Castañer, Puerto Rico, has been selected as the current Ten Dollar Club church. The call for support of this development, located in the district of Florida, Georgia and Puerto Rico, was issued last week to several hundred Ten Dollar Club members. The Castañer church is the second Spanish-speaking congregation in the Brotherhood and has a membership of fifty.

The city of Duesseldorf in Germany, where only a few years ago hundreds of people were still living in deep air raid shelters, will soon have a special apartment house for disabled war victims. The building is particularly intended for those who have lost both legs and can move only in wheel chairs. Instead of stairs, the apartment house will have inclined planes, so the disabled can get about without aid.

Licensed and Ordained

Marvin Reeves, licensed in the Pleasant Plains church, Okla.

William McDaniel, ordained to the eldership in the Bethany church, Farmington, Del.

Change of Address

Richard N. Miller, from Chicago, Ill., to 321 Old Lane Ave., Dayton 9, Ohio.

Dedication

Amwell church near Sergeantsville, N. J., will dedicate the new addition to the Sunday-school room on Sunday, July 31. In the morning the pastor, Bro. George Landis, will preach; in the afternoon Bro. Abram A. Price, pastor of the Indian Creek church, will bring the message. The Amwell choir will assist in the program.

CO Reunions

Annual meeting of CO's, Sunday, July 31, all day, in the Peters Creek church, Va. W. Harold Row will be the guest speaker.

Eastern area CPS reunion, Sunday, Aug. 21, at the Brethren Service Center, New Windsor, Md. A. Stauffer Curry, executive secretary of the National Service Board for Religious Objectors, will be the guest speaker. Meals will be furnished at 80c for adults and 60c for children. Lodging is available at $1.00 per night. Reservations for meals and lodging should be made by Aug. 10.

News and Comment From Around the World

Presbyterians Approve Ordination of Women

Commissioners to the 167th General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the U.S.A. voted to approve the ordination of women as ministers. The proposal will now be submitted to the 256 presbyteries, a majority of which must approve.

The church, which now has a membership of more than 2,600,000, adopted an overall budget of $25,769,000 for 1956. Of this total almost $10,000,000 was allocated for national missions, $8,551,000 for foreign missions, $3,800,000 for Christian education, $1,300,000 for pensions and $681,000 for theological education.

The General Assembly issued a call to churches and Christians to participate actively in political life. Delegates urged churches to act as the conscience of the community at all levels—local, state, national and world. In approving a World Council of churches appeal the assembly urged the prohibition of all weapons of mass destruction, including hydrogen and atomic bombs. Approval was also given to a motion urging that administration of the Refugee Relief Act be expedited.

In adopting a report by the church's standing committee on social education and action, the Assembly affirmed the church's support of the United Nations, reaffirmed its opposition to peacetime military conscription, spoke out against loyalty oaths and other infringements of civil liberties and urged the church to pay a high regard to the prevention of juvenile delinquency through an effective youth program.

Dr. Paul S. Wright, pastor of the First Presbyterian Church, Portland, Oregon, was elected the new moderator of the church.

American Baptists Approve Reorganization Plan

At the American Baptist Convention held in Atlantic City, a reorganization plan designed to eliminate duplication of activities and authority was approved in principle. The changes would broaden the operations of the General Council to include co-ordination of programs and policies of the Convention and work formerly given to the Council on Missionary Co-operation. The reorganization will not become final until approved as bylaws at next year's annual meeting.

American Baptists heard a call for a more vital and relevant ministry from Dr. V. E. Devadutt, past president of the Baptist Union of Pakistan, India, Burma and Ceylon. He said that the mission of the West in the future must be conceived as a partnership of equality in which there can be "no senior partner." Dr. William Axling, veteran missionary to Japan, urged more Protestant zeal there to counteract strong Communist propaganda. He said there is a need for a strategy that "broadens the base of the evangelistic battle line."

Baptists adopted a unified budget of $7,466,000 for 1956. American Baptists heard an appeal from Dr. Casper C. Warren, the newly elected president of the Southern Baptist Convention, for more co-operation among all Baptist bodies.

The Convention adopted a resolution denouncing a new California law which requires church groups to sign loyalty oaths to obtain tax exemption. Another resolution endorsed the U. S. government's decision to discuss a cease-fire in the Formosa Strait. Baptists also criticized present immigration laws, urged full use of the United Nations in international affairs, reiterated their opposition to the manufacture, sale and use of alcoholic beverages, to universal military training and to increased secularization of the Lord's Day.

Columnist Dorothy Thompson, in commenting on the present race in the production of H-bombs, predicts that another war would not be a war in any sense hitherto known, but a "holocaustic catastrophe." She says the only people who are using their reason "amidst the grotesque dance of death" are the idealists who say the whole business should stop.

the gospel has not been established, both at home and abroad. We call upon our local churches, our districts and our Brotherhood to seek to discover continuing opportunities for expansion and we pledge ourselves as Christians to seek to fulfill such needs.

3. We dedicate our homes to the purposes of God. We view with concern the growing influence of second-class literature, crime and horror comics, unwholesome television programs, degrading movies and other forms of so-called entertainment which invade our homes directly or draw the home members away from the family circle. We commit ourselves to a more careful selection of those things which come into our homes and to a more adequate study of constructive family enterprises; we pledge ourselves to spend more time together as Christian families. In addition to improving the forces inside the home we shall seek to give whatever guidance we can to making more wholesome the character and nature of the outside influences which impinge upon the home. We shall do this by direct contact with those who bring about such influences and by sponsoring appropriate legislative action.

4. We pledge ourselves as local churches and church people to serve more effectively and courageously the needs of our local communities. We must take Christ to the people where they are. We resolve to cross all barriers in our community enterprises in order that the will of Christ may be accomplished among us. It is our faith that the New Testament gospel can transform lives and communities and we wish to be used of God, beginning with ourselves and our families, as his instruments in this endeavor. Where it seems necessary we shall seek to get wider usage and availability of facilities, such as schools, playgrounds, parks, and churches, for community integration and betterment.

5. We renew our commitments to the simple and the good life. We pledge ourselves to temperate, wholesome, upright living. We want Christ's life to be the pattern for our lives; we desire always that he shall be the head of our homes. Ostentation, display, lavish living, dishonest and sharp practices, profit at the expense of our neighbors, whether in this land or in other lands, anything which denies the fullness of brotherhood—these were not a part of his life and we pledge ourselves not to let them be a part of ours. We are pleased with a heritage which alleged that "the word of a Brethren is as good as his bond"; we accept the challenge of furthering such a heritage. Particularly do we pledge ourselves to total abstinence as concerns alcohol, tobacco and the obvious frivolities and vanities of the world. Moreover, we pledge ourselves to teach these ideals to our children.

6. We reaffirm our conviction that all war is sin and once more pledge ourselves, under God, to do all that is within our power both to live and to teach the way of peace as Christ gives us wisdom and opportunity. We commend our Brethren who seek an Alternative Service rather than participation in the military which in some cases, for conscience' sake, may lead even to prison, and we pledge ourselves to provide the continuing leadership and support which is necessary to make such a choice possible. However, we will continue in the spirit of love to serve and to bring our testimony to those of our number who by reason of conscience may choose a position other than the official position of the church. We commend also all of those among us, both young and old, who find it possible to give a year, or years, of volunteer service to the work of the Lord. We believe this is one means of making manifest the way of the good neighbor and of peace. We resolve once more to refrain as fully as possible from all participation in the things which make for war and from the profits of war. We protest continuing militarization within our nation. We resolve to participate conscientiously in maintaining and improving our civil government and in safeguarding our civil liberties.

7. We pledge ourselves to a continuing, friendly, cultural exchange among all peoples. We have profited as a church from the students who have lived in our homes and colleges. Similarly those of our number who have gone abroad have brought benefit to us. We have been blessed also by the refugees whom we have helped to settle in our midst. We regret that our Congress has seen fit to curtail a part of this exchange system. We ask our designated authorities in the church, the nation and the United Nations to seek to give leadership to an expanded exchange program which will make possible contacts with the Chinese, the Russians and all other peoples for the purpose of mutual acquaintance and sharing. We urge especially that Christians from all countries be allowed to visit with each other. We pledge ourselves to use all the opportunities now afforded us to speed up refugee resettlement, student exchange and all other brotherhood opportunities.

8. We pledge ourselves to a continuing mutual aid. God has abundantly blessed us as a nation until we are currently stocked with tremendous surpluses. We urge our government to seek to find additional ways, without political restriction, of sharing our abundance with the needy. We urge the government to continue to utilize the church and other voluntary agencies in the distribution of foods and commodities. We pledge ourselves, as a church, to seek to meet the needs of deprived peoples everywhere and in the name of Christ to give succor unto them, even as he gave succor unto those about him.

9. We pledge ourselves in an increasing effort to widen and deepen the spirit of brotherhood at home as well as abroad. We resolve as Christians to recognize every man as our brother regardless of his race or national origin. We are pleased that our nation is making progress in racial integration. We resolve as Christians to lead the way to brotherhood rather than to be thrust into integration by political action. We shall undertake to deepen the fellowship within our own church that we may indeed be a Church of the Brethren. We shall not cease in these undertakings until brotherhood is as wide as our nation and the world.

10. We pledge ourselves to increase our loyalty to our church institutions, particularly to our Christian colleges and our seminary. We believe that if Christian education can guide our children and youth through the home, the church school, the Christian college and some of them through seminary, we can have a trained Christian leadership, both for the church and for the nation. Without such a program it seems evident that we cannot long have either Christian homes or Christian churches. We resolve, therefore, to support our Christian institutions through prayer, in finances and by sending to these institutions the children of our homes and churches.

11. We pledge ourselves to the intelligent support of every effort of our government and of the United Nations to enhance world co-operation and understanding. We commend all efforts which have been made by our government to bring about and to enter into peaceful negotiation between peoples and nations. We urge our nation to lead out courageously in disarmament proposals and action. We further urge our government to discontinue all undertakings which seem to be gestures of belligerence or threatening displays of military might; we urge the government to curtail and discontinue the testing and stockpiling of nuclear and other lethal weapons. We commend our government for the studies of the constructive use of atomic power. We urge our national leaders to seek to lead the way toward a world of co-operation rather than to be a contributing factor in a world of fear.

Conclusion

We humbly recognize that in ourselves we are not sufficient either unto holiness or unto good works. Our faith, however, is not in ourselves, but in God. He is sufficient for all things.

Our commitment, therefore, is to God through Christ Jesus. Grounded in this faith, we go forward not hesitatingly or driven, but with confidence. For "thine is the kingdom, thine is the power, thine is the glory, both now and forevermore, Amen."

Wissahickon Memorial Is Dedicated

TWO HUNDRED THIRTY-TWO YEARS ago, on Dec. 25, 1723, seventeen Brethren and six converts gathered on the bank of the Wissahickon Creek near Germantown, Pa., for the baptismal service that marked the establishment of the first Brethren congregation in the New World. On the very lovely Sunday afternoon of May 15, 1955, approximately six hundred present-day Brethren from all parts of Pennsylvania and surrounding regions gathered at the same site to dedicate a monument and plaque commemorating that first American baptism.

The Wissahickon Creek lies within Philadelphia's beautiful Fairmont Park and so the baptismal site has remained virtually unchanged over the two centuries. Many Brethren have visited the spot, but until now there has been no marker of any sort to point up its significance. However, during the summer of 1953, the historical tour sponsored by the youth of Eastern Region was led to the Wissahickon by Pastor B. F. Waltz of the Germantown congregation. The young people saw the need and value of a marker and so carried the concern back to the regional youth organization. It was the Eastern Region CBYF, under the direction of park and historical commission officials, that saw through the erection of the attractive monument and plaque.

The service of dedication was conducted under the joint sponsorship of the youth cabinets of the region and the North Atlantic District. Stanley Davis, Jr., district president, presided, and Donald Fogelsanger, regional president, led the litany of dedication. The unveiling was done by Stanley Davis and Phyllis Kulp, member of the district cabinet and participant in the original historical tour. Vernard Eller, editor of youth publications for the Brotherhood and leader of the 1953 tour, delivered the dedicatory address. Bro. Waltz, representing the Brotherhood historical committee, accepted the monument on behalf of the church.

Music for the occasion—consisting largely of hymns written by the Brethren founders—was brought by the Elizabethtown College choir, directed by Prof. Nevin W. Fisher. John Keiper, a member of the district cabinet and the one who headed up the arrangements for the 1953 tour, recounted the history of the project. Bro. Ralph Ebersole, pastor of the Reading church and participant in the original tour, read the scripture and led in prayer. Bro. Berkey Knavel, district youth counselor and pastor of the Ambler church, gave the benediction.

Following the 1723 baptism, the Brethren retired to Germantown for their first love feast in this country. In the same pattern, the Germantown congregation acted as host to some two hundred visiting Brethren —mostly young people—for a love feast on Sunday afternoon following the dedication.

Quotes in the News

Rep. Eugene J. McCarthy of Minnesota: "Christians have been too selfish, too complacent and too comfortable. When they have offered advice to their floundering brothers, it has often been without the support of example—and without charity. Lip service and lapel buttons are obviously not enough."

Senator Ralph E. Flanders: "The Supreme Court has so interpreted the constitution that it is no longer possible to give religious education, whether Christian or of any other type, in our public schools. If, however, the moral law is natural law, it is just as appropriate to teach that in public schools as it is to teach the natural laws of mathematics, physics and chemistry. This is a point on which our comprehension must be sharpened and the minds of our best educators directed.

Walter P. Reuther, president of the United Auto Workers: "The crisis of the world is essentially a moral crisis. We have failed to find the common denominators in terms of moral values on which all peoples can unite to promote human brotherhood—justice and dignity."

"There is no defense against atomic bombs and none is to be expected"

Civil Defense

A Message to Every Citizen

ALL responsible people hope that America will never again be involved in war. Yet if war should break out with a major power, attempts may be made to destroy our principal cities in an atomic attack. While such a catastrophe is neither likely nor inevitable now, it is your duty to know what the effects of an atomic blast will be and to take steps in advance to protect yourself, your family and your neighbors.

What You Can Do

Disastrous destruction from atomic bombing can be prevented only by thoroughly dispersing the population or by constructing shelters deep enough to be proof against radiation. These measures would take too long, cost more than the nation can afford and disrupt the economy. Shelters can be made available in practice only for top-priority government officials and military and economic staffs. As an ordinary citizen you will have to protect yourself in one of three ways. You can: (1) Clear out of the country now, while the going is good. (2) Carry a Geiger counter to detect radiation, stay away from windows, keep water in the bathtub, wear a dog-tag around your neck to show your blood-type, practice crawling under the bed and hope for the best. (3) (If 1 and 2 do not appeal to you,) See that war does not break out, because "There is no defense against atomic bombs, and none is to be expected. Preparedness against atomic warfare is futile and, if attempted, will ruin the structure of the social order." (Emergency Committee of Atomic Scientists, Albert Einstein, chairman).

Points to Remember

Get it out of your head that there is nothing you can do to stop the drift to all-out war, or that war will be a "lesser evil" and really defend you against Communist totalitarianism. In atomic war there will be no winner, no loser and nothing left to defend. The "obsolete bursts at Hiroshima and Nagasaki caused an estimated 141,000 and 76,000 casualties at one clip. Today America and the Soviets have hundreds of "improved" atom bombs and H-bombs. Fifty well-placed bombs (and Air General Symington said eighty per cent of attacking planes can get through any air defense) could destroy America's main industrial areas in a single bombing mission and cause tens of millions of casualties. Civil defense efforts worthy of the name must prevent such a calamity from ever occurring.

Make your voice heard. Do not fall for propaganda that honest peace efforts are appeasement or Communistic. Americans should not be scared into silence by the fact that Communists are today calling for peace as part of their strategy. People in all countries are against war but they allow their governments to form military alliances in the name of protecting peace, and to engage in "limited" military adventures which they call "defense of the motherland" or "police action to establish law and order." No government will go to war if it cannot rely on the support of its people. Effective expression of the will to peace in one country will inspire the people of other countries to oppose war too.

Weigh the risks. No sincere peace lover would minimize the dangers involved in pursuing a policy of conciliation today. But atomic war is the greater risk. The choice is not between tyranny and war but between tyranny, war annihilation on the one hand and determination to find effective nonviolent measures for dealing with totalitarianism and economic exploitation on the other. Logic, reason and sheer survival demand that we courageously explore peaceful alternatives now, befor it is too late. We must stop threatening "preventive" war, but offer instead workable disarmament proposals not designed to be turned down by the other side. If the same ingenuity and resources now devoted to war were placed at the service of a massive global battle against poverty and backwardness, totalitarianism would quickly lose its appeal.

And remember—American leaders and those of other governments will not fight with their own fists—they depend on you. Let them know where you stand. And do it now.

Pacifists willingly join in voluntary efforts to save life when the need becomes evident. But they regard it as a humanitarian duty to question civil defense efforts that cloak psychological mobilization of the people for war and to expose deceptive assurances as to what civil defense can accomplish once atomic war breaks out. The only defense against atomic bombs is peace. And peace can be achieved without war. Read what we have said again, and think.

Why I Am a Pacifist

Heinz Regenbogen

Heinz Regenbogen is a Brethren Volunteer Service worker from Kassel, Germany; at present he is serving in the Washington City Church of the Brethren.

I LEARNED what war can bring to us: destruction, killing, suffering. I was twelve years old when my home town was almost destroyed; 26,000 persons were killed and 80% of my town became rubble. I had to go with my schoolmates to a place eighty miles from Kassel, which meant separation from my family. Frequent air attacks were made upon our school camp.

I began to question why I had to stay away from my family. War was the terrible word; you have to fight for Hitler as a Hitler boy. Fortunately, I was too young.

After the war we were free, I thought, and there would be the opportunity to make peace and to become a good witness for peace. But everywhere we found victors, occupation troops, hunger, misery, refugees and prison camps. Again I asked myself, "What have you done, Heinz? You are not guilty," even though a GI once asked me, "Are you a Nazi boy?" and continued, "Never give a German 'pig' a gun."

One day in my Latin class there appeared the Latin word pax-pacem, peace. We heard more about peace in our church. I dealt with that word in my college studies, in discussions and in camps. Some persons are for peace because of fear. This is a good motive, but not the best. Others are for peace because of pacifist parents and a pacifist church. This is also good, but not the best. Others are against war and for peace because they have a stubborn disposition against war propaganda. They help the cause of peace but are not very pleasant people to live with. Best of all the motives are those which come by facing the problems of war and peace in the light of the fact that God is love. I must confess that the first and third reasons had a great influence upon me. I studied the Bible and recognized that it is a sin to fight against my neighbor. I can never become a soldier in German rearmament.

I became a pacifist. As a pacifist I must work for peace and act as a peacemaker. I must never enter into a dispute with my neighbor. I must neither attack nor use any violence. On the contrary, I will suffer without offering resistance and, by my attitude toward evil, I will not only set myself free, but also help to free the world at large from war and destruction. I must recognize my duty with sober enthusiasm.

In our world we have too many men of science, too few men of God. We have grasped the mystery of the atom and rejected the Sermon on the Mount. We have a world of nuclear giants and ethical infants. We know more about war than we know about peace, more about killing than about living as brothers. Neither war agitation nor ideas of revenge which have come to us through the centuries can build world peace among the nations. Only a community of young people and others who know exactly what they are doing and who are real peacemakers can accomplish what is good and permanent. Each one of us bears a responsibility for the future. God has created us as human beings and therefore it is our duty to love and respect one another.

The Kind of Church I Want

Julian Griggs
Belle Glade, Florida

JACKIE ran up to me asking, "Can I go on the trip with you?" My junior high Sunday-school class was going up to the Brethren camp with other youth of the district to help clean it up for the summer. Jackie takes part in much of our program with agricultural migrant families but, despite my repeated suggestions, he doesn't attend Sunday school here or at any church.

I put my arm around his shoulders and we walked together. "You've gone on hunting trips with the archers, but this trip is for my Sunday-school class. You can't go this time." Disappointment clouded his face.

Part of my dream has come true! I want my Sunday-school class to do more interesting things, have more all-around fun than any other group, club or gang they belong to. I want them to work their hardest and search as honestly and creatively as they know how. Their contact with the church should be a peak experience that outdistances all other group experiences, except one. That one is the family. If family life crumbles to dust, the church will likewise decay. The church should strengthen and enhance family living. If it doesn't do that, it is failing in a primary responsibility.

Two churches in our town sponsor Boy Scout troops. Scouting can impart valuable learnings to youth. Scouts often have their eyes opened to new and fascinating horizons. Despite its fine possibilities, however, there are some dangers in the sponsorship of a Boy Scout troop. Boy Scouts sometimes operate in military fashion with drill and emphasis on military type uniform. When America goes to war, many scouts do likewise: collecting scrap iron, selling war stamps, etc. My ideal church would take a very discriminating look at scouting.

Perhaps you want a church that will conform to the standards of the sensible middle class with their lukewarm sense of religion. Certainly in some ways the standards of that segment of our country are Christian.

But respectable middle-class America, despite its good features, is blind to a cardinal historic teaching of our church that all war is sin. And if our society is rushing anywhere in this age of the super-submarine, the super-bomb, super-aircraft, super-poisons, it is hastening to prove, and conclusively, that the culture which takes the sword shall perish by the sword.

So it is highly important to have in our churches the fine things of other agency club programs, being cognizant of some of their shortcomings. Years back, Brethren leaders urged churches to start pioneer clubs, but this movement was short lived. The inaugurating, maintaining and constantly revising and improving a church club program brought forth many obstacles for a small denomination.

I would like to see a new movement. It would require no new organization. It does insist on developing a leadership with the vision of what could be. We can achieve a virile youth program through existing junior high and young people's Sunday-school classes, through the CBYF and its youth action plan, and summer camps looking toward work camp, Brethren Volunteer Service, college and an adult life integrated around the family and the church.

There is nothing to prevent a junior high fellowship or CBYF from having special outings, meetings, demonstrations, good Samaritan activities once or twice weekly in addition to Sunday meetings. The church program for youth can't hold enough of their boundless energy and enthusiasm by meeting on Sundays only.

Adults may feel they don't have the time required for such extensive youth work. How is the average church to get such an expanded youth program into high gear? This is really a tough assignment, one that seems impossible in the average church. Yet in ten or fifteen years, we could conceivably build such a youth program by touching the hearts, the dream centers of our developing young leaders. What better place for young married couples with work camp, BVS, summer camp, college or equivalent experiences, than in the church helping to shape a more vital youth program? We need to challenge these potential leaders.

The kind of vital youth program I am talking about can't materialize quickly or easily. No waving of a magic wand will bring it forth. The important thing is, are we going to assume our rightful duty to our church youth? Or are we going to sit back, watch secular groups and gangs capture their loyalties, then wonder why youth drop out of the church at the early teen age, wonder why our churches don't grow, why some of our young people make mistakes with tragic consequences for them and their parents? We can change the trend. Today would be a good time to start.

Every-member Canvass Brings Spiritual Rededication

Russell Burriss
Cedar Rapids, Iowa

FROM the vision of a member of the trustee-finance board to a total weekly commitment of almost twice last year's weekly giving—that tells the story of our spiritual fund-raising canvass at Cedar Rapids.

The church had wanted to build a parsonage and to do some needed improvements around the church plant for several years. Only $4,500 was in hand toward the new parsonage up to this time. The trustee-finance board searched in vain for a way to supply the financial resources necessary to launch any kind of building improvement program. Previous every-member canvasses had not brought the desired results. An increase in the unified budget to include sufficient funds did not accomplish it. During this period of searching we had an opportunity to have a Wells Organizations representative meet with about a dozen leaders to explain their program. However, the amount we felt we needed did not seem to justify this approach. "Would it be possible to do it ourselves?" we were asking.

Then a member of the finance board who first caught the vision spent a sleepless night working out and writing down an outline of how it might be done. And he immediately began convincing others on the board. His vision was in outline basically the program we later carried out.

At about this same time, the York Center story appeared in the Gospel Messenger. One of our men visited with John Eller in Chicago and came home with new enthusiasm for the type of every-member canvass (regular program needs plus building fund) about which we were thinking. John Eller spent a week end with about twenty of our leaders telling not only how they did it, but sharing his enthusiasm for a new approach to people in the every-member canvass—that of helping the person to give sacrificially to the kingdom because he needs to give for his own spiritual good.

From that point planning and work moved at a rapid rate. We decided to have a canvass and allowed about four weeks to prepare for it, which is hardly enough time. Those who had thus far shared in the thinking set up the duties of the planning committee and chose six men for the task. This group put in many hours of thinking, praying, planning and working. They set up duties and chose personnel for various needed committees. Many families were involved in the program in this way.

A schedule was set up showing dates by which each stage of the canvass should be completed. Then came the important item of education. This was done by a series of letters, by discussion on Sunday evenings and at council, by a printed brochure showing needs and hopes, by two-minute talks by laymen on Sunday morning and by the loyalty dinner.

A canvass director was selected and the canvass teams were chosen. Two training sessions were held for them, one of which was led by Harl Russell, Stewardship and Brotherhood Fund Secretary.

The whole program was geared to come to a climax at the loyalty dinner. One hundred and ten adults were highly inspired when they learned that 28 canvassers had made their commitments which for the 104-week period totaled more than twice the amount given by the entire church the year just past. Also as a part of the evening's program several laymen along with the elder gave inspiring talks on how to give sacrificially. The canvassers were commissioned for their task.

Undergirding the whole program thus far was the daily prayers of many people. We challenged our people to pray for the church, for the program and for themselves and their relation to it every day. The pastor attempted to give help through sermons. The planning committee after making their commitments felt the need of a rededication service, so on a Sunday morning a rededication service resulted not in six but thirty-six persons making a rededication of life at the altar. At the same time church attendance increased greatly during these weeks.

Then came canvass Sunday. After the afternoon of calling the canvassers returned to share with the congregation the good things they had discovered—increased interest, increased dedication, increased giving and the discovery that when we go out to help people make adequate dedications of life the Holy Spirit prepares the way and guides the canvasser in his work. By the end of the week the canvass was practically completed and it could be reported that for the next two years the weekly giving would be nearly double that of the previous year—totaling $20,000 per year.

As a follow up, a continuing committee is being organized to visit with new persons, to make adjustments where needed and to help all keep their commitments.

This is in brief our story. It barely hints at the time and effort expended. But we know that we have had a wonderful experience together, real and meaningful sacrifices have been made, and lives have been transformed. Some are giving more than ten per cent of their income; some are giving up certain pleasures and many canvassers are dedicated to doing calling under the direction of the pastor through the year. So there are by-products, too.

Can this be done anywhere? Yes, we believe that it can. We are just ordinary persons, with average incomes, but we discovered that whenever a group of persons are willing to dedicate themselves to the task they can accomplish great things for Christ and the church.

There are several principles which we believe to be important in any canvass.

1. We believe that dedication of life to Christ and his kingdom should be our primary concern.
2. We believe that every person needs to give sacrificially week by week if he is to grow spiritually and if he is to maintain his interest in the church.
3. We believe that there must be thorough planning if a canvass is to succeed.
4. We believe that sufficient education of the people is necessary. People must be aroused and made aware not only of the needs of the church but primarily of their needs.
5. We believe that inspiration is important.
6. We believe that the whole program needs to be undergirded soundly with a spiritual emphasis. It cannot be accomplished without great faith, fervent prayer, and real sacrifice. But it can be with these three, faith, prayer, sacrifice.

Vacation

Ferne Baldwin
Garkida, Nigeria, W. Africa

I WAS a little surprised last Sunday when the leader said, "And now Mdapaniya will you tell us what he did on his vacation." I wondered what telling what one had done on his school vacation could possibly have to do with a morning church service. Mdapaniya came to the front and told this story:

"When I went home to Gardemna the people came to me and said, 'Now we want you to be our voice and take word to Garkida for us that we want a teacher in our village again.' I said 'It seems to me that the best thing for us to do before we ask is to show our interest is real by beginning to have regular church services here in the village. Then if we find that the interest is genuine I will be glad to take the word and ask for a teacher.'

"So we found an empty compound with a good mud wall without a roof and gathered the grass and made a roof and began to have regular service in that house twice each Sunday and prayer meetings on Friday nights. Many people came and we took up offerings. We had one book and I taught them some new songs and we sang together and I led them as best I could. Most of you know something about Gardemna. There are a few Christians there who were baptized some years ago. (Some of you may remember that Bro. Floyd Mallott was once missionary in residence at Gardemna) and there have been teachers put there by the church. But one teacher had some trouble and could not stay and various things happened so there has not been anyone there for some time.

"Soon it was time for me to come back to school. Once again the people came to me and we discussed what we should do with the money from the church offerings. They said I should decide and I told them that it would seem good to me if we would give it to the church here in Garkida to help build the new church. They all agreed and so I brought it here and gave it to your pastor. I left my songbook and New Testament there for them to use. Last week when some came to market they asked me if I thought now we could ask about a teacher for Gardemna.

"And so I came before you this morning to tell you about what I did on my vacation and to ask you to remember the people at Gardemna in your prayers."

The church was still as he sat down. The leader rose. "We need more people who will do this kind of work on their vacations," he said.

What did you do on your vacation this year? What did I do on mine?

Notes From Nigeria

Charles M. Bieber

THE primary purpose of the Nigerian mission is to win men for Christ. To achieve this purpose a mission program has evolved with twin purposes so closely related that they are themselves primary: to awaken men and women today to the fact of their need for Christ; to train for tomorrow men and women who, while themselves living Christian lives, will also be deeply concerned for the spiritual and material welfare of their brethren.

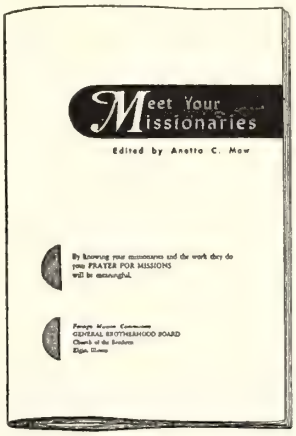
It is difficult in any case to measure the extent to which the Nigerian mission through the years and especially at this moment is attaining its purpose. Statistics may show the number who have been added to the church, who are enrolled in the schools or who have been helped by the medical department. But statistics cannot show the extent to which Christianity has made a difference in the lives of individual Christians. They cannot show, either, how much the Nigerian Christian is concerned for his fellow man, the sincerity and consistency of his Christian witness (or lack of it) or the extent to which his training has been successful in making him able to carry on these tasks of the church which were earlier carried on by the missionary.

Yet statistics have value. It is impossible not to see enormous growth in the difference, for example, between the reports of 1949 and 1954. The facts are that then there were four churches among seven mission stations, with 814 members; now there are eleven churches among ten mission stations, with 1,715 members. Then the work of the mission was being carried on by thirty-eight missionaries, now by sixty-nine. The number of paid African religious workers has increased in five years from forty-six to ninety-eight, out-village preaching points from forty to 110, enrollment in evangelistic classes from 896 to 2,954, and weekly listeners to the gospel message from 3,200 to 6,200. In 1949, 133 were baptized into the church. In 1954 there were 347 baptisms. There had been more than 300 in each of the two preceding years and it seems apparent that in 1955 there will be well over 400. The Nigerian church gave nearly $1,100 in offerings in 1949. This past year their gifts amounted to more than $2,700. (There is a greater difference here than is easily seen; difference in currency exchange rates which shows that giving is now four times as much as in 1949.) The church of Jesus Christ has taken enormous strides ahead!

Medical and leprosy work have also kept pace with the growth of the church and the mission. No new hospitals have been built in the past five years. There continue to be three. But at Lassa there is an entirely new plant, at Garkida there has been an enormous improvement in facilities and at the leprosarium new buildings are in process or in planning. There are five busy dispensaries now to compare with the two of 1949. Five leprosy segregation villages and three leprosy treatment centers have been added to the work of the leprosarium which has been such an effective evangelistic and medical force through the years. And whereas there were 17,000 new cases treated in 1949, last year there were upwards of 30,000.

Educational growth has been equally dramatic. In 1949 there were seven junior primary schools and one senior primary, with a total enrollment of 1,011. At the beginning of 1955 there were twenty junior primary schools and three senior primary, with an enrollment of just over 2,600. In addition, the Waka Training Center is very busily training more than one hundred teachers and fifty wives in four different schools.

Expansion at the Marama Church



"Today we began putting the roof on a nice big church at Yimirshika. At two other villages they have built new churches which are much bigger than the previous ones. Smaller buildings of the school-church combination type used in the religious instruction work have been built in ten villages this dry season.

"Into these villages," the Goods continue, "have gone young men who have little training but we pray that God may help them to radiate his love so that others may find the way.

"We are also building here at Marama. When school began there was such a tremendous increase in the enrollment that we began with thirteen classes and only nine classrooms. The people of the community, realizing the dire need for another building, after much deliberation, decided to build one with their own contributions of labor, mats and money. Already bogged down with a heavy program we hated the thought of another building but since it was the first time the people offered to provide such full support we decided to undertake it.

"We are thrilled by the response of the village. Tomorrow they will begin putting up the rafters."

Lancaster Church

begins its expansion and relocation program

IT MAY be an exciting and enriching experience for a church to face creatively and with dedication the future of its work. I say, it may be. And so it was and is for the Lancaster church of Eastern Pennsylvania.

The total plan included the relocation of the house of worship and of the parsonage. The church authorized the building of the new parsonage on the new location early in 1954 and on Sept. 1 of that year the contract for its construction was signed. By Dec. 31 the pastor, John D. Long, and his family moved into this lovely new dwelling. It is located at 1501 Sunset Ave. — a quiet street — one block from the lots which have been purchased for the erection of the new church building at Pleasure Road and Clearview Avenue.

Three hundred members and friends were entertained at open house on May 15.

The dedication of the parsonage will be followed later by the erection of the church edifice. The first year of the three-year building program has been marked by a gratifying increase in attendance and giving and in projected plans for the future. One third of the $100,000 goal has been realized during this year. The future lies just ahead in the dreams and hopes of the congregation.

If the same careful planning and detail follow in the erection of the church edifice and in the dedication of life to the progress of the kingdom, only God can surmise the achievements which await the Lancaster congregation.

Southern California and Arizona

Glendora—Following a Sunday morning service, a potluck dinner was held in honor of A. D. Sollenberger, who moved to the Hillcrest Home in La Verne. In the evening of the same day students from La Verne College presented the play, The Finger of God. On Feb. 6 Homer Nelson from the Gideon Bible Society was guest speaker. Our women co-operated with the other church women in World Day of Prayer services. Prof John H. Redding, a Negro, presented several vocal solos. Our adult choir directed by Bro. Elias Brightbill of La Verne College and with the support of students from the college gave the cantata, The Seven Last Words. In March Bro. Robert Richards lectured and showed pictures of his goodwill tour in the Far East. Our pastor's resignation becomes effective Sept. 1. Thursday, April 7, was a day of prayer with someone in prayer and meditation in the church all day. This was followed by our love feast and communion in the evening. Good Friday services were held in the Episcopal church. The junior choir presented anthems on Palm Sunday and Easter. During the week of Easter, two were baptized and two received by letter. On April 13 Bro. Harold Humber of La Verne College gave a lecture on great Bible characters. Our pastor, Henry Esbensen, attended regional conference at Wenatchee. J. W. Lear was guest speaker on Sunday evening, April 17. Forrest Eisenbise presented pictures of Palestine and the leprosy work on April 24.—Mrs. George Ford, San Dimas, Calif.

La Verne—On Palm Sunday seventeen were baptized. On Easter four were received by letter. At the evening service in co-operation with the Methodist church, our adult choir presented Part III of Handel's oratorio, The Messiah. On April 17 Bro. William Beahm of Bethany Biblical Seminary preached for us. On Christian College Sunday, Bro. Paul Baum, dean of La Verne College, presented the claims of the Christian college today. During the afternoon NBC featured the college chapel choir over the radio station. In the evening Bro. Harvey R. Hostetler preached on the subject, What to Do With Life's Problems. During May the Sunday evening emphasis was on home and church family life. At our April council meeting, Bro. Charles Rose was licensed to the ministry. Considerable attention was given to the current building project. Several classrooms and a large recreation hall are the principal features. The campaign for raising the necessary funds is in progress at this writing. The election of church officers resulted in Crawford Brubaker being retained as moderator with J. C. Brandt as assistant moderator. Delegates to Annual Conference are Galen B. Ogden, Crawford Brubaker and W. David Albright. Four deacons and their wives were installed on Sunday morning, May 1.—H. A. Brandt, La Verne, Calif.

Pomona—Thirty-six new members were received during the Easter season. Most of these members were in the pastor's class for church membership. A building planning committee of twenty-five members is working on plans for our new sanctuary. Two Easter worship services were held. Our pastor, Arthur C. Keim, was given a five-year extension to his contract at our recent council. Bro. Keim attended regional conference at Wenatchee. Mrs. Ida Studebaker and our pastor were delegates to Annual Conference. Communion was held on Thursday evening of Holy Week. Our vacation church school was held June 20—July 1. —Mrs. Edith Hatfield, Pomona, Calif.

Whittier, Valley View Community—On Thursday before Easter, eighty persons took part in our first Lord's Supper. Easter was the second anniversary of our new church. Our pastor, Bro. Lee G. Whipple, led our Easter services. The church choirs, led by Pat McCaughey, and the cherub choir led by Ruth Kurtz and Ruth Funderburg, contributed to the services. The average attendance at the two morning services is about 130. The Sunday school, also in two sessions, has an average attendance of 200. From the beginning of the year until Easter, twenty-one persons have been received by letter and thirteen by baptism into our church. Bro. Arthur Keim of Pomona helped in the national Christian teaching mission. During the mission a church census of the Whittier area and calling in the homes were led by Virginia Folger, chairman of the ministry and evangelism committee. Under the leadership of Ruth Kelly, chairman of the fellowship, the group joined in family nights, a birthday dinner, softball games and several trips. The women's group has met each month. Our nursery school, serving fifty families, is directed by Dana Whipple. Mr. and Mrs. Ronald Westfall and Mr. and Mrs. Harold Knorr are leaders of the active junior high school programs. There is a great deal of inspiration in working together, "as one in Christ" of people of many faiths, as we do in a community church.—Hazel M. Landis, La Habra, Calif.

Ellisford—We had our school of missions in January. One Sunday evening we served a fellowship lunch cooked Indian style and on two other Sunday evenings pictures were used. In February we had talks and a picture on the United Nations. On two different Sunday evenings Dr. and Mrs. Vernon Kinzie brought reports and showed pictures of their recent visit to the church in Ecuador. A group from our church attended the regional conference at Wenatchee. Our father and daughter banquet was held on April 14 and the mother and son banquet, on April 5. Several persons have made confession and are waiting baptism. Bro. Forrest Groff was with us in March in consultation concerning our new sanctuary.—Mrs. C. E. Verbeck, Tonasket, Wash.

Wenatchee Valley—The La Verne College choir, with Director Elias Brightbill, gave a choral program on Palm Sunday. On the following Monday the choir gave the program at the noonday Holy Week services in the local theatre, which were sponsored by the community and the Council of Churches. Our church was host to the regional conference. At our family night program we had a supper preceding the mission study. The church sanctuary was redecorated prior to Easter and plans are now under way to completely modernize the heating system. On the evening of May 4, Mrs. James Taylor served as toastmistress for our mother and daughter banquet. The Fishermen's (fishers of men) Club continues to meet once each month. On May 6 we were host church to the Wenatchee United Church Women's May fellowship luncheon. An every-family visitation was held during the months of May and June to interpret our church program and to encourage wider participation among our members. Icel Keim, Wenatchee, Wash.

Northwestern Kansas

Maple Grove—Our spring council authorized the remodeling committee to begin the first stages of improving our church building. Our women's work sponsored the first school of missions. The peace and temperance committee recently presented a program which included appropriate films and used the new peace hymns published in the pages of the Gospel Messenger. Several of our young people attended the regional youth conference at McPherson. A gift of several folding tables was recently made to the church. Our church had pre-Easter services with Bro. Ditmars bringing the messages. Our communion was on Thursday preceding Easter. On Easter evening, baptismal services were held for one person at the close of the evening worship. A group of our women attended the district women's work rally at Portis. In April our men were hosts to the district men's banquet. Our Bible school began May 23.—Wava Ankenman, Dellvale, Kansas.

Southeastern Kansas

Parsons—Our love feast was observed on May 1, with Pastor Robert Teegarden officiating. Since our last report two have been added to our church by baptism and three by letter. At our council meeting, we decided to ask for two caravan workers to assist in our church work for a two-month period. The women's group had seven comforters for the relief truck, as well as many articles of clothing. A mother and daughter banquet was held. —Julia Jones, Parsons, Kansas.

Scott Valley—During the past several months, our church has undergone a remodeling program. The church ceiling was lowered and a partition put in to make classrooms and all has been repapered. This project was financed by our annual fall auction. Our next project will be a different heating system. The membership of our church has increased with the addition of two by letter and three by baptism. Bro. Earl Frantz of McPherson held services one week before Easter.—Mrs. Wayne Payer, Westphalia, Kansas.

Garden City—In February Brother and Sister Paul Sargent gave an illustrated talk concerning their trip to Europe. Our pastor, Bro. A. L. Patrick, attended the district leader's conference in Elgin. The McPherson College male quintette presented a concert in our church one Sunday. A church library has been started since our last report. A number of our young people attended the youth conference at McPherson. Our women's work group was represented at the district rally at the Eden Valley church. Bro. Kenneth Morse of Elgin conducted a one-week revival service in our church. As a result of this meeting four new members were received by letter and ten by baptism. In connection with this meeting, a series of membership classes for new members and prospective members was conducted by our pastor. The chancel choir presented the cantata, The Glory of the Cross, for our Easter services. The program was directed by Bro. Eugene Eisenbise. Baptismal services were held April 24 followed by a reception for our new members. A large group from our junior high department attended the rally at the Eden Valley church. Our junior choir presented the evening worship service at the Larned church on April 17. The junior choir presented a full evening of music recently under the direction of Sister Esther Bowman.—Mrs. Clifford Husband, Gardendale, Kansas.

Prairie View—Our pre-Easter revival meetings were conducted by Bro. Russell G. West of Wiley, Colo. As a result of these meetings, three members were received by letter and nine were baptized on Palm Sunday by our pastor, Bro. Lawrence E. Lehman. At the evening service on Easter, the young adult class presented the play, Blessed Are They. The women's work group has been reading the entire Bible through as their Bible study for the past year under the leadership of Mrs. Roland Harkness. Relief clothing made by our group has been sent overseas for distribution. Among other projects, the women are helping to sponsor a young Puerto Rican girl at McPherson College. May was the month for our semiannual birthday dinner. The men provided the entertainment and the women paid their birthday offerings. These offerings have in the past been used to pay for banquet tables. A new project for the coming year is still under consideration.—Mrs. Alfred L. Crist, Modoc, Kansas.

Northern Missouri

North Bethel—On Sunday evening, April 5, the McPherson College a capella choir gave a program under the direction of Don Frederick. Before the evening services, the ladies of the church provided a lunch and social hour for the choir members. The week of April 4-10 was devoted to union pre-Easter services which were held in Mound City. On Easter morning a number from our congregation attended the sunrise services. At the evening services Bro. Merkey presented the picture, I Beheld His Glory. Elder Eugene Gnagy was with us for our council meeting. We decided to have communion the last Sunday in May and in October of each year. Bro. Gnagy was retained as elder for the coming year. Our annual vacation Bible school was held in May.—Mrs. Ruby Driver, Mound City, Mo.

Southern Missouri and Arkansas

Shoal Creek—Our church met in quarterly council March 10. Two of our young people attended the regional youth conference. Our social committee has been planning a social each month. The church sponsored the McPherson College chapel choir, which sang in our community on April 3. Our revival was held April 18-27, with Bro. D. Eugene Lichty as evangelist. Our love feast was held April 30. We are to be host church to the district conference Aug. 18-21.—Kathryn Erisman, Fairview, Mo.

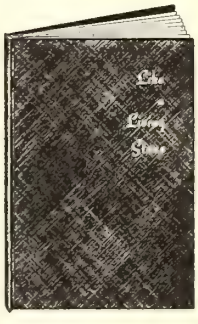
Nebraska

Lincoln—International Christianity was the theme of four special Sunday evening programs. Students from Persia, India and Germany, who are attending the University of Nebraska, spoke at three of the meetings, and a well-known church woman from our city conducted the fourth meeting based on interracial problems in the city of Lincoln. During the Lenten season four Lincoln ministers were guest speakers at four Sunday evening services. On March 13 Bro. Donald E. Rowe, executive secretary for the region, was guest speaker for our second anniversary service in the new plant and the sixty-fifth anniversary of the church in Lincoln. On April 16 a McPherson College alumni dinner was held at our church. Nebraska junior high young people from South Beatrice, Bethel, Enders, Omaha and Lincoln met at Lincoln on Saturday, April 30, for a rally. During the morning they were guests at a Jewish synagogue and witnessed the Bar Mitzvah ceremony for a Jewish boy. They were invited to remain for the luncheon following the ceremony, where many special Jewish foods were served. Thus they were privileged to learn something of the Jewish faith and customs, and later in the day shared their impressions in a discussion at their own church. A special family night supper and program was held on May 1. On Mother's Day five junior high young people were received by baptism, bringing the total baptisms since our last report to ten, in addition to four members received by letter.—Mary Ann Eberly, Lincoln, Nebr.

Northern Illinois and Wisconsin

Yellow Creek—During Lent we held an hour of power service each week. In March we had a dedication service for our new altar furniture and for the dividing curtains for the church school classes. On April 3 we held our love feast services with Dieter Thran, our German exchange student, reading the scripture. Fifteen members were received into our church on Easter, eight by baptism and seven by letter. Our church has now begun a library. Carl Harner, a BVS worker from Lena now serving at Puerto Rico, told of his work and showed slides at the women's work meeting. On Sunday, May 1, Bro. C. Ernest Davis brought the morning message.—Mrs. R. Earl Farringer, Lena, Ill.

Middle Indiana



Lower Deer Creek—We purchased an electric organ which adds much to our worship services. Evangelistic services were held by Bro. John Laprad of the Pittsburg church. Two were received into our fellowship by baptism. Our ladies completed their hospital kits for the district project before the spring rally at the Salamonie church. The women purchased a new electric sewing machine to help with their work. They continue to pack clothing and make comforters for relief. We co-operated with the three other churches in our township in World Day of Prayer services and Easter sunrise services. Following the sunrise service, a fellowship breakfast was held in our church. The young people presented potted plants to all the Bethany—Pre-Easter services were held in our church by Brother and Sister Wayne Zunkel, students at Bethany Seminary. Following these services five were baptized into our church fellowship and one was received by letter. The women also made medical kits which were taken to the women's rally at Goshen. The men's work group is supporting Hans Sebald, a German student, at Manchester College. On Family night, May 11, supper was followed by Bro. Petry talking to the fathers and sons and Sister Petry talking to the mothers and daughters. The CBYF is presenting the play, In Our Own Strength, by Vernard Eller Our pastor Bro. Glenn Kinsel, and his wife were delegates to Annual Conference. We are co-operating with the New Paris community in the vacation Bible school. Children's dedication services were held on May 8. Guest speakers in our church have included John Lamey, Indiana temperance league, Clarence Heckman, Africa missionary, Anna Warstler, India missionary, Wanda Will, returned BVS'er from Europe, and on pulpit Sunday, May 15, Roy Richey. Our pastor was at the Nappanee church on this Sunday. Our pastor spent sixteen days at the interdenominational school for town and country ministers at the Rural Church Center, Green Lake, Wis. Sister Catherine Kirkdorffer attended the children's workers' conference at Grand Rapids, following Annual Conference.—Mrs. Harold Whitehead, New Paris, Ind.

Michigan City—Bro. Charles E. Zunkel of Elgin, Ill., was guest speaker during our special services beginning on Palm Sunday and continuing through Easter with communion and love feast in the evening. Eleven new members were received by baptism. On April 21 Brother and Sister Clarence Heckman, misionaries on leave from the Africa mission field, showed pictures and exhibits of their work. Pulpit exchange day in our district was held May 15, with Bro. Edward Stump of the Osceola church as our guest speaker and our pastor, Bro. Ralph G. Rarick in the Blissville church. Vacation Bible school opened June 6 under the direction of Sister Rarick. The women's work is under the direction of Sister Margaret Nichols.—Maude E. Mansfield, Michigan City, Ind.

Northeastern Ohio

Ashland Dickey—Several of our young people attended the district young people's meeting at the Olivet church. Pre-Easter meetings were conducted by our pastor. Two members were received by letter and one by baptism. Pastor Pyles was elected delegate to Annual Conference. The women of our church are sewing for relief and for the local hospital. The greater women's work group is buying dishes and sponsoring the remodeling of the church kitchen. A mother and daughter banquet was held on May 12. Five babies were consecrated on Mother's Day. —Mrs. Harley Moherman, Ashland, Ohio.

Canton, Maple Avenue—Several times this year the young people have had roller skating parties. Some of our people attended the Christian leadership training school at the Springfield church. In February the men's organization had a panel discussion on stewardship. We have a 100% subscription to the Gospel Messenger. The men of the church have a 6:30 meeting every other Sunday evening. Our pastor just completed a series of sermons on the ordinances of the church. Goldie Swartz spoke at our Dorcas society and at a Sunday morning worship service. In April we held our quarterly council meeting. On Palm Sunday Hazel Messer was our morning worship speaker. On Easter morning our children presented The Savior Lives. We had Manchester day on April 24, with William Nagey as speaker. Our young men had a basketball team along with the other church teams. We had a mother and daughter tea on May 8. On Mother's Day Eva Hilty spoke concerning mother, and the pastor used the theme, The Home. Since our last report we have had two baby dedication services. Four persons have been baptized and two received by letter.—Plezzie Maust Meyers, Canton, Ohio.

We Raised a Heifer

Mary Garber

From the pen of the author of Brethren Story Caravan comes this new heartwarming story of the experiences of one family in raising a heifer for relief. While this is a narrative of one families' experiences, it could be a composite of all those who provided heifers. Thousands of families throughout the United States co-operated in the Christian, humanitarian and far-reaching program that provided food —and hope—to so many needy families in other countries. This is indeed a story for entire family reading. Children will be delighted with it. Beautifully illustrated. Every church library should have a copy. 88 pages. Cloth. $1.75

Lima—Our church council was held March 2 with Elder Noffsinger presiding. Several from our church attended the spring assembly at the Lick Creek church. At our March 14 sister of service meeting, Mrs. Calvin Early showed slides and gave an informal talk concerning their recent trip to Puerto Rico. On April 1 the Manchester College a capella choir were with us for supper and then presented a program. Our church has a new roof and has been redecorated on the interior. Holy Week services were held in our church with Bro. Brubaker bringing the message on April 4, Bro. Petry on April 5, and our pastor, Bro. Thompson, on April 6. At the close of these services six were baptized. Our love feast was held on April 7. The CBYF presented the Easter play, I Made Christ's Choice. On April 23-24 a deputation team from Manchester College was with us. Our mother and daughter banquet was held in our church. Brotherhood Sunday was observed in our church the first Sunday of May.—Mrs. Pearl Anspach, LaFayette, Ohio.

Strait Creek—Ten persons have been baptized into the fellowship of our church since the last report. The March council voted a five per cent increase in the pastor's salary. This is in harmony with the district effort to help the mission churches to become self-supporting. An adult class and the Dorcas society have recently floored the church, bought new runners and are now making plans to paint the exterior of the church. On Southern Ohio pulpit exchange Sunday, May 15, our elder, Bro. H. H. Helman, was with us and our pastor, Bro. J. W. Couser, was in the Castine church.—Glenna Blackburn, Peebles, Ohio.

West Charleston—Bro. Roy Teach conducted dedication services for our newly built brick parsonage. The young people's class will raise popcorn as a project for this summer. The youth choir has about twenty members. Choir robes for the children were made for the Christmas program and they have been singing once a month since that time. Nora Heffner and Sonya Studebaker direct the group. Our Holy Week services were led by Bro. Roy Teach and were climaxed with the baptizing of seventeen persons. We were host church for the united sunrise services on Easter morning. The annual mother and daughter banquet was held the first Sunday in May. Our church held a two-week Bible school the first of June. The money from the school was used for the support of an African for one year in school. The women's work group has completed a number of quilts and has been doing relief sewing.—Mrs. Virlen L. Klopfer, Tipp City, Ohio.

Eastern Pennsylvania

Neffsville Home—Since January groups from the Akron, Middle Creek, Bareville, East Fairview, Ephrata Heidelburg, and Jennersville churches have held services for us. Guest speakers have included Bro. Milton Hershey, Bro. Hartman Rice, Paul Harnley, Bro. Howard Whitacre, A. C. Baugher, Bro. Paul Robinson, Bro. Alton Bucher, and Bro. Ivan Walker. Pictures of Switzerland were shown by Mrs. Wiley de Parrot. The filmstrip, Unto These My Brethren was shown at the time of the One Great Hour of Sharing. Brother and Sister F. C. Carper showed pictures of their trip to Europe and the Holy Lands. —Sallie E. Schaffner, Neffsville, Pa.

Springville—Bro. Benjamin Stauffer officiated at our love feast with Brethren Wayne Nicarry of Chambersburg, Norman Weaver of Manheim and John Shuman of Annville assisting. The women's work group sponsored a program on stewardship with Bro. Robert Eshleman as guest speaker. Marie Tritt of Carlisle gave a report and showed slides of her work in Europe. The Chiques chorus recently presented a program. Bro. Donald Royer gave a message one Sunday. Sister Clara Myers showed slides of her work in Africa. Bro. Herbert Miller conducted our revival meetings; eighteen persons were received into our church by baptism. Elder John L. Myer and his wife represented our church as delegates to Conference. Six babies were consecrated on Mother's Day.—Mrs. Mark Royer, Denver, Pa.

White Oak—Bro. Joseph Moyer of Vernfield, Pa., preached a temperance sermon for us at the Graybill house. A missionary message was given by Bro. Henry Wenger in the Manheim house, at which time an offering was received for foreign missions. Bro. Graybill Hershey of our congregation taught a Bible course to a BVS unit at New Windsor. The women of our church knotted comforters and cut and sewed layettes for relief. They also sewed at the three local hospitals. Bro. Jesse Whitacre of Grantsville, Md., held a two-week evangelistic meeting at the Manheim house. As a result of these meetings, eleven were received into the church. Good Friday services were held at the Manheim house by our home ministers. Easter services were held in the Longenecker church, the first service since the remodeling of the church house. A group from our church visited Long Run, a mission point which is in the charge of Bro. Milton Hershey of our congregation. Our congregation participated in the One Great Hour of Sharing. Bro. Arthur Rice was guest speaker at a morning service in the Manheim house. On April 30 our congregation met in council and re-elected Bro. C. W. Gibbel as elder-in-charge. Bro. Kenneth Hershey was elected to the ministry and Bro. Rufus Fahnestock, Bro. Ralph Myer and Bro. Bruce Hershey were deacons. Mabel Diffenderfer, Manheim, Pa.

Eastern Maryland

Pipe Creek—The district CBYF week-end conference was held at our church with Bro. Alvin Brightbill as guest speaker. Bethany Hospital will be the women's work project this year. The subdistrict CBYF met at our church with Bro. Loren Simpson speaking on the development of faith. Our church participated in the county-wide religious census. Plans are being made to follow up this fall with visitation evangelism preceding our evangelistic meetings, which will be conducted by Bro. Herbert Miller. One member has been received by letter. Our church attendance has been showing a steady increase. The Sunday-school classes are taking as a project this year the Fahrney Keedy Memorial home. Our pastor, Bro. C. Reynolds Simmons, was delegate to Annual Conference. Sister Sara Shisler, missionary to Africa, talked during the church service on May 1. A number of women from our church attended the district women's rally at the Locust Grove church.—Edna Fike, New Windsor, Md.

Perspective

ACTUALLY the page is flat, but you cannot look at a picture like this one without feeling that you are looking into the distance. The rows of trees, the narrowing stretch of road, even the unhurried cows arrange themselves in such a way that they must be seen in perspective. Thanks to the intelligent eye behind the camera, the view has a third dimension, the picture has depth, and its subject becomes meaningful because it maintains proper perspective.

So many of our snapshot glimpses of life result only in flat pictures. We read the news as a series of events, but lacking a definite viewpoint we have no perspective. Our closeups seem overly large—they frighten us. Our long-range plans lack the proper focus so that distant places and distant events are fuzzy. How seriously we need to see ourselves, our families, our churches in proper perspective. How often we need to remember whence we have come and whither we are bound. Most of all we need the perspective of faith that will give us a viewpoint from which to see ourselves as God sees us. Otherwise life is meaningless and flat. Only faith can add the dimension of depth.

To Bring Revival

Our Messenger of June 4 had an editorial, "The Holy Spirit Works Unofficially Too." I'd like to quote part of the last paragraph of this editorial. "But if God should raise up an Amos of Tekoa or a Paul of Tarsus or an Abraham Lincoln among us, by all means let him speak lest we miss hearing a word from the Lord." I agree 100% with this statement, and therefore believe that God is powerfully using Billy Graham today to bring revival to a needy world. . . .

I have heard Billy Graham on the radio. He preaches repentance for sins. He preaches the second birth, "Ye must be born again." He says we cannot get to heaven unless we are converted. He says Jesus Christ comes in through the Holy Spirit and changes the person. He also says pleasing Christ will be the main aim of the converted person. He says a follower of Christ must have personal consecration, pray daily and give of money, time, talents and witness.

God is using Billy Graham in a mighty way. It is the power of God. Can the churches of today carry on God's work that is being revived by the power of God through Billy Graham? That is what I am concerned about. . . .

Speaking of revival, I believe that all denominations of churches need it, including the Church of the Brethren. I wish we had some Augsburgers, Brunks and Hammers as the Mennonite Church has. I have been to some of their tent meetings, and I am a much better Christian for having attended them. I have surrendered my all to the Lord and want to be only in his will always. Nothing else matters to me but living completely for my Lord.—Only a sinner saved by grace.

"If I Like the Preacher!"

Preachers should be liked and they should be the kind of persons that will win friends, not only for themselves but even more, for the Lord. In June 25 Readers Write the letter, "Summer Pastoral Program," has a sentence, "She would give ten dollars, if she liked me."

Many times I have heard a similar remark which causes me concern and wonder for those who hold this idea. I do not give because I like my Sunday-school teacher or my church board chairman or my church caretaker. I do like them very much—but I give because I love the Lord and I am thankful for his blessings and joys of salvation. I give money and work to see God's Word taught in my community and the community of the world.

It is very easy for some people to find fault with the preacher and say, "I will not give; I don't like the preacher." These people miss so much real joy in giving and seeing God's kingdom grow. These people by their own selfish view lose some of God's greatest blessings. They cut themselves off. May God's love soon surround them and teach them that his way is the way of giving—sacrificial giving. "It is more joy to give than to receive."

I give because God gave. He gave first his Son, Jesus, that I might in Christ have eternal life. If I claim to be God's son and "joint heir" with Christ then it is my happy privilege to dedicate all resources entrusted to me by my Master to be used wisely to his glory and my neighbor's good. Things are not mine, except to be used wisely to his glory and my neighbor's good. Things are not mine, except to use for God and the building of his kingdom. Oh, the joy of a completely dedicated life of money, time, talent and soul.—James L. Houff, Naperville, Ill.

Serve the Prince of Peace

Many thanks for the issue on alternative service. I am thankful that I could share in the thinking of many brethren on the peace testimony.

However, the issue on alternative service did bring to my mind a question which I have had since I learned of the film, They Also Serve. It seems to me that any consistent CO must believe that a man in the military service does not really serve God, his country or his church and that any military service is contrary to the will of God and destructive of national ends. Yet the title, They Also Serve, implies that a I-W is doing in a small way what the man in the armed services is doing in a large way. In other words, the title betrays a lack of a real peace conviction which is the worst thing that can happen to a I-W. While it is too late to change the title of the film I must register my disappointment that it was not entitled They Serve the Prince of Peace or something to the same effect.—Roy Johnson, Sterling, Ill.

"Let not your hearts be troubled"

Through Bible reading, meditation, and quiet moments when we wait for God to speak to us, we gain power to overcome fear and sin

Bill Smith

More Than Conquerors

Howard H. Keim

OFTEN we are overcome with the thought that life is too much for us. The pressure of events may become frightening. Our burden of woe may seem too great. Then we ought to remember: "We are more than conquerors through him who loved us" (Rom. 8:37).

Christ helps us conquer fear. We come into the world equipped with two instinctive fears: the fear of loud noises and the fear of falling. These are usually supplemented by many other fears as we grow up in the human society. For multitudes, the thundering of evil—real or imagined—and the terrifying uncertainties and insecurities of our earthly experience, well nigh wreck life.

But God gives us the victory through Christ, who said: "Let not your hearts be troubled; believe in God, believe also in me" (John 14:1). He even gives us more than victory! Here is the plus quality of life—victory with a blessing. That which threatens to destroy us leads us into deeper understanding of reality. By the alchemy of God, the bitterest potion becomes a healing agency of the spirit. "We are more than conquerors."

In Christ we are able to conquer sin. Though we are all sinners, when we accept Christ, we are acquitted by God. The apostle asks: "Who shall bring any charge against God's elect? It is God who justifies; who is to condemn?" (Rom. 8:33-34). Though we have failed often, though we have offended against God and man, God gives us the victory through Christ, when we come to him in faith and penitence.

Jesus gives us a new standing with God. This is our only security. He frees us from both the temptation to ignore sin, and from a morbid dwelling on it.

Jesus gives us victory over disaster. Can the blows of adverse circumstances, asks the apostle, separate us from God's love? He answers his own question with an emphatic "No!" "Nothing in all creation will be able to separate us from the love of God in Christ Jesus our Lord" (Rom. 8:39).

Some individuals who are not crushed by sin are broken by disaster. They assume that this is God's personal attack on them, and they retaliate with resentment, bitterness or even hatred. The Word teaches us that trials are only the external circumstances of life. At the center of reality, "we know that in everything God works for good with those who love him" (Rom. 8:28). God works amid the carnage and destruction, the heartache and the suffering, to help us gain the victory over life and death.

Much easy optimism is based on immunity from suffering. Not so with the Apostle Paul. He spoke out of deep and rugged experience: " . . . imprisonments, with countless beatings, and often near death. Five times I have received at the hands of the Jews the forty lashes less one. Three times I have been beaten with rods; once I was stoned. Three times I have been shipwrecked; a night and a day I have been adrift at sea; on frequent journeys, in danger from rivers, danger from robbers, danger from my own people, danger from Gentiles, danger in the city, danger in the wilderness, danger at sea, danger from false brethren; in toil and hardship, through many a sleepless night, in hunger and thirst, often without food, in cold and exposure" (2 Cor. 11:23-27).

When disaster comes to the child of God he can say, "For thy sake we are being killed all the day long; we are regarded as sheep to be slaughtered" (Rom. 8:36). But in Christ we are more than conquerors.

Having Christ we have all. Our assurance of eternal life rests wholly on Christ's redeeming work. When we are found in him, all the spiritual hosts of evil cannot prevail against us. No evil can enslave us if we accept the gift of life in Christ. God has given us everything in him. The greatest tragedy that can overtake anyone is to disregard or fail to accept Christ as Savior and Lord. He is our all in all.

A Fellowship of God's Presence

Glen Weimer

GOD'S PURPOSE for man is magnificent—
Jesus is the human symbol of God's plan—in him we trace God's daring faith, unlimited love, measureless sacrifice and untiring patience.

As every branch in a tree feels the force of the seasonal winds, so man, wherever he is—whoever he is—experiences the push and pull of God's purpose for his life. Man lives his life within the universal orbit of God's providence and design.

God endeavors to awaken man to the meaning of life through the church. Man does not come to himself or find himself apart from the community of God's presence. Man cannot grow into life apart from the nurture of God's church. By and through the church—the body of Christ—God expects to redeem man and the whole of society.

The church is the family of persons who labor to make God known and real to the world, and who compassionately upbear man to the mercy and forgiveness of God.

The church is that world-wide fellowship of souls who stand on the Godward side of things, events and life.

The church is that people in whom Jesus is felt and seen to live again.

The church is the hand of God's mercy to all people.

The church stays by love—for only thus can God be seen in her life. But love is endlessly costly, and only those who cherish God supremely dare to love to the end and in all circumstances.
But a world that will not love, and go the way of love, will dash itself to pieces on the rocks of hate, fear and confusion.

As winter winds drive autumn leaves in a whirl of frenzy, so man is driven wildly, aimlessly, catastrophically by his lovelessness.

O God, make of us a fellowship of thy presence, bringing the order of peace to human hearts and the peace of love to lost souls. Through union with Christ. Amen.

The Lighted Cross

Estella Erb

THIS past winter while spending some time in Florida we had a most blessed experience with a lighted cross. We lived in a home across the street from a large Protestant church where each night a huge cross, high on top of the building, gave forth its lighted rays, a beacon for all.

It so happened that the streets of this city run in various directions from the center, and are not too well lighted. This proved a bit confusing at night to tourists. Many nights walking home alone from church some blocks away or the downtown area we would not be too certain of our directions, but soon the lighted cross would be visible through the palm trees as with searching eyes we would look skyward.

A Religion for Laymen

WE DO not claim to understand all the issues involved in the conflict between President Juan D. Peron of Argentina and the Roman Catholic Church. We seldom look to dictators, whether Communist or Facist, Catholic or Protestant, for texts on which to comment, but we thought a statement by one of Peron's henchmen might have something to say to us as well as to the priests to whom it was directed. Peron's friend said, "We prefer him who speaks to us in our language—a language that we understand—rather than him who prays at us in Latin that we don't understand and who stands with his face to the altar and his back to the people."

Here in a few words can be summed up most of the failure of the church in many Latin American countries. Even what was true and holy in its message never got through to the people, and its representatives also had their backs to the people. No wonder the people held on to superstition and paganism. No wonder they will listen to a dictator or a revolutionist if he speaks their language.

We saw recently where the Pope had warned against what he called "lay theology." Too many Catholic writers were teaching their own ideas without waiting to see how the truth would be "handed down" from proper authorities above them. In France the worker priests, who lived and worked among the people they served, were forced to give up their jobs—they were too close to the people.

But unless theology becomes lay theology, of what value is it? And unless the ministers of God live and work side by side with laymen, how can they truly minister? Much of the failure of the church in many areas of the world is due to a separation from the man on the street or behind a plow. This is a failure not only of highly organized ecclesiastical systems but of some democratic churches also.

In his own time Jesus taught lay theology to fishermen and farmers in Galilee. He was also a worker priest, at home in carpenter shops and market places. He spoke a simple language that every one could understand and no one ever accused him of having "his face to the altar and his back to the people."

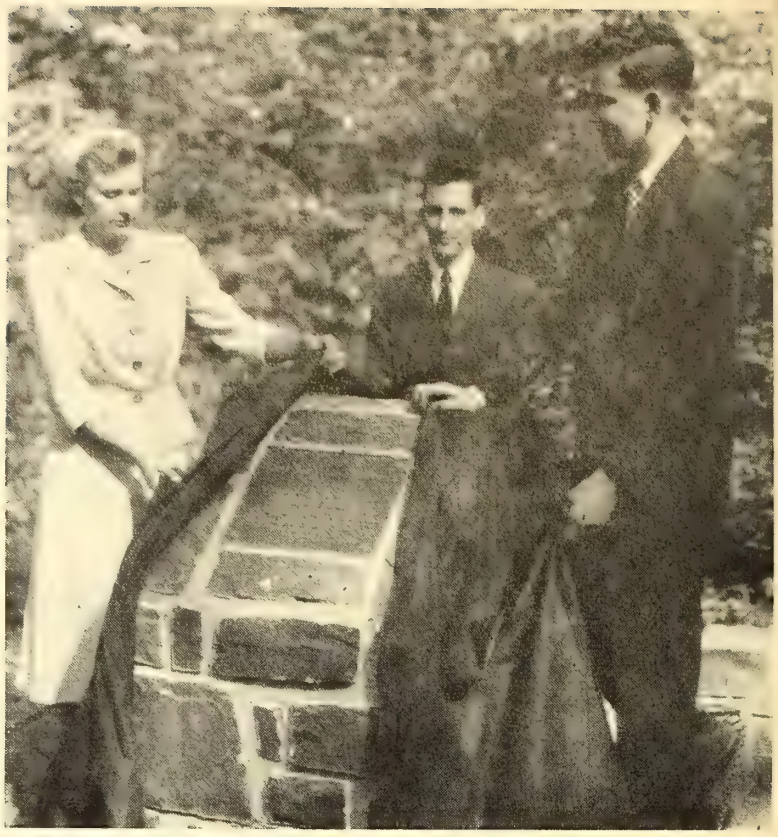
We like the symbolism that prevailed years ago in Brethren meetinghouses when there was neither pulpit nor altar but a table on the level of the congregation. Here a farmer preacher spoke to farmers in the only language he knew, a non-theological, nontechnical speech, but still a most eloquent language. Though our leaders are now technically trained and have pulpits to preach from, we believe they can still guard against speaking in strange tongues and turning their backs on the people. We are not yet so churchly that we cannot practice lay religion, a religion that makes the workbench an altar and every platform a pulpit.—K.M.

Pet Peeves or Deep Concerns?

THE minister of a Presbyterian church in Chicago once listed in his bulletin a dozen of his pet peeves. Although a few of the things that irritate him are hardly worth noting, the others might serve as a check on our bad church manners.

This minister is annoyed—and who is not—by worshipers who are habitually late for services. He dislikes also the early arrivers who take the outside seats so that others must stumble over their feet. Then there are the chatterers who seem not to understand that a musical prelude is to encourage worship. There are also gum chewers, people who never sing or join in readings, people who are obviously bored, people with long faces or with artificial smiles. Everyone knows the member who starts to follow an usher and drops off along the way, but even ushers can be thoughtless when they try to overload one pew while another has plenty of room.

While a minister can easily list his pet peeves, undoubtedly his congregation could compile as long a list of the annoyances for which he is responsible. They may dislike his gestures, his pulpit thumping, his voice, even the color of his necktie. One could be just as peevish about choir members and soloists, about organists and pianists, or even about the custodian who cannot adjust the temperature and ventilation to please everyone.



Maybe the trouble with many of us is our own peevishness. We become so quickly irritated with minor annoyances while the really disturbing aspects of our modern life leave us cold. Instead of pet peeves for church members, how about some deep concerns for Christians?—K. M.

To Build Again

Vernard Eller

Phyllis Kulp and Stanley Davis, Jr., unveil the marker at the place of the first Brethren baptism in this country. The speaker, Vernard Eller, is at center

WE ARE gathered to commemorate the establishment of the first Brethren congregation in the New World — an event that was marked by a baptism and a love feast held on the twenty-fifth day of December, 1723. But are you aware that in one sense this is a matter more to be questioned—or perhaps even criticized—than commemorated?

It is not strange that this congregation was organized; it is strange that the organization did not take place four years before it did. The Brethren whom we honor had arrived on these shores in 1719—four years before the church was organized. There were a goodly number of them; the party led by Peter Becker consisted of forty families, a sizable proportion of which must have been Brethren. It was not for lack of members that there was a four-year delay in organization. The church from which these people came, the Creyfeld congregation in Germany, was one of the largest Brethren groups, likely numbering in the hundreds. The elder at Creyfeld had been John Naas; so there can be no question but that these New World Brethren were well grounded in the faith and knew what Brethrenism was all about. It was not for lack of "know how" that the new organization was held up.

In fact, it would have been reasonable to expect that no new organization would have been needed at all, that the church would have remained intact in its transferal across the Atlantic, that whatever reorganization may have been necessary would have taken place aboard ship, that service would have been held immediately upon landing, and that the first baptism and love feast would have occurred within a few weeks. But that is not how it happened; the events we commemorate did not take place for four long years after the Brethren arrived.

Come with me from the eighteenth century back into the Old Testament where we find a story that should help us to understand how the four-year delay of the Brethren is to be interpreted.

You know how King Solomon, using the money, material and plans which had been provided by his father David, built a huge and magnificent temple to the Lord his God. The complete description of that temple is too long to read here, but listen to these few words from the second chapter of 2 Chronicles:

"Now Solomon purposed to build a temple for the name of the Lord . . . And Solomon assigned seventy thousand men to bear burdens and eighty thousand to quarry in the hill country, and three thousand six hundred to oversee them. And Solomon sent word to Huram the king of Tyre: . . . The house which I am to build will be great, for our God is greater than all gods . . . So now send me a man skilled to work in gold, silver, bronze, and iron, and in purple, crimson, and blue fabrics, trained also in engraving, to be with the skilled workers who are with me in Judah and Jerusalem, whom David my father provided. Send me also cedar, cypress, and algum timber from Lebanon, for I know that your servants know how to cut timber in Lebanon. And my servants will be with your servants, to prepare timber for me in abundance, for the house I am to build will be great and wonderful."

Now let us skip over more than four hundred years of Hebrew history to the building of the second temple. Hear the strange story of the dedication at which "the people could not distinguish the sound of the joyful shout from the sound of the people's weeping"; it is found in Ezra 3.

"And when the builders laid the foundation of the temple of the Lord, the priests in their vestments came forward with trumpets, and the Levites, the sons of Asaph, with cymbals, to praise the Lord, according to the directions of David king of Israel; and they sang responsively, praising and giving thanks to the Lord,

'For he is good, for his steadfast love endures forever toward Israel.'

And all the people shouted with a great shout, when they praised the Lord, because the foundation of the house was laid. But many of the priests and Levites and heads of fathers' houses, old men who had seen the first house, wept with a loud voice when they saw the foundation of this house being laid, though many shouted aloud for joy; so that the people could not distinguish the sound of the joyful shout from the sound of the people's weeping, for the people shouted with a great shout, and the sound was heard afar."

Why this strange weeping at a foundation-laying ceremony? It is explained easily enough. When the very old men who had actually seen and could remember the first temple, and when the priests who had read descriptions of the first temple like that which we read from Chronicles—when these folks saw how small and shabby this new temple was to be in comparison they just could not control their emotions. And in truth, the second temple was not much. The construction went by fits and starts, dragging on for over twenty years before it was completed; and even then it was "small and shabby." The tears of the old men are description enough; the second temple was something to cry over.

But even so the builders of the second temple deserve more credit, are more to be honored, than are Solomon and his builders of that first magnificent temple. Because the builders of the second temple undertook one of the most difficult jobs in the world, picking up the pieces and rebuilding after a disastrous defeat. The builders of the second temple did not have at hand all the resources of a strong and prosperous kingdom. They were a small band of returned refugees working in the ruins of their homeland which was now occupied territory. They had very little money or manpower, and the men they did have had to spend so much time in building their own homes and making their own livings that they had little time to spare for temple building. Then, too, the enemies of the Jews, who lived in the country round about, threw every possible block and hindrance into the way of the build-

My Father Calls. . . .

VELMA D. COLLINS

My Father calls me and I know his voice
For I have heard him speak so oft before;
Have known his presence; felt my heart rejoice
That in his fold is life forevermore.

He speaks of blinded eyes, of deafened ears,
Of fields to harvest where no scythe has been;
He speaks of love, of labor and of tears;
He speaks of the undying souls of men.

He gives a message for his lost, blind sheep—
The thirsting, groping souls with hope grown dim—
He loves them all and promises to keep
In perfect peace all those who trust in him.

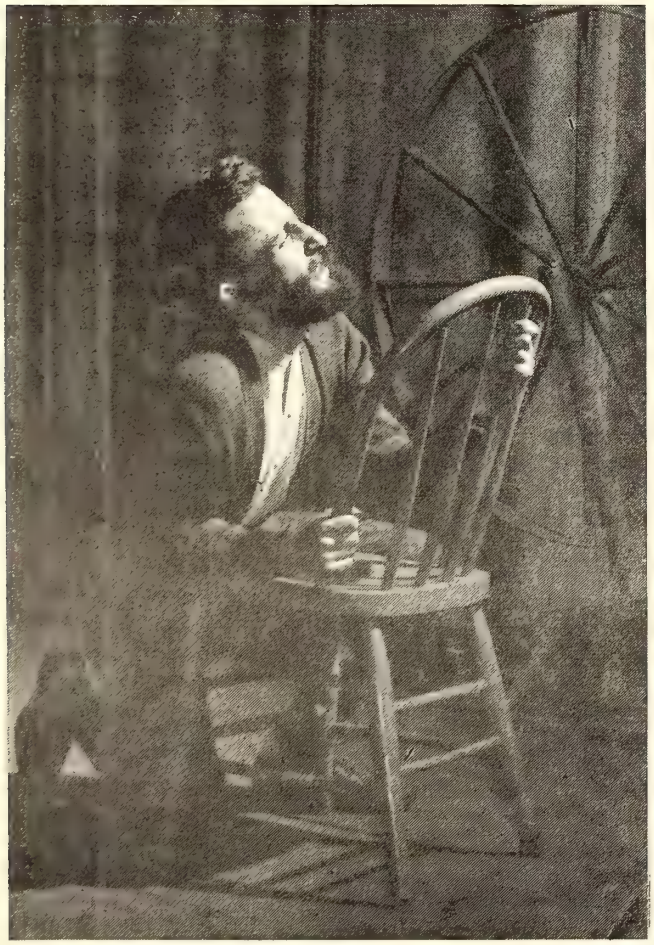
He gives a mission. Can I tell him, "No,"
And leave to other hands my work to do,
Or say, "Four months till harvest—then I'll go—". . .
With fields now white, and laborers so few.

My Father calls. What matter if the field
Lies at my door or in some distant land.
It matters only that I humbly yield
My will to his, and let him take my hand.

It matters only that I let him mold
My life according to his perfect plan,
And make this earthen vessel meet to hold
His satisfying draught for thirsty man.

ers. But undoubtedly the greatest handicap was the psychological one, that it is the next thing to impossible to work up any enthusiasm for building a shack in the ruins of what had been the most magnificent edifice in the land; it would have been so much easier just to give up and quit.

And the baptism that took place on this spot almost 232 years ago takes its place alongside the building of the second temple. Here again there could have been observed the strange mixture of joy and tears, for some of the Brethren must have wept, standing here in a small band on the bank of a creek with an unpronounceable and most unGerman name and recalling the great days of faith back in the old home church of Creyfeld. How their hearts must have been torn within them as they counted back over the months of four long years they had been without the church—and that through no one's fault but their own. How small and shabby was this little German sect huddled now in the wild and lonely forest on the frontier of a strange, new world.



But the baptism of the Wissahickon was every bit as much of an accomplishment as the baptism of Schwarzenau, for the Brethren were rebuilding in the ruins, were picking up the pieces and starting over.

Prior to this time the church had experienced a disastrous defeat—though a spiritual defeat rather than a military one as was the case with the ancient Hebrews. The church at Creyfeld had been split, broken down the center by that worst sort of quarrels—a church quarrel. Dissension, wrangling and name-calling had usurped the places of love and brotherhood as rulers of the church. In fact, it was in an effort to escape this situation that Peter Becker and his party came to America. But the hard feelings followed them, and so the new church did not get organized.

There was also another factor that seems to have played its part in the four year delay of the church—and that is the church's age-old enemy, the temptation of materialism. When the Brethren hit the New World where land was theirs for the taking, where hard work and industry gave the promise of bulging Pennsylvania barns and fertile fields that stretched out rolling acre after rolling acre, they apparently diverted all their interest and energy into building up the Pennsylvania-Dutch empire—and the church went begging.

In such a situation—where it seemed better to do without the church than to stir up old quarrels and where the people were completely engrossed in more immediate pursuits anyhow—in such a situation it would have been much easier to give the church up as a bad deal and forget about it. A few years ago I wrote a play entitled In Our Own Strength. In that play I attempted to dramatize the spiritual struggle that must have been involved as Peter Becker consented to act as elder for the new church. Let me quote a few of those speeches. Some of the Brethren have just approached Becker about accepting leadership of the new organization. He was not particularly gifted as a speaker or administrator and was well aware of this lack. So he engages in some agonized soul-searching.

"My heart is with the church, and of the contribution that she can make to the lives of men, I would be the last to deny. Even from the time of my baptism until now has my love been towards her. How great the hurt when on the night of that dark council

FLORENCE M. BOLLINGER

The mighty ocean swells and roars,
A winding river ever on is flowing;
That jewelled lake in snowy mountains set
Nature's own perfect majesty reflects.

In yonder meadow the cattle graze
And drink from the clear pebbled stream;
While woodland shadows and filtering sun
Play upon the scene.

I, who am weary, and thirst for drink
Seek the spring in the rock—
Not mighty, not majestic,
Nor long in its course—
But from source unseen
Pours out its life-giving cup.

the spirit of the church was lost, words can little tell; and yet that grief has still not been allayed, but casts o'er all our lives the cold shadow of its sorrow. But even so, I am not sure a new church would now satisfy the problem. If when in the strength of youth, led by so great a soul as Brother Naas, strife could so shatter our fellowship, then what hope, with only my small powers to lead, that in a new church we would find success? The seeds of that original defeat lie yet around us; and how much more great the fall if this, a second time, avails us naught but ill.

"To rise again from out that first defeat is doubly hard, beyond the scope of that strength given me. I know myself inadequate for such a job, and yet shall that responsibility be mine? Who am I that I should lead the Brethren from this sorrow, the blame upon my head if we do not achieve? I asked not to be thrust into the role of shepherd. I am insufficient. Take it yet away from me, O Lord; I have not the strength."

But God be praised, Becker did decide to lead the Brethren in picking up the pieces and starting over; the baptism in the Wissahickon was one of the first steps in that process, and the very fact that we are gathered here two hundred years later is indication that the struggle of rebuilding and the tears that were shed were worth the cost.

But what has all this to say to us? Only this: All of us likely have, at one time or another, experienced spiritual defeat, have slid down from the high plane we were on when at baptism we took solemn vows concerning Christ and his church. In all likelihood the things that have thrown us are the very things that defeated the early Brethren. Perhaps hard feelings have come between us and a brother. Perhaps we have been mistreated or insulted and have allowed this to weaken our faith, used it as an excuse to reduce our loyalty to the church. Or, on the other hand, perhaps we have become so engrossed in other interests, that our Christian faith and loyalty have suffered through neglect.

Now this analysis may strike you as defeatism and a queer way to speak to young people. Most speakers treat young people as though our dear, innocent, clean-cut youth were on a continuously ascending spiritual track and that, at most, all they need is a little encouragment and guidance. But that is a false picture. Young people can and do make a mess of their lives. They can and do become so involved in worldly pursuits that they lose their religion. They experience spiritual defeat.

And perhaps today you are one of these. Perhaps as you look back over your life you must admit that there was a time when you were a better Christian, more dedicated to Christ and his church, than you are today. Perhaps you have sometimes felt a desire and longing to return to the heights of faith but have been overwhelmed with the impossibility of rebuilding, have decided that it is easier to go on the way you have been than to undergo the heartache of building a shack in the ruins of Solomon's temple.

But the message of the Wissahickon is that with God's help the second temple can be built, and at his command it must be built; with God's help the church can be established in the New World, and at his command it must be established; with God's help you can become the Christian he wants you to be, and at his command you must become that Christian.

THE CHALLENGE OF TELEVISION

H. Armstrong Roberts

Mary Peacock

PERHAPS you have heard about the small boy who sat and watched the television repairman as he opened his work kit and prepared to examine the ailing family set. "Maybe if you would clean out all the dead cowboys at the bottom of the cabinet, it would work better," the little fellow suggested hopefully.

Most parents and teachers will readily agree that television could indeed present us with a few less "dead cowboys," and stand a little "cleaning out," in general. There are other things that might be remedied, too, in our daily TV fare. So what could be more important than for parents and teachers to combine their efforts in seeking to discover ways by which television may be made to "work better" for our family groups?

There are so many angles to consider! How much time should a child be allowed to spend in front of a TV set? Are Westerns really bad for our youngsters? What can be done about the crime and violence programs? These are just a few of the questions that confront us and, far too often, we are likely to be overwhelmed by it all, sigh pessimistically, and speak rather woefully of the "television problem." Why not take a more positive, aggressive attitude toward the business at hand and speak of the "television challenge" instead? For it is a challenge, and one that Christian parents and teachers may well join forces in setting out to meet!

Let's think of parents first. Briefly speaking, they might almost be divided into three categories so far as television is concerned. There are those few who are still holding out against TV, reasoning that as long as it is kept out of the home there will be no family problems such as their neighbors are facing. Others do own sets, yet allow their children no freedom in choice of program or time of viewing. Such parents are likely to be a bit smug in their assumption that their children are seeing only what is good for them. Still other parents carelessly shrug off the whole thing with, "So what if some programs are objectionable? My child will probably outgrow his liking for them—and, in the meantime, why worry?"

This article is one of a series planned by the Committee on Children's Work of the Division of Christian Education of the National Council of Churches. It is being used by several co-operating denominations.

Now, most of us who understand the wonderful workings of a child's mind, realize that all of these parents are only deluding themselves. If children are not seeing TV in their own living rooms, they will certainly see it elsewhere—at the home of some neighbor or friend. If Mother doesn't allow a certain program that is a favorite topic of discussion among the boys at school, chances are that Junior will find ways and means to view this very program at least once or twice, away from home, so he can join in the talk and not feel left out. And what of the third group—the "don't worry, he'll outgrow it" kind of parents? They are on the most dangerous ground of all. Perhaps the youngster will outgrow his desire to sit and watch the same program day after day, week after week. But we have to face the fact that there are some shows on TV today which may prove definitely harmful to a child's character and general attitude toward life as he grows. So you see, any way we choose to look at television, the challenge is there—and it is a big one!

If TV is causing trouble—if a child is unhappy because of overly zealous parental censoring or if another child is absorbing harmful ideas because of lack of parental supervision in program selection perhaps concrete suggestions will help.

First, and most important of all, television is something for the family to enjoy together, in so far as homework and other activities will permit. Parents need to know what programs are available to their children, in order to offer intelligent help with the selection. They cannot very well object to a program which they have never watched simply because they heard it was not good. They have to know for themselves before an honest opinion can be formed.

If the children are old enough, they should have a voice in the family's program choosing. Together, members of a family may talk over the evening's offerings—weigh the good points and the bad, the likes and dislikes of the group—and then tune in those programs which they think will be the most generally enjoyable. Now and then, there will inevitably be a conflict when two shows of equal merit are scheduled for the same hour—Sister preferring one and Junior the other. This situation need not bring on a quarrel, if it is handled in the right manner. This is an excellent opportunity for a family lesson in "give and take." Why not watch Sister's favorite program this time, and Junior's next week—or whenever it is scheduled again? Television is something to be shared, and once in a while sharing involves sacrifice on the part of one individual or another.

Bearing in mind the fact that a child must be given an opportunity to make choices, if we expect him to become a discriminating viewer, we must not lose sight of the importance of adult guidance. Sometimes it becomes necessary to remind a child that the decision of an adult may be wiser than his own. After all, children expect their parents and teachers to take firm stands on things that really matter, and perhaps they will respect us even more for standing pat when we decide that certain TV shows are not to their best interests. All they ask is a reason for our decision, and it must be a good one. And getting down to a basic fact, let us not forget that in TV, as in everything else, the best way to guide a child in the right direction is to set a good example before him. If we choose undesirable programs, can we expect our children or pupils to be more

Kirby Page

A MAN'S measure of greatness is a test of his character. By this standard the uniqueness of Jesus stands out. In the midst of a people who were eagerly awaiting the coming of the Messiah who would deliver them from bondage, he knew that he had found the means of redemption. No contrast could be sharper than that between their expectation of a Messianic king who with armed power would drive out the invader and his understanding of the Deliverer needed to bring freedom to mankind. Nothing less than total allegiance to the will of God and entire devotion to the well-being of others could liberate men from bondage.

So he came riding on the back of an ass, not as a king on a war charger but as the suffering servant of God. And his word was, "If any man would be great among you, let him be the servant of all." Instead of promising his disciples chief places in the palace, he sent them out as lambs among wolves and told them plainly that the time would come when men would kill them and think that they were doing service to God by getting rid of them. He promised not a throne but a cross.

This is the spiritual revolution that enabled the early Christians to turn the world upside down. The prophetic vision of redemption through the suffering servant became reality in the rejection and betrayal, the crucifixion and the resurrection of Jesus. The Christian standard of success is as simple as this: find the will of God and do it, leaving the results in his hands. It is the will of God that the disciple be Christlike to the degree that he is able. There is no form of success higher than taking up the cross in obedience to God and in service of man. And for Christians today the question is inescapable, am I living as if I accept the standard of greatness set by our Lord?

discriminating than we are?

As to the amount of time a child should be allowed to spend before the TV set, that is something to be decided by the individual family. There is one simple fact to keep in mind, however, and it boils down to this: if TV is interfering with any of the things that should come first in a child's life—homework, music practice, Sunday-school preparation or good health habits—then it is certainly time to cut down on the hours of viewing. TV should never be allowed to hurry a child's meal, for instance, or cut down on his precious hours of sleep. There will be occasional programs of such historic importance that exceptions will have to be made. But these times are generally few and far between.

Now, what about Westerns? This again, is a matter for decision in the home. Some parents feel that Westerns are definitely bad. Others assert that they are usually good, clean stories—that in them right always triumphs over wrong and that they are so far removed from our present-day setting as to be more like something "out of a storybook" rather than excerpts from real life. No doubt, we will all agree that there is entirely too much gun play in these Western episodes. We do not like it. On the other hand, these shows are not to be compared in violence and brutality with many of the more popular dramatic features being offered on TV today. It might be well to try to help parents see the wisdom of a more varied diet for their children's daily TV fare. A Western now and then, perhaps—in fact, this is almost mandatory in homes where there are lively red-blooded American boys—but let us not encourage our boys to look for nothing except this kind of entertainment when they turn the dial.

Now, most important of all, what about those crime stories? Is there anything we can do about them? There most certainly is. We can write to our local TV stations, stating our feelings about this type of so-called entertainment. Going a step further, we can write to the sponsors of these programs, telling them we cannot conscientiously endorse the products they advertise or use them in our homes so long as they continue to invade our living rooms with material that is harmful to our children's minds and characters. We can use our influence in the organizations to which we belong—PTA, church groups, women's clubs and the like—urging them to take definite stands against these undesirable features, too. That such concerted action can and does bring results has already been proven to a great extent in the recent campaign against crime "comics." In many communities, these magazines have been removed from the dealers' shelves simply because aroused citizens demanded it. A few publishers have actually withdrawn some of these comics from the presses, not wishing to buck the tide of public opinion that has surged in upon them.

Clark and Clark

If TV is interfering with those things that should come first in a child's life, then it is time to cut down on the hours of viewing

Television is a part of our world. It is quite possible for us to live with and enrich our lives because of it, without giving up a single high principle or sacrificing any of our standards or ideals. If we, as teachers, can help parents find ways of making TV work for the best interests of their families, rather than against them, we will have gone a long way toward meeting the challenge that is constantly before us.

What a sensation of guidance filled our heart as we walked homeward singing When I Survey the Wondrous Cross, Cross of Christ and other hymns. This experience always acted as a benediction at the close of day.

Christian friends, as you walk the crooked and sometimes dark streets of life is there a lighted cross in your heart to show you the way you should walk, the direction such a guiding light would lead you?

Meditations on Camping

H. Lawrence Rice

This is — a camp — a community of children brought together by our choosing — in the country — on vacation.

It is fun,
and adventure,
a chance to play,
and lots of children.

It is freedom and a chance to explore, and live
and breathe again.

There are parents to stimulate — to educate.
And people to choose — directors, educators, counselors.

Programs are planned — for our concern is children — their personal development, their social education.

Camping is an all-inclusive experience, an opportunity to strengthen a child's social being,
a time to meet God,
a place to be free.

But there are decisions to make
And plans to get ready.

Pastor of the Ninth Street church, Roanoke, Virginia

Religious News Service

It is time to board buses, to climb in cars, to register, to meet new faces,
and form new friendships.

This is the first meal,
the first night away from home.

There are twenty-four hours of eating and sleeping, of playing and worship,
of singing and praying.

Each child must be handled with seriousness, importance and sincerity.

His expressions must be satisfying and happy.

For he has brought to camp
the "I" and "me" and "mine," he harbors his feelings and attitudes, his concerns, confusions and curiosities.

These are what little boys and girls are made of — these are the assorted ingredients.

There can be baseball bats and canoes, log cabins and tennis rackets, swimming pools and swings.

And these cannot tell if a child is happy or sad, tense or relaxed,
fearful or radiant.

Camping has produced a quality of understanding, dropping as gentle dew

To a sleepy child on a star-lit night
among the pines and beside still waters.

There is a quality of leadership selected as carefully
as a new cabin or tennis court, a fielder's glove or a doll's house.

Yes, we live in a new world of human relationships, of group living, of communal life.

This new world demands a modern camp with lofty goals fulfilling a child's emotional and physical needs.

It has daily routines and free time,
a vigorous program and play schedules, and there is co-operation and no competition.

These children begin to use their abilities.
Sharing ideas, making decisions respecting opinions.

For this is the "way of life" which Christ lived and talked about and taught.

He said,
"Go then and do likewise."

We have measured our acreages of land,
the depth of our well,
the size of our lakes,
the stock of our pantries.

So also we must appraise the capacity of the camps to bring each camper
one step closer to God,

One movement nearer man
With sensitivity, understanding and respect.

We have dynamos of human energy ebbing and flowing as children live and work, play and learn.

We expect miracles.
Miracles do happen yet in our day,
for Jimmy has lived
beneath the velvet sky and arched stars.
He has studied and he has dreamed.
He has found God at camp.

American Abundance and World Need

An interfaith campaign to promote a greater sharing of American abundance with other peoples of the world began on May 4. At the opening meeting this statement on American Abundance and World Needs was signed by eighty-eight church leaders of the three major faiths.

GOD has blessed the United States with abundance. A vast endowment of natural resources, brilliant achievements in science and technology, a free society and a dynamic economy have united to bring us to heights of material productivity never before known to mankind. Both our natural resources and our human skills of hand and brain are the gifts of God. We are his creatures and stewards in his vineyard.

The abundance which is ours and the potential productivity within our grasp are at once blessings to be enjoyed and a trust to be administered in the name of God and in the service of mankind.

It is contrary to the will of God that islands of prosperity should persist amid oceans of poverty, hunger and distress. Bread for myself is a material concern; bread for my brother is a spiritual concern.

In a moral universe, the continued prosperity of one nation can only be justified by its faithful and courageous efforts to make comparable abundance available to all nations.

These basic ethical considerations point toward certain goals which should be firm guides to national policies and programs. In the domestic sphere, the appropriate goals are an expanding peacetime economy and equitable distribution of the national product. These goals are fundamental because as a nation we cannot share what we do not possess.

In the international sphere, America's goal should be a greatly expanded sharing of our material abundance, our technical skills and the dynamic spirit of free society. This goal must be pursued in a genuine spirit of international friendship and goodwill. Although our efforts should always be dedicated to the advancement of free institutions and opposed to any form of totalitarianism, we must avoid making our participation contingent upon political conformity or subservience on the part of other nations.

We pledge ourselves, and we call upon our national leaders, both in the social sciences and in the practical realms of business, labor, agriculture and politics, to work together for the following specific policies and programs:

1. National economic policies designed to achieve and maintain full employment with full and efficient production both in industry and agriculture. With growing population, increasing labor force and mounting productivity this means not a level, but an annually rising gross national product.

2. Industrial wages and agricultural price policies which will produce a just and equitable distribution of consumer purchasing power throughout the economy.

3. Food and nutrition programs which will assure adequate and healthful diets for all Americans and for as many as can be reached and served abroad.

4. Expanded programs of technical assistance in the funda-nental work of world economic nd social development.

5. International trade and nonetary policies designed to acilitate and expand the inter- national flow of goods and serv- ces. Appropriate public aid hould be provided to agricultur- l and industrial enterprises acing adjustments as trade arriers are progressively re- noved.

6. Foreign economic aid pro- grams geared to meet situations f emergency and long-time hu- nan need. For this purpose both he offices of government and of oluntary and religious agencies hould be used.

In order to minimize suspicions f nationalistic or imperialistic notivation on the part of the Jnited States, to reduce inter- national tension and to promote world peace, we believe the fol- owing three principles should e observed in all programs of oreign trade, aid and technical ssistance:

(1) Complete separation of J.S. economic and technical aid rom programs of military aid.

(2) Full utilization of private nd nongovernmental agencies n trade, aid, and technical as- istance programs.

(3) Maximum utilization of he United Nations and the pecialized agencies associated vith it.

In the last analysis, American olicies and programs are de- ermined by the will of the peo- le. This is the glory of our free nd democratic society. There- ore, our ultimate appeal is to he people of America. We call pon all Americans of moral dealism and righteous convic- ion to join us and their neigh- ors in an all-out crusade to em- loy the God-given abundance of merica in an expanded pro- ram of world development, uman progress and internation- l peace.

The Family Counselor

Naomi Will H. K. Zeller, Jr. Jesse Ziegler

The Family Counselor welcomes letters of inquiry. They may be addressed: Family Life Department, General Brotherhood Board, 22 S. State St., Elgin, Ill.

Dear Counselor,

I am a girl in my teens. I have become engaged to a boy about my age. My parents are not very fond of him. He is of another faith and my parents have always wanted their children to marry in our faith. They are deeply grounded in the Brethren faith. Now I know when I tell them we are getting married, it will break their hearts. But I feel love comes before religion, although I like my church. I believe he will join it for me. Let me hear what you think of this situation.

One in Love

Dear Friend "in Love,"

Your letter raises a question that is increasing in importance all the time. It used to be relatively easy to meet a suitable person within one's own church, fall or grow in love and get married. But with increased moving about, the mixing of all kinds of people in public schools and in industry, the wide acquaintance arising from volunteer service or being in the armed services—all of these and many more factors contribute to a widespread crossing of religious lines for friends, and this raises the question of marriage across lines.

Your letter is not entirely clear to me. You say your friend is "of another faith." Usually when we say this we mean "he is a Jew, a Roman Catholic, a Moslem, or an adherent to some other religion." If this is what you mean, then it would have to be said that the odds are against a really satisfying and happy marriage. Take the matter of marrying a Jewish person. He may be a very fine person. But in many cases this would mean that the man would be rejected by his family and the community of which he is a part. The family would find great difficulty in accepting you as a daughter. Or suppose he is a Roman Catholic. To be married in such a way that his family could accept the marriage it would have to be by a priest. He would require you to take instruction in the Roman Catholic faith and sign an agreement that would require that your children be raised as Roman Catholic and that your husband engage in continuing efforts to convert you to his faith. Again here the odds are against the success of such a marriage. I should like to recommend very strongly that you secure and read the little book by James Pike entitled If I Marry Outside My Faith.

But you may have meant simply that your friend is a member of another Protestant church. Here the problem may be much less serious. There is so much of common heritage and common faith throughout Protestantism that often a man or woman can move easily and happily into another church. If you find your religious beliefs are somewhat similar and your friend is interested in joining your church, there should be little difficulty on this score. Or if you prefer to join his church or you both prefer to join a third church—all of these may be good solutions. It is certainly desirable to become active in the same church, so that you can worship and work together and your future children with you. Men and women are marrying across such lines and making these changes in great numbers. A very happy and satisfying marriage may result. But it is important that each of you accept as good and valid the religious experience of the other and then proceed to choose what will be one you will share.

I must say that it would seem very unwise to consider as the major factor what your parents feel about this matter. Their wisdom and love are important. But the essential meaning of marriage is "leaving father and mother and cleaving to one's husband or wife in order that you may become one." On the other hand, to say as you do in your letter that love comes before religion does not seem to me to be quite adequate. Love may be more important than a particular church. But the love of God in Christ Jesus is basic to any secure marriage.

Why not go to your pastor and talk with him about the peculiar form of this problem of yours?

Jesse H. Ziegler.

G. G. Canfield of Mexico, Ind., suffered a stroke which paralyzed the left side on July 19. He is recovering at the home of his daughter in Sweetser, Ind.

Ira W. Moomaw, executive secretary of Agricultural Missions, leaves about Aug. 20 on a two-month field trip to East and Central Africa. He will stop en route in England for the summer training school of the Institute of Rural Life. In Africa he will take part in rural work conferences with missionaries and others.

Highland Community church at Orlando, Fla., on July 10 installed its new pastor, Rev. David K. Webster, a graduate of the 1955 class of Bethany Biblical Seminary, dedicated its parsonage and its church school assembly room. Moderator Floyd M. Irvin officiated in the events of the day with the assistance of various people from the city and the local church.

The first Brethren drama workshop will be held at Bethany Biblical Seminary, 3435 Van Buren, Chicago 24, Ill., the week of Aug. 15-19. Persons who are responsible for dramatics and use drama in their church and church school programs will find this workshop a very helpful experience. Consult your pastor and Sunday-school superintendent for further details or write Drama Workshop at the above address.

The national conference of the Fellowship of Reconciliation will be held at Camp Mack, Ind., Sept. 2-4. Speakers will include Harold Ehrensperger, director of the foreign student program at Boston University; Paul Sekiya, executive secretary of the Japanese FOR; John M. Swomley, Jr., national secretary of the FOR; Dan West, director of leadership training, Church of the Brethren. Further details may be obtained from the Fellowship of Reconciliation, 21 Audubon Ave., New York City.

Home-comings

Chiques church, Pa., dedication services for the new addition to and the remodeling of the building, Aug. 19-21. S. Clyde Weaver of East Petersburg, Pa., will speak at the Friday evening service; Frank Carper of Palmyra, at the Saturday evening meeting. On Sunday Rufus Bucher of Mechanic Grove will bring the morning sermon and A. C. Baugher of Elizabethtown, Pa., will deliver the dedicatory address in the afternoon.

Front Royal church, Va., home-coming, Sunday, Aug. 28. Bro. Jacob Replogle, pastor of First church, Baltimore, Md., will be the speaker at the afternoon service.

Four Mile church near Richmond, Ind., all-day meeting, Sunday, Sept. 18. Services will begin at 10:15 a.m. and 1:30 p.m. Vernard Eller, youth editor for the Church of the Brethren, will be the guest speaker.

John D. Ellis of Johnstown, Pa., will be the speaker at the dedication of the parsonage-chapel of the newly established Erie congregation, Pa., on Aug. 14. Glenn H. Bowlby of Pittsburgh, Pa., and William K. Kulp of Kittanning, the moderator for Western Pennsylvania, will also participate in the service. W. J. Hamilton is the pastor of this mission church located on the corner of Raspberry and W. Thirty-sixth Streets.

Total support of the Brotherhood program for a period of twenty-five minutes was given by twenty-seven young people plus leaders at Camp Brethren Heights in Michigan. An additional $25 was given for recreational equipment at the camp, with the total offerings amounting to $90. A foodless meal comprising singing, meditation and prayer and an interpretation of one aspect of the Brotherhood program before each offering was a part of the stewardship effort.

Bridgewater College

A total of seventy-seven students are enrolled in the summer session.

Dean John Boitnott is predicting an enrollment increase of from five to ten per cent for the regular session beginning in September. This would approximate a total of 500 students in attendance.

Gifts for the development program for the session ended June 30 totaled $168,690.33. Of this amount $118,631.77 has been designated for the proposed health and physical education building, the seventy-fifth anniversary project.

Mrs. John Stoddard of Staunton, class of 1926, was elected president of the Alumni Association in June. She is the first woman to be elected to this post at Bridgewater. Mrs. Stoddard is well known in church and civic circles in the city of Staunton.

Warren F. Groff, assistant professor of Bible and religion, was awarded the Ph.D. degree by Yale University in June. The subject of his dissertation was The Unity of the Person of Christ in Contemporary Theology.

Robert H. Newcomb, assistant professor of English, has had an article published in the June issue of the publication of the Modern Language Association entitled Poor Richard's Debt to Lord Halifax. Prof. Newcomb is an authority on the literary activities of Benjamin Franklin.

The Southeastern regional meeting of the Church of the Brethren held on the campus Aug. 2-4 featured addresses by Bro. Desmond Bittinger of McPherson, Kansas, and Bro. Norman J. Baugher, general secretary of the General Brotherhood Board, and Rev. Robert J. Smith, chaplin of the Roanoke veterans hospital.

Dr. Walter S. Flory, Jr., of the class of 1928, has been elected president of the Virginia Academy of Science. Dr. Flory, a former Bridgewater faculty member, is vice-director of the Blandy experimental farm of the University of Virginia.

Tragedy struck the Bridgwater campus twice this past spring by way of highway deaths of students. Paul Cheeks, of Union Bridge, Md., a sophomore, and Charles T. Houck, Jr., of Hagerstown, Md., a sophomore, lost their lives in fatal accidents occurring on U. S. route 11 in April and May, respectively.

News and Comment From Around the World

Bible Society Reports on Distribution of Scriptures

The American Bible Society distributed 9,000,071 volumes of Scriptures in the United States last year. The society distributed more Scriptures in Latin America than in any previous year, a total of more than 3,000,000 volumes to 23 countries.

During the year the society published the first Scriptures in six languages. These are Puebla Aztec (Mexico), Bandi (Liberia), Ayacucho Quechua (Peru), Junin Quechua (Peru) and Shipibo (Peru). At the end of 1954, the whole Bible had been published in 206 languages and dialects, a complete Testament in 260 more and single books in 618 more. This made a total of 1,084 languages in which some part of the Bible has been translated.

A unique organization at Central church, Roanoke, Va., is the fellowship of the deaf, which meets regularly in the church chapel during the worship hour. The services, including Sunday school and church, are similar to other services except that they are carried on through the sign language. They even have singing and special music in this way. The leader of the group, in the center of the front row in picture above, is Warren C. Blackwell, a member of the Church of the Brethren and a graduate of Gallaudet College. Eight of the group represented here are Brethren; the others are representatives of a number of different faiths, some of them coming fifty miles for the service, which is nondenominational in emphasis

Southern California and Arizona District Deacons' Assembly

A MOVEMENT which began in Southern California in 1947 and is nearly unique in the Brotherhood culminated in the ninth deacons' assembly, held in the Long Beach church on April 23 and 24. In its early years the assembly was conducted as a retreat in a camp, but as it grew it seemed wise to hold it in the various churches and thus share some of the blessings available in different communities.

The group meets each spring to participate in a program planned largely by a district board which elects a new member each year. These officers serve three years and rotate through the offices of treasurer, president and secretary. The office is usually shared by husband and wife. The officers for 1955 were Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Schrock of La Verne, president; Mr. and Mrs. William Dickson of Hermosa Beach, treasurer; and Mr. and Mrs. Raphael Wolfe of Glendora, secretary. Elected at the 1955 assembly to take office later this year were Mr. and Mrs. Henry Sheller of San Fernando.

The opening session, on Saturday evening, April 23, was a truly inspirational occasion. A very pleasant banquet, served by members of the Long Beach church, was followed by a stirring address by Dr. Harold Humbert of La Verne College. Speaking on The Dynamics of Leadership, he drew from his vast experience as a minister, world traveller, professor and lecturer. A beautiful musical program was given by the Long Beach men's chorus under the direction of Robert Walker, minister of music.

On Sunday morning the deacons participated in the regular Sunday school and church services of the host church. Frank Howell, Long Beach assistant pastor, conducted a stimulating discussion during the Sunday-school hour. The church worship service furnished an opportunity for all to be moved by the stirring preaching of Robert Richards, Long Beach pastor.

Following another fine dinner served by the Long Beach church, the assembly met for the final afternoon session. Necessary business was transacted briefly. Then followed an hour of discussion in which a panel led by Merlin Eisenbise of Glendora posed questions and some answers concerning functions of deacons a generation or two ago as compared with their duties now. Audience participation was brisk. Some interesting comments were made by Long Beach deacon S. H. Bowman, who has served about fifty-eight years in the office and was first installed in Oklahoma in 1888.

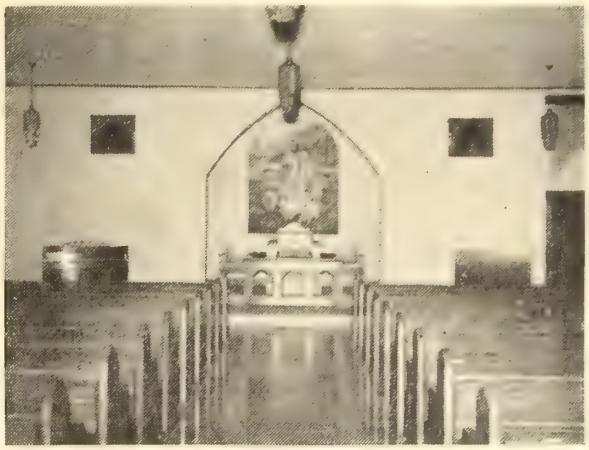
While the deacons' assembly holds no official position in Brotherhood organization, it is felt that several important purposes are well served. It is stimulating and inspirational as is shown by the continued attendance by many from most of the churches of the district. It serves as a medium of exchange of ideas among the various churches. Several local deacon groups have become much more active as the result of ideas which some of their members have received at assemblies. Already many who have given enthusiastic support in the past are looking forward to the 1956 assembly which will be held in the Pomona church. — Raphael and Maurine Wolfe.

Reports Increase in Church Social Welfare Institutions

A resurgence of church activity in the social welfare field has been noted by Robert E. Bondy, director of the National Social Welfare Assembly. He said this resurgence has taken place even though social welfare has become "big business" with government and other agencies assuming increasing responsibility for care of the poor and sick. William J.

Villaume of New York, executive director of the National Council of Churches' department of social welfare, said there was a noticeable increase in the number and size of church-related social welfare institutions, especially hospitals and homes for the aged.

Reformed Synod Asks for Armament Controls



The General Synod of the Reformed Church in America, at its 149th annual meeting, called on the United States to lead the world in seeking prohibition of all weapons of mass destruction and a drastic reduction of all other armaments.

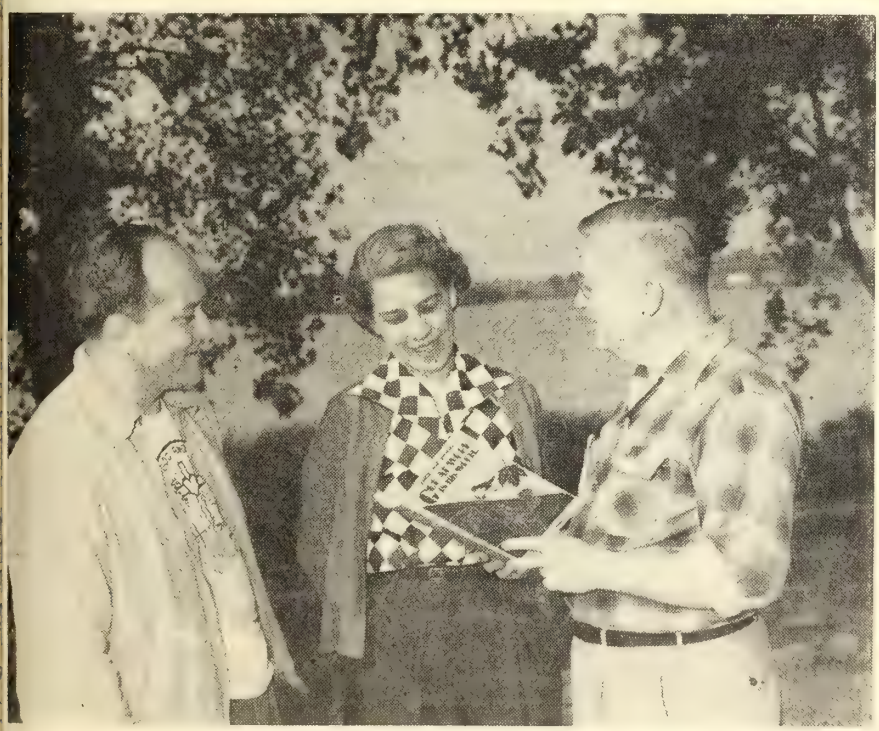
The Synod voted to relocate its headquarters in the new united church center on Morningside Heights in New York upon completion of that project. A budget of $2,500,000 for 1956 was approved. This is an increase of $250,000 over the 1955 budget. Delegates approved Church World Service program of $75,000 for relief work in Korea, Arab camps and Pakistan and for Berlin refugees.

The denomination now has 205,300 communicant members, a three per cent net growth over last year. The Synod created a Stewardship Council to promote the benevolence program of the church.

Woodbury Church

The Church of the Brethren at Woodbury became known as the Woodbury congregation Nov. 11, 1876. At this time it was decided to erect a church known as the Replogle house on a plot of ground belonging to Rhinehart L. Replogle, about one-half mile north of the village of Woodbury. On Oct. 14, 1877, this house, now known as the Woodbury house, was dedicated with services led by James Quinter. The first full-time pastor was called to serve this congregation in 1924.

In 1944, the men of the Woodbury church made some improvements under the leadership of the late Franklin Beach. At the end of several years they had dug out and finished the basement, installed a new heating plant, kitchen and several Sunday-school classrooms and a baptistry.



In 1953 the Woodbury Sunday school was given permission to make some changes in church at no expense to the entire congregation. The work was begun by removing the inside vestibule and center doors. An outside entrance was constructed with a stairway to the basement. In the sanctuary improvements included new lighting facilities, church furniture, flooring and carpeting; changes were also made in the Sunday-school classrooms.

The seating capacity of the present auditorium is 240, excluding the choir area and the available Sunday-school rooms which can be opened up into the auditorium. The present church membership of the Woodbury church as of Jan. 1, 1955 was 273.

The dedication services were held on Jan. 16, 1955, with Bro. Tobias F. Henry of Juniata College, Huntingdon, Pa., bringing the message in the forenoon and afternoon. At the dedicatory services Dr. Henry used as his subject The Ministry of the Church.

Following the dedication service a two-week evangelistic meeting was held by Bro. Hiram Gingrich of Lebanon, Pa. Since the first of the year sixteen were baptized into the church fellowship.

Bro. Earl K. Ziegler is our present pastor and under his guidance and leadership we look to the future with a valiant hope and faith great enough to face the days ahead and continue to be a growing church in a growing congregation.—Mrs. Vernon Stayer, Curryville, Pa.

Legislate Morals?

MAY 17, 1955, marked the first anniversary of the Supreme Court's decision declaring segregation in the public schools unconstitutional. The decision of last May 17 is rightly hailed as "the most far-reaching advance in civil rights since the Emancipation Proclamation."

The great body of Protestant churches are on record with the commitment to work for a "nonsegregated church in a nonsegregated society." As the churches review the record of the happenings since last May, they can rejoice that so much has been accomplished to further their stated aim.

Probably more has been accomplished to achieve a "nonsegregated" society in the past year than in any previous year or any previous five-year period. Even in communities that have taken no overt action toward desegregation, there has been serious discussion of community responsibility by more people than ever discussed such issues before.

This record of solid achievement resulting from a legal decision calls for the examination of an opinion held widely in church groups. When the churches were called upon to lend personal and financial assistance to the civil rights groups initiating law suits to end segregation, they did not respond. One of the factors in this lack of response was the feeling that "you can't legislate morals" and "you don't change people by law."

Granted that this was a palatable excuse for avoiding any action on the part of some church people, it was also held as sincere reason for not supporting legal action on the part of others. Granted that law is a reflection of the cultured values of a people and that law is ineffective without public support, but law is also a moulder of values and one instrument of education.

"We have no intention of becoming outlaws." These and similar statements by governors of states whose laws were declared unconstitutional by the Court's decision reflect one response to legal demands. And this response, so different from the statements these same governors made six months previously, indicates that the law did change people.

In Louisville on March 1955, a white organization called "Parents on Our Block," invited two Negroes to meet with them for the first time to discuss what they could do to smooth the path of desegregation. The group accepted the invitation of one of its Negro guests to meet at his home the next month. Did the law change these people? At the very least, it changed them to the extent of two meetings, the choice of discussion topic and the decision as to whom they invited as guests.

Since September 1954, for the first time in ninety-one years, white and Negro public school pupils have attended school together in West Virginia. Did the law change these 30,000 pupils, their teachers and their parents?

Religious News Service

Children of many nationalities and races play happily together

All of these changes in behavior have occurred without legal enforcement. These have all been voluntary responses—after the Court's 1954 declaration but prior to an announcement of legally prescribed action or patterns of behavior.

Let's look for a moment at the other expression used so often, "you can't legislate morals." The partial truth of this statement is of course that moral character is an inner achievement dependent upon inner integrity and motivation. "The good man of the good treasure of his heart produces good. . ." Yet, the statement is untrue, for moral issues are the only subject upon which we do legislate. Is not every law concerned with some phase of "thou shalt not kill, thou shalt not steal, thou shalt not bear false witness, thou shalt not commit adultery"?

One further consideration related to "you can't legislate morals" is pertinent: the choice does not lie between some legislation and no legislation. The real choice is between legislation which supports the moral code we believe in and the legislation which supports a moral code we do not believe in.

The record of desegregation achieved by legal means during the past year is a challenge to churches that are committed to a nonsegregated society. The record challenges particularly the aloofness of the churches in support of legal procedures in the field of civil rights. Even more dramatic than the accomplishments in school desegregation are the achievements in the opening of restaurants in Washington, D. C., to all and the admittance of Negroes to railroad dining cars. In both instances legal decisions brought changes in policy and practice almost overnight.

The church has long understood that behind every legal decision that brings constructive change there must be understanding and acceptance by an alert public. The church has been in many places the chief sponsor of discussion groups and other educational techniques designed to promote racial justice. But the church has been less effective than it should be in achieving changes in attitudes and behavior.

Could there be a lesson with possibly wide application for the church in the happenings in the field of civil rights in 1954? That lesson could well be that without concrete, specific legal action taken, discussion, however well meaning, is ineffective in changing attitudes and behavior.

What Refugees Can Do—Many trades and professions are represented among the refugees awaiting resettlement by our churches. Could your town or community use a shoemaker, mechanic, experienced cook, beekeeper, dairyman, carpenter, engineer, butcher, riveter, construction worker, farmer, plumber or bricklayer? Or a seamstress, bookkeeper, clerk, hairdresser, nurses or nurses' aide? These persons who are waiting represent abilities and experience in a great variety of vocations.

What You Can Do—You can write to the Brethren refugee resettlement office about the type of work you might be able to find for the head of a refugee family. This office will send you a dossier (life-story and pictures) of a family. You can choose your family and fill out the assurance for them. The only costs will be transportation from New York and in getting the family settled. Send your card or letter to: Refugee Resettlement Office, Brethren Service Center, New Windsor, Md.

Gentiles Only

JOB discrimination and fair employment practices in the minds of most persons refer to treatment accorded Negro job seekers. Actually, anti—Jewish discrimination is a problem of great magnitude about which too little is said.

Statistics here are fewer. But some figures, secured by such agencies as the Jewish Vocational Service and the Bureau on Jewish Employment Problems in Chicago, are a clue to the situation.

A Chicago study by the latter, for instance, shows that 27 per cent of 3,700 business firms placing job orders with private agencies between March 1953 and September 1954 specifically barred Jews as applicants. In 1951 a one-week check by the Maryland State Employment Service in its clerical and professional division showed that more than a third of requests specified "gentile." A two-week study in Los Angeles the same year showed 17 percent of 5,535 job openings discriminating against Jews, with the figure rising to 27 percent in the case of clerical openings.

One reason for the concentration of Jews in medicine, dentistry, pharmacy, law and accounting is that in these fields they can operate independently without being subject to employer discrimination. The great bulk of Jews employed by firms are in Jewish-owned businesses. Estimates based on Chicago surveys a few years ago indicated less than 10 per cent of Jews in private industry employment were in non-Jewish firms.

The practice of requesting religious affiliation on employment applications continues in areas without Federal Employment Practices legislation.

Here is an area for concern by labor and religion alike. Such widespread and often subtle religious discrimination must be stamped out, along with racial discrimination. Both are denials of the full rights of men.

Reports of Special Studies in Southern Virginia

Four ministers in Southern Virginia under the direction of the district Christian education commission carried on special study pilot projects in their congregations this past spring. The following reports bespeak the benefits derived by those participating.

Temperance School

One of the motives for the temperance study in the First Church of the Brethren, Pulaski, Va., came out of the decision of several pastors in the Southern District of Virginia to conduct pilot projects in co-operation with the Christian education commission of the district. It was decided to conduct the study during the 6:30 Sunday night group meetings in March. Individual conferences were held by the pastor with the leaders of each age group, providing them with literature that would be suitable for their study. Much of the literature provided by our Brotherhood temperance secretary was read in preparation for the sessions. Basically, the following were utilized more fully:

Children—Finding Facts About Alcohol with both the teacher's and the pupils' books being used. The filmstrip, Bill's Decision, with a discussion of its message was presented for one of the periods.

Junior High and Youth—Decisions We Make was used for two sessions with Bill's Decision in another. Edmund Bloom, field secretary for the Virginia Church Temperance Council, spoke the other period. (He also addressed the entire church at the 7:30 service and showed the film, The Street.) For this special study the junior highs and the CBYF met together.

Adults—Special outside speakers were used instead of a study guide. A member of the local Alcoholics Anonymous group, a Salvation Army captain, and two laymen from other denominations were used for the four nights.

In attempting to evaluate this study we feel that much good was accomplished although the parents did not take enough interest in stimulating the children's desire to attend. Several of the youth and a number of the adults seem more aware of the problem than they were before. We feel that this study was worth while even though it could have been improved in many ways. The final results will be determined by the example of those people who participated and in their reaching out to help others. —Glenn S. Garner, pastor.

Brethren History

During January, February and March, the Topeco and Laurel Branch congregations gave special study to the text, Studies in Brethren History, by Mallott. Each congregation had two services a month or six sessions as a grand total. The procedure included discussion, using about four chapters as a unit at one time. This was varied as we came to the close of the book where we were not too detailed in our observations owing to the amount of material.

Those attending received with great interest the discussions presented. An attempt was made to view our past history and trends and also to try to find guidance for the future movement of our churches in relation to the trends.—Maurice Strausbaugh, pastor.

Temperance Study

The pilot project in the Henry Fork (Antioch congregation) and Snow Creek churches used the same type of program for each church—having it at one church on Wednesday night and at the other church on Thursday night.

There were four sessions at each church based on the study of temperance. The first session was devoted to a study of the stand which the Bible takes on various phases of the temperance problem. The second session was used to study the effects of alcohol in our lives—on our finances, bodies, spiritual growth. The third session was used to bring out the broader aspects of temperance in our life, such as use of money, eating, dress, control of passions and body urges. The last session was a study of some of the late findings on the effects of narcotics on the body, nicotine in particular.

Two filmstrips, a short sound film and many pamphlets were used. The filmstrips were Dollars and Sense, and He Went Straight Home. Some of the booklets used were: Considerations Before Cigarettes, Men of Distinction, What the Bible Says, The "Dope" on Dope, and the Statements of the Church of the Brethren on the Tobacco and Alcohol Problems. These were distributed to each one taking part in the study.

The response to these meetings was good. Questions from some of our young people seemed to evidence concern from them. All age groups met together for this program. —Eugene Lenker, pastor.

Bible Study

The Mt. Hermon congregation used Exploring the Bible, by E. G. Hoff, in its special study. Those participating found it was helpful, but somewhat difficult because not enough time was put forth in preparing the lessons. Most of the group did not do very much studying between meetings. A class willing to study the text along with the leader would find it very worth while, for it will give a better understanding and interpretation of the Bible.

Previous to this pilot project of study, the booklet, The Way, the Truth and the Life, was used and found quite beneficial and helpful. —Galen B. Crist, pastor.

New Publication

Senior Citizens of America is a new organization for those over forty. Joy Elmer Morgan, for many years editor of the Journal of the National Education Association, is president and Willard E. Givens, formerly executive secretary of the National Education Association, is chairman of the board of trustees. It encourages its members to maintain the "highest level of political intelligence and service." It is issuing a new publication, Senior Citizens, of which the first issue appeared in January 1955. Joy Elmer Morgan is editor.

Membership in Senior Citizens is $5 per year, which includes a subscription to the publication, Senior Citizens. The address is 1701 Sixteenth St., N. W., Washington 9, D.C.

What have you done this summer to maintain the solidarity of your church fellowship? Did the adult classes sponsor picnics for their families? Has the church met regularly in social occasions? Did the youth groups engage in any outings? Were there inter-family visits?

If something worked especially well in your church, a report would be appreciated by the Christian Education Commission office.

Tithing Stories from Brethren Churches in Five States

IN 1950-51 the Lincoln church, Nebr., averaged $40 per Sunday in offerings. This year the average was $212 per Sunday the first quarter and $228 the second quarter.

Some years ago a man seventy-six years old was given some literature on tithing. Although his income was old-age pension, he began tithing his meager income. A year later he testified that his tithing had been a great blessing.

More recently a lady residing in an Old Folks' Home tithes her $55 monthly pension even though her board and room cost $47.

In one of our Florida churches, all new members agree to tithe. Some young women give as much as a third of their income. A Catholic athletic coach attended this church. He asked the privilege of tithing to benefit the Brethren church. He said that it did not make sense, but his nine tenths was going further than all his income did before he tithed.

In one of our newer churches in Indiana, composed of young families, all are tithers.

Some years ago the parents of four children tithed when their tenth was $1 per week. When their income greatly increased, they tithed it as before and also gave their entire bonus to the church. This giving averaged from $125 to $175 monthly.

A young wife had trouble convincing her husband they could spare the tithe during a period of low income. When times got better he concluded the tithe was too much to give the church. So his wife found it necessary to persuade him to stick by his covenant. He found new joy in giving. Now they do not stop with the tithe, but give their church a minimum of $50 per week.

In one family—faithful tithers for many years—both husband and wife are employed. The wife's entire income now is given to the church.

A painter began tithing a couple of years ago. He freely testified that he received great satisfaction from giving the tenth to the church.

A Nebraska painting contractor made tithing part of his reconsecration covenant. He went further in that he tithed his gross income without first deducting cost of paint or employees' wages. He reports a wonderfully continuous experience of blessing and says business has improved greatly.

Recently six men were appointed as a planning committee to lead in the financial canvass of an Iowa congregation. Five of them are fathers of growing families. The six couples started the canvass by pledging an average of $10 per week for the 104-week period.

All the above are current or recent happenings in congregations of the Church of the Brethren.—from the Church Visitor, News Bulletin, Omaha Church of the Brethren.

Honoring Graduates

THE annual dinner for graduates in the Ashland Community purposes to express appreciation to the young people for their years of successful study and seeks to encourage them to continue in educational pursuits, especially in schools with Christian ideals. It is sponsored jointly each year by the school officials and the Ashland Ministerial Association.

In large city high schools, young graduates need more recognition and encouragement than is possible when there are several hundred graduates. There is also a more intimate touch and a church-centered fellowship when a group of a like Christian mind come together for an evening of rejoicing and a consideration of the values of a good education.

The program consists of the fellowship during a meal. In our church, part of the food is carried in with dessert, coffee and other items paid for by the church. A few of our city churches have a dinner at a public dining room. The graduates and their parents are guests of each host church. We use different classes to sponsor the occasion from year to year. A toastmaster presides. Musical features, toasts and a major speech usually make up the rest of the program. While some of the features are purely entertaining, a more serious note is sounded as we think of the future of the youth.

Not only high school graduates are present, but nurses about to finish their courses of study, college graduates and all other graduates, if available. The tradition obviously has its values as it has been practiced here for a number of years.—Bernard N. King, pastor, Church of the Brethren.

Maryland Farm Boy Teaches Agriculture in Nigeria

Ralph A. Felton

This young student has just planted a mango tree, the fruit of which will vary his diet

BOB McKAY grew up on a 134-acre dairy farm near Thurmont, Md. His interest in vocational agriculture which he got at the Thurmont high school turned him permanently toward farming. After four years on his father's farm during the depression of the 30's, he took four years in agriculture at the University of Maryland.

While at the university, the pastor of a small near-by church challenged him with the need in the underdeveloped countries of the world for agricultural missionaries —and turned him toward three more years of study in Bethany Biblical Seminary. The service implications of the Christian gospel and the encouragement of his new wife, Charlotte, a home economics major, sent him to the General Brotherhood Board in Elgin, Ill. He was soon on his way to Nigeria in West Africa.

His new field. Nigeria, is a British colony about the size of Oklahoma and Texas combined. Only about seven per cent of it is under cultivation during any one year because the people do not know how to care for the soil. Over three fourths of the twenty-four million people are engaged in agriculture. They must farm if they eat. One person out of four owns a cow or a sheep and one in a hundred has a pig. There is only one mile of road to every twelve square miles, and only one out of every twenty-five miles of road is hard surfaced. There is only one mile of railroad to an area the size of a Maryland county. In 1952 Bob and Charlotte McKay began to change and improve conditions in this great needy country.

They were assigned to teach vocational agriculture at the Waka Teacher Training Center, to flavor with agriculture as much as possible the training of the teachers who go out to work in the rural schools.

Each student is assigned a small plot to cultivate on the school farm where he works ten hours a week under Bob's supervision. Likewise each student has his own irrigated vegetable garden where he is taught to grow the type of food he should eat, such as carrots, tomatoes and collards.

Bob has introduced better grades of poultry, goats, peanuts and cotton. And he is using tall pigeon peas for legumes for putting the needed nitrogen back into the soil.

He also teaches carpentry and other useful crafts for building houses and those things which bring civilization to a needy country like Nigeria. The diet is being enriched with fruit from guava, mango and citrus trees. The wives of these students are taught the meaning of a balanced diet along with child care and all phases of homemaking.

The focal point of all instruction here is the Christian gospel. It is this dynamic faith that sends such well-trained workers as Bob and Charlotte McKay to Nigeria. It is also this same practical religion that causes the Brethren back here in America to give liberally of their funds to support such agricultural missionary work.

Agricultural Missions, Inc. with headquarters at 156 Fifth Avenue, New York, constantly emphasizes the fact that agriculture is the basic vocation for three fourths of the world, as it is here in Nigeria. A better life for millions of people awaits basic improvements in agriculture.

Agricultural missionaries like Bob and Charlotte McKay are helping people to a better level of life and are providing the moral and spiritual climate in which the more abundant life can be lived.

IN MEMORIAM

Rebecca Catherine Wampler

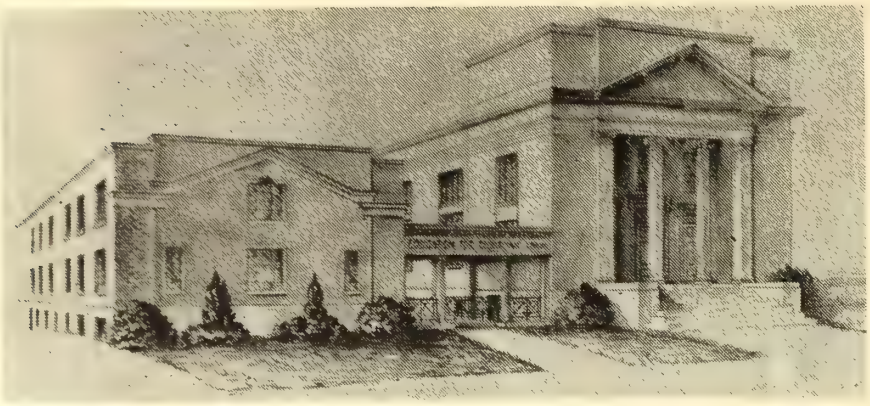
REBECCA C. WAMPLER, wife of Dr. Fred J. Wampler, died June 7, 1955, in the Granville County hospital, Oxford, N. C., of a heart ailment. Dr. and Mrs. Wampler are well known to our church constituency and to Christian groups at large, at home and abroad.

Rebecca Skeggs was born Oct. 13, 1882, at Greencastle, Pa., but came to Virginia at an early age. She united with the First Church of the Brethren, Roanoke, at the age of eleven and began teaching a Sunday-school class at the age of sixteen. At sixteen she graduated from the National Business College, Roanoke, and taught there for some years. In June of 1910 she graduated from the English Normal course at Bridgewater College. Sept. 3, 1911, she was married to Frederick J. Wampler, who was at that time in a medical school in Chicago. A few months later she took some training in a school of nursing in Battle Creek, Mich., in order to be of more help to her husband in his proposed work on a mission field.

Together they served on the China mission field from 1913 to 1926. Dr. Wampler and Dr. O. G. Brubaker together started the medical work in our China field. Rebecca served as secretary to her husband, kept the hospital accounts, and served as station and mission treasurer at different times.

In November 1924 their only child was born, Frederick Francis, at Ping Ting, Shansi.

After returning to America from China in 1926 she with her husband had wide experiences in the field of public health in Virginia, Maryland, South America and North Carolina. Their five years in South America was under the Institute of Inter-American Affairs for the State Department.



Surviving are her husband, a son, two grandsons, three sisters and a host of friends whom she has won by her Christian character. Life was not always easy in some of the more remote places where she lived; languages and customs had to be learned; there were separations from family and friends for years at a time. But through it all her concern was for the needy of the world.

After a short memorial service at Oxford, N. C., the body was taken to Harrisonburg, Va., and funeral services were conducted at the Greenmount church near Harrisonburg by Bro. M. R. Wolfe of Bridgewater and assisted by the pastor of Greenmount, Bro. M. J. Craun.—Elizabeth B. Wampler, Bridgewater, Va.

Recommitment Can Mean Rebirth

Story of Central Church, Roanoke, Virginia

THIRTY years ago the Central church was dedicated and became the second Church of the Brethren in the city of Roanoke, Va. In October 1922 the present lot was purchased and plans were made and adopted for building. On May 4, 1923, a building committee was appointed and a new congregation was formed in January 1924. The building contract was let in April of that year but because of limited finances the Sunday-school addition was deferred with expectations that it could be built within a few years. The church was completed and dedicated on May 3, 1925.

During the next few years the going was difficult; there was not only a mortgage placed on the church property but a number of members personally endorsed notes and placed mortgages on their homes to keep their church going. However, with the persistent and continual loyalty of Central's membership the debt was paid off after about twenty-five years.

We now have an educational building to house the Bible school. Needs have been so great and space so inadequate through the years that many alterations and adjustments were made. In spite of this our church school was handicapped. Hopes and dreams continued but it was a case of necessity before we got our Sunday-school addition.

For the last two years definite plans have been taking shape in obtaining additional property, talking up and praying for our new building. A year ago, on March 21, 1954, under the leadership of the Wells Organizations a building canvass for $100,000 was launched. The plan was to raise the amount in 150 week pledges, a three-year period. The victory dinner was set for April 30 and when the day came we celebrated our canvass victory of $103,000 pledged.

The contract was let for our educational building in June of 1954 and the ground-breaking ceremony was held on Sunday afternoon, June 13, 1954. On March 1, 1955, it was completed and on Sunday, March 6, was used. Happy adults who had waited thirty years for this occasion and excited children rejoiced together. With a record-breaking attendance they moved from subbasement classrooms, hallways, the balcony, the church auditorium and every formerly available corner into their new classrooms with new equipment and adequate space. The church sanctuary, fellowship hall and kitchen were also remodeled and renovated.

We are very happy and grateful for the completion of this project and feel that our Lord and Father God has been with us each step of the way. The dedication was May 1, 1955, Central's thirtieth anniversary. Bro. Paul M. Robinson, president of Bethany Biblical Seminary, was the guest speaker.

Reviews of Recent Books

Books are reviewed here as a service to the church. A review does not necessarily constitute an unqualified recommendation. Purchase can be made through the Brethren Publishing House, Elgin, Illinois. Titles recommended for church libraries are marked with an asterisk (*).—Editor.

Worship Ways for Camp. Clarice M. Bowman. Association Press, 1955. 182 pages. $3.00.

This book is especially recommended to all camp leaders and persons who enjoy the out-of-doors. The approach to worship fits the camping spirit and springs from the heart as well as the mind. Miss Bowman knows camping and she knows how juniors, junior highs and young people worship together. This is the book you have been looking for to help you prepare for an adventure in the spiritual values of camping. After reading the book you will feel more like leading youth into spiritual adventures, too. —Ed Crill.

This Is Norman Brokenshire. Norman Brokenshire. David McKay, Inc., 1954. 307 pages. $3.50.

With these words the author has opened many a radio broadcast. But this time these words reveal the tremendous struggles of one who worked hard to succeed and did, only to find he had sold his life to the drink habit. It is an unvarnished self-portrait of a man who has seen the world from on top and has come back from the depths of despair and alcoholism.

This is also the story of the growth of radio and the personalities behind it. But apart from the interesting parts related to radio, it is searing in its honesty of portrayal of one who reached the heights thrice, only to hit the bottom each time, ultimately to find final mastery over his weaknesses and himself.—James Renz.

Studying Your Community. Roland L. Warren. Russell Sage Foundation, 1955. 385 pages. $3.00.

This book is an excellent guide for finding out just what your community is, what it does, what it is neglecting to do and what its facilities and assets are for meeting new needs or solving new problems. You will discover here how to go about the task: what to study, how to organize the study and what facts, figures and documents to consult. The book covers all areas of community life: geography, economic life, political life, community planning, housing, education, recreation, religious, social welfare, health, mass media, minority groups, voluntary associations and community dynamics. This book could be used as a resource aid to the study course, The Church and the Community.—Ralph E. Smeltzer.

for you, Miss. Carol Ferntheil. Standard Publishing Foundation, 1955. 116 pages. $2.00.

This is a book for early and middle teen-age girls. It is popularly written with youth appeal. There are many subjects and chapters two and three pages long for short interval reading. The main areas covered are popularity, the home and family, school reports, getting a job, church leadership and church responsibility.

This is a book that many parents would wish their teen-age daughter to read—an excellent gift for some occasion. —Ed Crill.

Burger, William A., died at the home of his daughter near Ankneytown, Ohio, June 16, 1955, at the age of eighty-two years. He was a member of the Owl Creek church, Ohio. Surviving are two daughters, two sons, nine grandchildren and sixteen great-grand-children. Funeral services were at the Bollinger funeral home, Fredericktown, Ohio, by Elder G. S. Strausbaugh. Interment was in the North Liberty cemetery.—Mrs. G. S. Strausbaugh, Columbiana, Ohio.

Burgess, Albert, well-known educator, minister and farmer, died May 29, 1955, at his home near Mt. Crawford, Va., at the age of fifty-six years. He was a long-time member of the church and was an ordained minister. Surviving are his wife, Refa Miller Burgess, two daughters, one foster son, three grandchildren and one sister. Funeral services were conducted in the Mill Creek church by Pastor Cecil Showalter. Interment was in the near-by cemetery.—Mrs. Eva W. Mundy, Port Republic, Va.

Cramer, Mary A., widow of Joseph Cramer, was born Aug. 16, 1868, and died Feb. 2, 1955, at the home of her son in Hummelstown, Pa. She had been a member of the Spring Creek church, Pa., for a number of years. She is survived by one son, one daughter, nine grandchildren and eight great-grandchildren. Funeral services were held in the Trefsz funeral home at Hummelstown by her pastor, the undersigned, assisted by Rev. Earl R. Thomas, pastor of the Methodist church, Hummelstown. Interment was in the Spring Creek cemetery at Hershey.—J. Herbert Miller, Hershey, Pa.

Crawford, Sarah A., wife of Clarence E. Crawford, was born in Alleghany County, Va., May 31, 1892, and died May 7, 1955. She was a member of the Arbor Hill church, Va.—Mrs. Bobby L. Cale, Staunton, Va.

Fifer, Charles F., son of George W. and Margaret Cupp Fifer, was born April 25, 1870, in Rockingham County, Va., and died April 19, 1955, at the home of his son in Wyoming, Del. On Jan. 26, 1896, he was united in marriage to Mary M. Showalter. In 1909 they moved to Maryland, where they helped in the establishment of the Green Hill church. Later they moved to Wyoming, Del., where they became members of the Bethany church. Surviving are four sons, two daughters, twenty-two grandchildren, four great-grandchildren and one brother. Services were conducted in the Mill Creek church, Va., by Olen Landes, assisted by Cecil O. Showalter. Interment was in the adjoining cemetery. —Mrs. J. Galen Wampler, Linville, Va.

Forney, J. Clyde, son of Benjamin and Margaret Ann Forney, was born Oct. 29, 1891, at Abilene, Kansas, and died May 19, 1955, at Zimmerman, Ohio. When he was about twelve years old, he united with the church. When about eighteen years of age, he was called to the ministry at the Navarre church, Kansas. His marriage to Ruth Frantz Brubaker occurred at McPherson, Kansas, June 8, 1920. He received his B. A. degree from McPherson College in 1919; B.D. degree from Yale Divinity school in 1923; and was the recipient of the honorary D. D. degree from McPherson College in 1947. As a pastor he served the Lanark church, Ill., 1923-1925; the South Bend church, Ind., 1925-1934; the Elgin church, Ill., 1934-1942; the Central church, Roanoke, Va., 1942-1949; and the Beaver Creek church, Zimmerman, Ohio, from 1949 until his death. For thirty years he worked in young people's summer camps and conferences. He was a valuable member of the Commission of Fifteen. He gave significant leadership in district and regional work and was chairman of the district board of administration of Southern Ohio at the time of his death. Surviving are his wife, two sons, one daughter and five grandchildren. The service was held in the Beaver Creek church by the undersigned, assisted by Raymond R. Peters and Omer B. Maphis.—Earl M. Bowman, Dayton, Ohio.

Fryer, Howard H., was born Dec. 10, 1881, and died May 31, 1955, in Ocean City, N. J. A long-time resident and member of the Elizabethtown church, he in recent years divided his time between Ocean City and St. Petersburg, Fla. Funeral services were conducted in the Coble funeral home, Middletown, Pa., by R. W. Schlosser and the undersigned. Interment was in the Bainbridge cemetery, Pa.—Nevin H. Zuck, Elizabethtown, Pa.

Church News

Northern California

Laton—Since our last report three members have been received into the church by baptism and one by letter. President Harold Fasnacht and Dean Baum, both of La Verne College, held a week-end series of meetings on family life and the church's relationship to the Christian college. Harrison Frantz was with us one Sunday in behalf of Bethany Hospital. One week-end we were host church to the circuit young people's rally. Dwight Hanawalt of La Verne College was resource leader and delivered the Sunday morning address. We were also host church for a circuit women's work and children's workers' conference with Mrs. Paul Halladay and Hazel Kennedy as leaders. Our pastor attended regional conference at Wenatchee, Wash. Our Sunday evening services have been devoted to doctrinal study led by our pastor, Wilbur Liskey. Dedication services were held for children and their parents on May 8. Our building project, including the addition of four classrooms, construction of a new baptistry and remodeling of part of the sanctuary, has been completed. Dedication services were held on May 22 with I. V. Funderburgh as guest speaker. Our choir under the direction of Gerry Pence presented a morning worship service on May 29.—Lois E. Brandt, Laton, Calif.

Modesto—Our pastor attended an invitational seminar in April in Columbus, Ohio, under the direction of Roy Burkhart. Our church has extended an invitation to the Negro brethren of the Second Baptist church of Modesto to utilize our church facilities for any of their meetings during the time they will be needing a building and we extended an invitation to them to meet with us during the time of our regular services and to share in the planning and carrying out of these public services. Our choir has given concerts in the Riverbank Methodist church and in the Methodist church in Escalon. Our pastor, Leland Nelson, has been elected vice-president of the Modesto Council of Churches and commissioner of legislation and public morals. Our pastor and his wife and Merlin Shook attended Annual Conference. Our summer pastor will be Tom Davis of Bethany Seminary. A Brethren Service and Church World Service center has been located in Modesto under the direction of Joe Dell.—Bertha Baley, Modesto, Calif.

Sacramento Suburban — Bro. David Studebaker of San Francisco held a week of pre-Easter services, climaxing with an Easter morning service. In the evening of the same day our love feast service was held and three were baptized into our church. On Sunday, April 17, Bro. John Hunter and his family were with us for the morning service. The Hunters began their pastoral duties in our church the first of July. Our congregation enjoyed interesting talks and pictures about the Africa mission field by Sister Sara Shisler and Brother and Sister Clarence Heckman. Bro. Yoder from the Mennonite mission in Sacramento gave a talk on the Jewish problems locally and in other parts of the world. The La Verne College chapel choir gave a concert in the Sacramento Evangelical United Brethren church one evening. Three babies were dedicated at our Mother's Day service. Our church is sponsoring the boys' softball team in the local church league.—Ella Journey, Sacramento, Calif.

Waterford — During the past several months our men's work group has followed through on some suggestions from the children's department. The men have redecorated walls, refinished equipment and built some new furniture. Our school of missions, under the leadership of Mrs. Clara Johnson, closed with a family night program at which an Indian meal was served. Our women have been making layettes, comforters and bandages and collecting material for relief. The women also had an open meeting with a guest speaker who presented the UN program. Our men planned and prepared a banquet for the mothers and daughters. Our pastor held pre-Easter services with Mrs. Jane Lindenborg, as harpist. Three were baptized on Easter evening before our love feast. We co-operated in the community service on Good Friday and the Easter sunrise service. We also co-operated with the Community Baptist church in daily vacation Bible school. Henry B. Hall, executive secretary of the Narcotics Educational League, spoke at our church recently. Six babies were dedicated and two persons were received into our church on Mother's Day. As a direct result of our first every-member canvass, our giving was increased by about twenty-five per cent. At the last council it was voted to start a building fund for a new parsonage. Our pastor, Bro. Claude F. Dadisman, was delegate to Annual Conference. —Mrs. Sarah D. Sutphin, Waterford, Calif.

Southern California and Arizona

Covina—Guest speaker for a morning worship service was Robert Netzley who had been doing mission work in Mexico. In the evening after our family fellowship Esther Wolff showed pictures of her work as a volunteer in Europe. At a homebuilders meeting Mrs. Alida Harper of La Verne was guest speaker. At a Sunday morning service the La Verne chapel choir sang during the worship service. Mrs. Erma Layman was delegate to Conference at Grand Rapids. At a monthly fellowship, Dick and Delores Hepner, who recently returned from Australia, showed pictures of their trip. On Palm Sunday fourteen were baptized and two were received by letter. Our choir gave the program, The Seven Last Words of Christ. At the mother and daughter banquet, Mrs. Delores Hepner spoke on the highlights of her recent trip.—Mrs. Tempie Funk, Covina, Calif.

San Fernando Valley—An exchange student was guest speaker at one of the men's work meetings. The La Verne chapel choir presented a program for us. The Heckmans, who are from our mission in Africa, gave a view of the work that is being done there. Our women's work group sponsored a family night supper. During March our evangelistic training visitation program was held. On membership Sunday twelve members were brought into our church fellowship. Bob Richards gave a lecture and showed pictures of his trip to the Orient. We co-operated in the Pacoima, Panarama Ministerial Union Easter sunrise service at the cross on Rodger Jessup Hill.—Marie J. Brubaker, Van Nuys, Calif.

Washington

Seattle, Olympic View Community—At Easter time twenty-six were received into our church by baptism and twenty-two by letter. Our new educational building is just about completed. Much of the work on the building was donated labor. A treasure breakfast was held in the church fellowship with the proceeds for the building fund. This was a display of antiques, heirlooms, handwork and hobbies. The continual growth of our church is built on the co-operation of each group in the church. This year we for the Minister

GREAT PREACHING TODAY

Edited by Alton M. Motter

A collection of 25 sermons delivered at the Chicago Sunday Evening Club. Included in the collection is a sermon by Dr. Paul M. Robinson, President of Bethany Biblical Seminary. They speak from every major denomination, from every corner of the nation, and from many viewpoints of religious concerns. Laubach, Fosdick, Kennedy, Trueblood, Weatherhead, Shoemaker and many others are represented in this volume. A picture of each speaker is carried on the jacket. 256 pages. Cloth. $3.00

THE PREACHER AND HIS AUDIENCE

Webb B. Garrison

Many valuable books are available on preaching. This one directs more attention on the total preacher-to-congregation communication. Special attention is given to the role of the listener. Tested methods on gaining and holding attention of the listener are given. This is a book of principles and methods that you will find most helpful. Bibliography is complete. 288 pages. Cloth. $3.00

PREACHING

why preach what to preach how to preach

For the student and active minister, here is guidance and inspiration from a master preacher. A book for close study, for reference, for enrichment and renewal. To help you week after week—year after year—prepare vigorous sermons without "going stale." Indexed. 224 pages. Cloth. $2.75

THE BOOK OF REVELATION SPEAKS TO US

Herbert H. Wernecke

"One of the neglected areas of Brethren preaching and teaching is the apocalyptic literature, particularly as represented by the Book of Revelation. Dr. Wernecke's book is one of the most useful treatments of this dramatic material it has been my pleasure to review."—Chalmer E. Faw. 176 pages. Cloth. $3.00

COMMUNICATING THE GOSPEL

Halford E. Luccock

"Only once in a dozen years there comes a book so true, so stimulating to the imagination, so superbly done that it becomes a classic. This book will certainly be a candidate for that classification." Luccock deals with the vital issue of getting the Gospel across into the minds and wills of men. Written in the best tradition of the distinguished Lyman Beecher lectures. 184 pages. $2.50

Jones. We joined with the other churches of our community in pre-Easter services. Several of our youth and our pastor attended the sunrise service and breakfast on Easter morning. In April the McPherson trio brought us a service in song; they also sang at the high school one morning. Our mother and daughter tea was held on May 7. On Mother's Day consecration services were held for four babies. A father and son banquet was held in June.—Mrs. James Rhinehart, Brooklyn, Iowa.

Cedar Rapids—The sectional CBYF rally was held in our church. Miss Anna Warstler, missionary on furlough from India, was in our church. She gave an informal talk and displayed articles from India. Unto These My Brethren and Dedicated Men are films which we have recently used. Several of our young people attended the youth conference at McPherson. The McPherson College a cappella choir presented an evening of music in our church, followed by an hour of fellowship. The play, The Light in the Window, was given on the evening of Easter. The women's work group has been collecting grease and clothing for relief. Mrs. Richard Haglund was speaker for our mother and daughter banquet. Three persons have been received into our fellowship since our last writing. Our vacation Bible school was held June 21—July 1. Through the efforts of our laymen, our church has completed a spiritual fund-raising campaign in which commitments made by the congregation nearly doubled the giving to the church over that of past years. In preparation for the canvass, John Eller of the York Center church met with us for two sessions and Harl Russell spent an evening with us. Delegates to Annual Conference were Pastor Burriss and Mrs. Cecil Sisco.—Mrs. Violet M. Snyder, Cedar Rapids, Iowa.

Iowa River—At the close of our school of missions, a fellowship supper was followed by a film on India. The World Day of Prayer was observed at the Green Mountain church with the chapel and our churches participating. Four young people from our church attended the youth conference at McPherson College. We had a mother and daughter banquet. The father and son banquet was held with Rev. Davies of Marshalltown, Iowa, as guest speaker. Miss Anna Warstler, missionary to India, was with us one Tuesday evening. Following a fellowship supper, she showed slides of her work in India. The cantata, The Crucifixion, was presented at the morning service on Palm Sunday. We observed our love feast on April 7, with our pastor, Dale Kyser, officiating. On Good Friday evening the McPherson College a cappella choir presented a program in our church. On April 17 a dedication service was held for the new piano in the church auditorium which was purchased by the ladies' aid. Dedication services for our new parsonage were held Sunday afternoon, May 1, at the church with Bro. Clarence Sink, pastor of the South Waterloo church, as guest speaker. Following the service, open house was held at the parsonage. A dedication service was held for three babies at the Sunday morning worship service on Mother's Day. Our vacation Bible school was held for two weeks under the direction of our pastor. A boy's softball team is being sponsored by the men's work group.—Mrs. Fern Miller, Marshalltown, Iowa.

Rosepine Union—Our church met in quarterly council with Bro. L. L. McWhorter in charge. Our love feast was held on the evening of April 16. Brother and Sister George Hallet were elected delegates to district meeting. The men put in a cement porch at the parsonage. As a result of meetings conducted by Bro. Edward Murray, two were received into our fellowship. Bro. Murray will be with us for a ten-day evangelistic preaching mission in September. Two persons have been baptized and two received by letter into our church.—Viola McWhorter, Rosepine, La.

Northern Illinois and Wisconsin

Freeport—Bro. Earl Kurtz, manager of the Brethren Publishing House, was guest at the younger married people's gathering one Sunday evening. At another time, Bro. Marvin Sherman shared his experience as a teacher in the project at Castañer, Puerto Rico. Robert Reiff, a layman from Milledgeville, brought the message at another time. Elder Ralph Fry was in charge of the installing of Brother and Sister Ralph Hauger in the office of deacon. One evening Bro. Harold Garner spoke to our youth group. Our women were guests at a luncheon one afternoon at the Negro St. Paul Baptist church. At a later date, the young people of the same church entertained our youth for an afternoon. We had a school of evangelism for four nights. Our youth graded and reseeded the church lawn as one of their projects. Hazel Messer was with us one Sunday and spoke concerning the work in India. Baby consecration was held on Easter. Bro. Ockerman was guest leader for our children's workers' conference.—Mrs. Alpha Wilson, Freeport, Ill.

Southern Illinois

Oak Grove—We held a school of missions on Sunday evenings with Juanita Whisler as leader. Bro. A. B. Pierson of Bethany Seminary conducted our pre-Easter services. Elder M. A. Whisler officiated at our communion service. At our council meeting on May 1 Bro. M. A. Whisler was re-elected elder. Bro. Whisler represented our church at Annual Conference. Jesse Hardman and Juanita Whisler are our district conference delegates.—Jeannette Kenyon, Lowpoint, Ill.

Northeastern Ohio

Akron, Eastwood—Nine have been welcomed into our fellowship by baptism, two by former baptism and one by rededication. The women and girls fellowship sponsored a banquet at which the father and sons did the serving. The ladies' aid made a donation to our organ fund. Brother and Sister R. H. Miller of North Manchester, Ind., were with us for two Sunday services. Bro. Miller showed slides of their trip to the Holy Land. We joined with the neighboring Church of Christ in a vacation Bible school. We have installed a drinking fountain in the church basement and purchased a duplicator-multilift machine. Our Sunday-school picnic was held at Camp Zion. Sister Mantie Swisher and Bro. A. H. Miller served as delegates to Annual Conference. Sisters Rita McLeland and June Smith were elected delegates to district conference. Elder and Mrs. C. H. Petry have accepted a pastorate at Mondovi, Wis.—Mrs. P. J. Remsburg, Akron, Ohio.

Southern Pennsylvania

York, Second—A deputation team from Elizabethtown College had charge of a Sunday morning service. We observed the fiftieth anniversary of our church building with Bro. H. A. Merkey bringing the morning and evening messages. We had directories printed for the members of our church. In observance of Youth Week, the young people had charge of the opening devotions during the church services on Feb. 6. Bro. Robert Byerly held a peace institute on two Sunday evenings. Our church held a service at the Brethren Home at New Oxford. On missionary Sunday, Bro. Chester Royer, secretary of the district mission board, brought the morning message. Bro. Elmer Hoover of Elizabethtown conducted a Bible institute. Sister Sara Shisler, missionary to Africa, spoke at a Wednesday evening service. The junior high group had charge of the opening devotions on district junior high Sunday. We again belong to the 100% Messenger Club. A room in our church was set aside for a nursery and was recently furnished by a committee from the women's work council. A program of music was given on March 20 by the Chiques male chorus. Family night was held on March 26, when the film, In His Name, was used. Bro. Wayne Nicarry of Chambersburg conducted a one-week pre-Easter service. Bro. Nicarry also brought the message on Easter morning. In the evening a musical program was presented. The young people purchased a motion picture projector with the various classes and organizations contributing to the fund. An adult choir was recently organized. Bro. John F. Sprenkel and his wife are presenting a pipe organ to the church which will be installed during the early part of next year. Mrs. Mary Sprenkel is making a gift of new hymnals to the church. Fifteen men from our congregation attended the district men's rally at Gettysburg.—Mrs. Walter Bachman, Jr., York, Pa.

Florida and Georgia

Okeechobee—Installation and ordination services were conducted by Elders Robert Goshorn and Perry Sanger for our pastor, James McAvoy, and his wife. Recent guest speakers were Cyrus Kiracofe, who showed slides of his work in China and among the migrant camps in New Mexico and Florida; John Anderson, prison missionary who gave some of his experiences in his work in prison camps; Goldie Swartz, retired missionary from India, who talked and showed slides. Preceding this last program Sister Swartz cooked and served an Indian supper for the entire congregation. Six persons were baptized following the Easter services. The young people's work is moving forward under the direction of the pastor and his wife. The young people recently had a camping trip to Ocala National Park. One Sunday night the Sebring young people's group was entertained by our group. At another time the BVS group from the migrant camp at Belle Glade were our guests. Six babies were dedicated on Mother's Day. Our pastor was elected delegate to Annual Conference. Our women's work group is having cookbooks made, the recipes contributed by members and friends.—Mrs. Victor Domer, Okeechobee, Fla.

Gospel MESSENGER

GOD has been so generous in entrusting to us his gifts that it is only natural that we should give, on regular occasions, some accounting of our stewardship. One means of recognizing our responsibility toward God for the use of his gifts is to co-operate with an every-member canvass in the local church. No conscientious steward will object to reporting on his handling of what is entrusted to him. Neither should a sincere Christian ever object to indicating by some statement of intent what he hopes to do by way of supporting the work of the church. A good steward is faithful in making and keeping promises, especially when he gives back to God a portion of what he has already received from God.

The Gospel Messenger welcomes letters commenting on editorials, articles and news. Letters should be brief and brotherly.

Opportunity

As two thirds of the people of the world are hungry and as the government is releasing some surplus food, I think it should be in the Messenger where it can be noticed easily that one package of surplus food can be sent for one dollar through CARE, Inc., 20 Broad St., New York 5, N. Y. I have been doing it for some time, one a week, and it has proved to be a great blessing. This is a wonderful opportunity. We as Brethren should take advantage of it.—A Reader.

Learn to Sing More

May we sing more! We are to make a joyful noise unto the Lord. In Rev. 15:3 we read, "And they sing the song of Moses, the servant of God and the Lamb." We are to sing with the spirit and the understanding. Martin Luther and Isaac Watts gave us songs of praise. "Let those refuse to sing, who never knew our God, but servants of the heavenly King, may speak their joys abroad." "Take my voice and let me sing, only always to my King," is a commitment for Christians. We think of David singing while tending his flock, Mary's magnificent song of praise, the angels who sang when Jesus was born. Paul and Silas sang in jail. Children sing with happy voices. Mothers soothe the babes with loving songs.—Anna Lester, Greenville, Ohio.

Faith to Dare

In his "Thinking Aloud" column Ed Crill said, "BVS can make a difference." Ed emphasized what 2,500 youth a year giving themselves to BVS would do for our church. I would like to dream of the impact for peace of such a BVS program in a world divided, suspicious and very near the abyss of war.

Our President said, "We live in a time when great things must be dared in faith." But our government shackled with pressure groups, politics and diplomatic obligations to other lands, seems unable to dare even small things in faith.

Then who will dare great things in faith? How about the church? Will it do something significant or will it "go its worn accustomed way while the kingdom of God remains a paper thing"?

How about the youth of the church we love? Could they rise up in dynamic action to perform great things through faith? Or are they already bound by the status quo?

I will get to the point. We have a terrific BVS program. Results have been far out of proportion to numbers or dollars. But what if 600 (just one fourth of those 2,500) were on the ball enough to go into BVS each year? What if 300 of those 600 were of such caliber that they could be sent overseas as "peace missionaries," with determined efforts being made for them to get into the hot spots of the world to testify for redemptive love and build for peace? A dozen youth a year have done so much in Europe. Who could measure what 300 envoys for peace could do?

What if our members cared enough to raise the pile of money this would take? Does the world situation warrant some small sacrifice by our members, such as giving a car or some other object of value to be sold for cash for the cause? Or will we be caught napping by another carnage and wake up to realize that we are again "too little and too late?" That we gave a trickle for peace when a river would have been significant?

What if we Brethren started such a fire that other churches would take notice and begin to do likewise? If we really got such an idea rolling, might it not snowball and change the future history of the world? Let's get it rolling!—Lloyd Haag, Denton, Md.

More Radical Hope

The article in the June 25 Messenger, "You and the United Nations," was interestingly presented, but unfortunately Bro. Eby is either unaware of or chooses to ignore the primary basis of the Christian's view of history, which is that history has a beginning, a middle and an end; that is, a fall, an incarnation and a consummation.

From the very first sentence onwards Bro. Eby's philosophy proceeds from purely secular assumptions, from the same ignorance of God's purposes and the same naive faith in man's own abilities that was Adam's undoing. And it ends in the same hopes for a universal state that has been the continual inspiration for the world's Alexanders, Caesars, Genghis Khans and Napoleons.

Truly, the Christian's hope is more radical than this, expecting to alter men and human society at the very deepest roots of their individual and collective existence—Fred W. Smith, West Alexandria, Ohio.

The deepest motive for giving is to express our gratitude to God for the gift of Jesus Christ

The Need of the Giver to Give

T. K. Thompson

THE deepest motive for giving is to express our gratitude to God for the gift of Jesus Christ. For the Christian, Jesus Christ is the center of history. He is our example in the daily conduct of our lives; he is our hope for eternal life. He is the meaning of God in human experience. We give our time and money because we want every boy and girl, every man and woman to have the joy we have had in knowing, loving and serving Jesus Christ.

Even though our commitment has always been inadequate and partial, nevertheless, in our better moments at least, we wish to be partners with God in sharing the glorious good news of Jesus Christ to all the world.

I would like to give a major consideration to a second motive in giving, which is confessedly more selfish and yet not unworthy in our Christian living. This second motive is: giving as a means of growth in the Christian life. The Apostle Paul quotes from our Lord, "It is more blessed to give than to receive." This quotation does not appear in the gospels, and all of us are deeply indebted to the great apostle for his communication of one of Jesus' teachings. This scripture seems to suggest that it is not improper to seek a blessing, even in our giving. A very profound theological controversy has continued through most of Christian history on this point. There are those who say that it is necessary for the Christian to get rid of every selfish desire and that growth in grace and growth in Christian living is a matter of a progressive overcoming of every selfish impulse.

On the other hand there are those like Reinhold Niebuhr and others who maintain with St. Augustine that every human decision has an element of selfishness in it, even the act of generous charity to a beggar. Even a gift of a great sum of money to a church or philanthropic institution has an element of selfishness in it.

As far as I am concerned, it seems to me that in this human

Abstract of an address given at a men's work postbreakfast conference at the Grand Rapids Conference by the executive director of the Joint Department of Stewardship and Benevolence, National Council of Churches life of ours we shall never get over the element of desire. The question is not whether we will desire this or that good, but what will be the good that we will be striving after. I will agree with Niebuhr that there is indeed an element of selfishness in this striving, even in our striving after God. Even in this matter of motivation for giving, there is always an element of selfishness. Even in our giving we seek a blessing.

Out of this background, let us proceed to say that, first, life is actually enriched by giving. In this physical life, in which we find ourselves, parents are made richer and fuller personalities because they give themselves to their children, and a mother's willingness to give her life to her child makes her a richer person.

More than a hundred years ago, Horace Bushnell wrote an epoch-making book, titled The Vicarious Sacrifice. In this book, Bushnell showed that, at its heart, Christianity had the great fact that by Christ's death the Christian is made alive; in every giving, as in every parting, there is a little symbol of death. Yet it is precisely this pouring out of life on others that strengthens and ennobles Christian living.

Giving is more blessed than receiving, because giving is Godlike. For most of us I suppose our favorite scripture verse is John 3:16, "God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on him should not perish but have everlasting life." Note the close relation between loving and giving. It is the nature of God to pour out his love as a grace-gift, completely apart from any question of reciprocity. It is the nature of God to give.

Now to be sure, most of us have little about us that is Godlike. Nevertheless, in moments of high inspiration when we allow God's spirit to dwell in our lives, it is possible for us to manifest something of the grace of God and to become genuine channels for the gift of God's love. This is the great and profound meaning of the 13th chapter of First Corinthians. "Weak and unworthy as we are and prone to selfishness in all of our decisions, nevertheless, we can each become a channel of God's love."

As we think of our leadership responsibility in both giving and guiding and leading others to give, our deepest motive for giving is our gratitude to God for the gift of Jesus Christ. The second motive, however, is closely related. As we open our lives to the indwelling of God's spirit, we grow in the grace of giving and indeed we grow in likeness to God.

Rules for the Christian Life

Billy Graham

WHETHER you are playing a game, driving a car or baking a cake, there are certain rules which must be followed if you are to succeed. The Bible teaches that the Christian life is one of constant growth. It is God's purpose that you grow into full stature and become mature in Christ. In order to grow properly, certain rules must be observed for good spiritual health.

Read your Bible daily. Your spiritual life needs food. What kind of food? Spiritual food. In the Bible, the Word of God. The Bible reveals Christ, who is the bread of life for your hungry soul, and the Water of life for your thirsty heart. Read the Bible; study it; meditate on it; memorize it. A great percentage of the difficulties you will experience as a Christian can be traced to a lack of Bible study and reading.

Learn the secret of prayer. You have a Heavenly Father. He hears and answers prayer. Jesus said: "Ask anything in my name [and] I will do it" (John 14:14). You cannot afford to be too busy to pray. A prayerless Christian is a powerless Christian. Prayer cheers the heart and clears the brain.

Rely constantly on the Holy Spirit. Remember that Christ dwells in you through the Holy Spirit. Do not ask him to help you as you would a servant. Ask him to come in and do it all. Ask him to take over your life. Let go all those inner complexes and tensions. Rely completely on him.

Attend church regularly. John Wesley once said, "The Bible knows nothing of solitary religion." Christianity is a religion of fellowship. Following Christ means love, righteousness, service and these can only be achieved through social relations. These social relationships are to be found in the church. Nothing can take the place of church attendance.

Be a witnessing Christian. If you are faithfully practicing the four preceding rules this one will take care of itself, just as it naturally follows that if a cup is being constantly filled it is bound to overflow. You are to take your stand and let all those round about you know that you are a Christian. You are to bear witness for Christ.

These rules and suggestions may seem simple. Keep them—they work! I have seen them tested in the lives of thousands. I have tested them in my own life. Properly and faithfully kept, they will give you peace of soul, happiness, peace of mind and pleasure. You will have learned the secret of living life with satisfaction.

Not Only at the Summit

WHEN President Eisenhower reported to the nation concerning the Geneva conference —the meeting of leaders from four nations "at the summit"—he pointed to several reasons why this one week in July may represent a turning away from war and may offer some promise for peace.

Actually the conference did little to solve the practical, persistent conflicts that still exist between East and West. But by establishing a friendly atmosphere in which negotiation is possible, by allowing each of the four powers to demonstrate its peaceful intentions, by demonstrating that problems can be approached "without propaganda and threats," the conference may have set the stage for definite progress in relieving international tensions and in working toward disarmament and enduring peace.

We are grateful for the initiative taken by President Eisenhower in helping to set the mood and tone of the Geneva conference. The real test of the new policy will become evident in October when the foreign ministers try to find specific answers to the question of German reunification and the related problem of European security. But we need not wait so long to take advantage of the new spirit of co-operation between East and West.

A friendly and free discussion "at the summit" —important and necessary as it may be—must be followed by a growing interchange of news and visitors. The iron curtains of censorship and secrecy, the restrictions on travel and cultural exchange— these barriers to understanding must be lifted by all the governments which were present at Geneva.

We have lived too long in ignorance of the aims and hopes of persons behind the iron and bamboo curtains. They know even less of our aspirations for peace. Perhaps it is too much to hope that propaganda will give way to careful news reporting, but certainly the time is here for enlarging our understanding of other peoples, ceasing to regard them fearfully as potential enemies but learning to accept them as friends.

At this point the church has a special obligation. Our Annual Conference recognized the need for a "continuing, friendly cultural exchange." In our resolutions we urged authorities in the church, the nation and the United Nations to "give leadership to an expanded exchange program which will make possible contacts with the Chinese, the Russians, and all other peoples for the purpose of mutual acquaintance and sharing."

Now that President Eisenhower has set the example by fraternizing with leaders of the Soviet Union we hope that it will not be long until ordinary Christians here may learn to know ordinary Christians in Russia. Perhaps we can soon invite Russian exchange students to live in our homes and our young people can participate in Christian work camps behind the iron curtain. —K.M.

No Longer Strangers

ANOTHER evidence that this summer may mark the beginning of a new "era of good feelings" is the remarkable increase in the visits of churchmen and church delegations between East and West.

In July eight Soviet church leaders visited England and Scotland. They told newsmen they were authorized to invite a group of British church leaders to visit the Soviet Union. They heard the general secretary of the British and Foreign Bible Society express the hope that a Russian Bible Society would be formed.

The Russian Baptist leader, Jacob Zhidkov, who attended the Baptist World Congress in London, said that Baptist churches in Russia baptize from 10,000 to 12,000 persons each year. He insisted that all churches had full freedom for preaching the gospel. Six American Quakers who made a 10,000-mile tour of Russia visited Baptist churches and Jewish synagogues there. They said, "The hope of Christianity in Russia lies with the Baptists."

It is not surprising that the National Council of Churches is considering sending a delegation of churchmen to Russia, that the Rabbinical Council wants to send a delegation of rabbis or that Evangelist Billy Graham is expected to accept an invitation to preach in Soviet cities. Many of these representatives will go with the attitude of Dr. Joseph Jackson, a speaker at our Annual Conference, who will be in Russia this month. He said his trip had no political implications; his one purpose is to preach Jesus Christ.

These summer visits back and forth across the iron curtain can become the instruments of deepening and strengthening the bonds of Christian fellowship. They can witness to the fact that followers of our Lord need be no longer "strangers and sojourners" but "fellow citizens with the saints and members of the household of God." —K.M.

Each Child

Mary E. Spessard

J. Henry Long

EACH child has a right to friendship. The child's very first friendships are a little one-sided, since early in life he is much more capable of receiving love than sharing it. Each bit of loving affection expressed in daily care by the family and in the tender caresses of the family is as a drop of water which causes ever widening circles of friendship, sharing and outgoing love.

Certainly every child has a right to a warm and consistent love from both parents—the kind of love that causes parents to say, "We'd rather be parents than anything else on earth." This statement of sincere love for family came from a mother and father in an interview with a New York University student. The home established by these parents was one of 260 families which were studied, because the children in them seemed to be well-adjusted. The interviewers asked the question, "How did your youngsters arrive at the happy state of good adjustment?" And the students received some definite clues as they talked with parents.

One mother spoke of her small daughter as a person to be enjoyed in her own right—not a charge to be tended. In these homes of well-adjusted children the parents accentuated the positive—positive methods of planning and working together. Each child had a measure of responsibility geared to his age, his ability and his interests; and in most cases the children were consulted and their opinions respected. One mother said of her daughter, "She has ideas about how to run her life; and I find when I listen to her, she listens to me."

One thread that seemed to draw all the clues together was expressed by a parent like this, "The most important thing of all is loving your children and letting them know it, thinking of them as people and treating them so, appreciating what they do, trusting them, and telling them so—and above all, letting them know they are wanted." In these homes the university students found real friendship and love; and out of this love came guidance and training and a firm, yet understanding discipline—a discipline that helped the child develop self-discipline.

Speaking of discipline, I am reminded of the story about the little boy who had eaten eight pieces of cake at one sitting. But he still said, "Mother, may I have another piece?" "No, no, you have already eaten eight pieces." So he begged and begged, "Please, Mother, can't I have just one more?" After considerable discussion of the matter she finally gave in. The little boy's response was, "Mother, you sure don't have any self-restraint, do you?" Children respect firmness —consistent firmness—on the part of adults. When a child has both love and respect for his parents, the bond of friendship will be lasting.

Each child has a right to friendships beyond the family circle. Children have a right to friendships with people of all ages. I think of seven-year-old Karin, who had a warm spot in her heart for silver-haired people because her neighbor, eighty-year-old Bro. John was one of her best friends. She was delighted each time he invited her into his workshop to look at the violins he had made. Karin knew that Bro. John was not only her friend, but a friend to all he met. A child must have contact with characters that can be respected at all times.

Address given at the children's workers luncheon at Grand Rapids by the director of children's work, Church of the Brethren

Has a Right

. to friendship . to freedom . to faith

While friendships with adults are important to a child, it is particularly important that the child form friendships with children near his own age. Since the child has many areas in which to explore, he likes to be accompanied by a fellow-explorer—not someone who has been over the area and knows all the ropes. It seems logical that out of this need for companionship would come friendships.

These friendships are so important to the growing child that the thinking of the peer group is ofttimes more important to the child than the thinking of his elders. Out of this grows such a common statement as, "Well, Johnny and Bob get to stay up and watch TV. Why can't I?" For today's child there is a strong desire early in life to have the same privileges that the other children do. This desire reaches its climax in the misunderstood teen-ager. Parents and other adults who recognize the importance of the peer group can better cope with heart-breaking situations that can arise within the family over this matter.

Every child has the right to friendships with those of his age

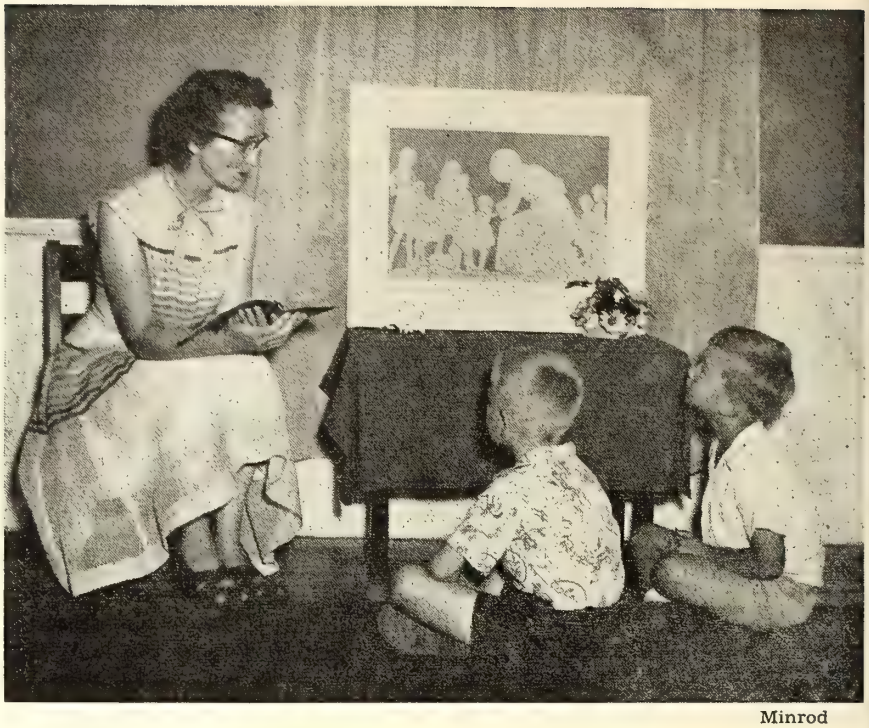
Minrod

Each child has a right to friendships with people of other races, creeds, and nationalities. Frequently we are reminded that we live in a shrinking world. Distance is no longer a barrier between peoples of the world. Some of the most important attitudes to be developed in a child's mind are the attitudes toward other persons, particularly as members of the various groups which make up our society.

In America there is unlimited opportunity for a child to develop intergroup attitudes. For here the bulk of our population belong to three major faiths, and within the Protestant faith there are 264 denominations. So the child has a tremendous opportunity to form friendships with people of other faiths. And this being the melting pot of the world, we have within our boundaries people from literally every corner of the world, with their different cultural backgrounds, different languages and different colorings. With many foreign people coming here to study and many to make their homes here, we have real opportunity to make great strides in human relations.

Minrod

Every child has the right to be free to do alone or with others some creative work he chooses



Each child has a right to freedom. He has a right to be an individual, to be free to grow up in his own way—the right to be different. A child has the right to live in a child's world—to pretend—to play. Somehow if we can read the language of play, we can read the hearts and minds of children. The child needs to be free to choose that which he wants to do and free to do it by himself if he so desires.

Each child has a right to be free to think creatively and to explore—sometimes alone and sometimes with others. The child needs time to think, time to read good books, to see beauty in art, to hear good music, time to absorb. What we help our children love and desire is more important than what we help them learn. With the many activities which take the time of children today, I wonder just how free they are to think creatively. The average child today has three or four times as many adults in his life as did his grandfather. A recent informal count revealed that the average child of a middle-class suburb comes in contact with more than two dozen adults, each of whom is applying appealing pressures on the child in an attempt to develop leadership qualities within the child, but with little mention of the importance of being a good follower. The average "good" sixth-grader in this suburb has no free time, save that salvaged by forgetting, by truancy, naughtiness or direct disdain. Many children have strong feelings of guilt because they are in so many activities that they cannot do full justice to any of them.

Also each child has a right to be free from fear—fear of physical discomfort or injury, fear of being left alone, fear of being rejected. A child has a right to those things which prevent such fears, a right to protection, security, acceptance and love. The child who can grow up reasonably free from fears has a fair chance to develop a personality characterized by calmness, poise and dignity. How does he attain such? Mainly by observing adults.

Who is the most calm individual you have ever known? There is one person who comes to my mind, one of my college instructors. I used to sit in his class in college and wonder how anyone could be so calm and collected all the time. One time a group of us were riding with him to a church where he was to speak.

Minrod

Each child must be guided frequently into a realistic awareness of God if he is to develop his own faith in God to which he has a right

It was nearing the hour for his speech. We were about two miles from the church, and he had car trouble. The first thing that went through my mind was that if ever I were to see him anything other than calm this would be the time! He got out of the car, lifted the hood, did some investigating and said very calmly that he believed we needed to get some help. We arrived at the church, he gave his speech and through it all he remained calm. I do not remember a thing he said in that speech, but I shall never forget the lesson on living which he taught by his actions.

If somehow we can help each child to catch that sense of calmness and to know its Source, then fear will have no place. Where there is faith there is no fear.

Each child has a right to a sound faith to give stability to his friendships and his freedom, faith in himself, faith in others, and faith in God. Virgil said, "For they conquer who believe they can." A belief in this philosophy needs to get its roots early in life. Certainly a child's successes need to far outnumber his failures, for as we know successes help a child to have faith in himself!

A mother decided that her four-year-old Anna should learn to embroider. With diligent teaching, the lesson preceeded. Anna tried hard, but according to her mother's standards, the work was not satisfactory. The mother ripped out the stitches Anna had made. Little Anna realized failure and unhappiness.

Faith in himself will help a child to have faith in others and vice versa. As a child learns the human values of honesty, truthfulness, kindness, generosity, justice and courage, his friends, especially his parents and teachers, need constantly to give guidance by setting the example. He has a right to a firm faith in his friends.

Each child has a right to a faith in God. Someone has said, "Religion is caught not taught." Would it not be more accurately stated, "Religion is caught and taught"? Have you ever seen

Other seed fell on rocky ground, where it had not much soil, and immediately it sprang up, since it had no depth of soil; and when the sun rose it was scorched, and since it had no root it withered away. Other seed fell among thorns and the thorns grew up and choked it, and it yielded no grain. And other seeds fell into good soil and brought forth grain, growing up and increasing and yielding thirtyfold and sixtyfold and a hundredfold" (Mark 4: 3-8)

Commitment to the Kingdom

THE Christian is a committed person. The same can be said of other religious persons. The difference lies in that to which a person is committed. The Christian is committed to God and his kingdom, as given in the life and teachings of Jesus Christ. This distinguishes the Christian commitment from all other religious commitments.

It is inherent within the gospel teaching that the kingdom be top on the list of concerns. First, it must be. This "firstness" puts a value upon the way of Christ which cannot easily be set aside, and to set it aside is to mutilate the gospel record and make irrelevant the Christian life.

The value of the kingdom is of supreme importance in the message of Christ. Closely related is the response which the kingdom elicits. Our failure to take Jesus seriously shows up plainly at the very point where we underestimate the kingdom and its worth. Herein we sense the cutting edge of many of the Master's parables. Three of them are before us for personal scrutiny and for our spiritual growth. We know them as the Parable of the Hidden Treasure, the Parable of the Pearl of Great Price and the Parable of the Sower.

Now look at the two parables of the kingdom printed above which unmistakably put a high estimate on the high calling of God.

The Personal Aspect of the Kingdom

In these two extremely brief but pointed parables Jesus stresses the worth of the kingdom to the individual. Other parables imply the corporate aspect of the kingdom but here the treasure is a personal possession. The gospel record never loses sight that the major unit of Christian living is the person. The treasure is a personal possession. The pearl is a personal treasure. Jesus called persons to his work. He never tried to get the service clubs of Nazareth and Jerusalem committed, but he did get some persons to commit themselves. Our Conference theme has the personal touch and it impinges upon everyone of us. The finger of designation points at us as individuals to say, "You—seek first the kingdom." And when we point the finger as teachers and preachers and parents it comes back to us. As persons we are involved in the kingdom.

Professor of Bible, Elizabethtown College, Pennsylvania

The Worth of the Kingdom

The primary purpose of the two parables before us is to depict the surpassing worth of the kingdom of God. The two accounts concur that something comes into the focus of life which is held to be valuable above all other things. Some common teachings of both parables are these: Both men found something they wanted above all else. There is a sense of priority and firstness in their find. Everything was gladly sacrificed to get this value. There was a joy of abandonment in this new commitment.

In the first parable we wonder if the man was a plowman. The text does not say, but we can easily imagine the man plowing with the simple tools of that day in Palestine. He discovers a strange object in the earth as he works. He stoops to examine the container which his plow point has struck. He finds there coins and gems of a great treasure. The man is off to sell all that he has so that he may purchase the field and claim the treasure he has discovered.

Here also is the surprise element which does not appear in the accompanying parable. In the daily routine of work the plowman discovers the treasure and he "in his joy" sets about to claim it. He has a sense of urgency about his discovery.

Some folk come to the kingdom like this. They discover with great joy and surprise the grace and love of God and in the midst of an everyday humdrum experience find a treasure worth all they have.

The second parable tells us of a merchant. He is a trader in pearls, good pearls, possibly a connoisseur of gems. This man may have spent a lifetime in his search for good pearls always adding to his collection the worthy ones but always hoping for a pearl that would excel all others.

This man, in contrast to the plowman, was constantly seeking the desired object. There was no sense of surprise but there was a sense of urgency. There was joy in his eagerness to have the supreme treasure. Some men come to the kingdom like this. After long search and careful scrutiny the grace and love of God is seen as the value above all values. It is then that the lesser things go and the kingdom is put first.

The Response to the Kingdom

The two parables of the treasure and the pearl imply another aspect of spiritual life, in addition to the worth of the kingdom, and that is a response to the estimated worth of the treasure. In both instances, the response was one of great joy and high expectancy. The sense of abandonment permeates the reactions of both the plowman and the merchant. "In his joy" the field worker went and sold all he had to buy the field. The eagerness of the man to lay hold on the great discovery reflects once again the supreme worth of the kingdom.

But let us look at another parable told by Jesus. This is another attempt of the Master to point up the significance of the

MANY MANSIONS

Ruth Griggs

"IN MY FATHER'S HOUSE are many mansions . . . ."
Great, rich houses on golden streets?
I wonder . . .
For Jesus was a simple soul.
Would he and his Father be happy living in luxury?
"Many mansions. . . . ."
Many rooms?
Many stages of spiritual understanding,
Each room larger than the last
Like the chambered nautilus
Until we at last shall know heavenly oneness of spirit with God?
Do not some of the heavenly rooms open to us here and now?
The peace and joy of happy human love in homes;
The joy of living life for worthy causes which outlast life;
The joy of growing in patience, love, peacemaking;
As we grow spiritually do not new rooms keep opening to us?
Are we ever so contented, so happy that we are satisfied to remain in a room we know and love?
Might God ever use trouble or crisis to show us the door to a larger room . . . a dimension of spiritual understanding now unknown to us?
How many rooms lie on beyond?
O God, stir us with divine discontent to keep searching for doors to new rooms which you hold in store for us—now and ever!

kingdom of God and its relationship to mankind. Known as the parable of the sower, many Bible scholars prefer to think the Master's emphasis was upon the soils, and refer to this passage as the Parable of the Soils.

In this parable we find an example of religious allegory but never does the allegory go so far as to depart from the one major teaching—how men (human lives) respond to God's kingdom. How simple is the illustration used. The seed is the word of God. The soils are the lives who hear the word. The sower appears to be God who sent his word into the world. Mankind receives God's word and will in various ways. The parable is explained by the one who told it.

The path with its hardened surfaces proves to be almost a complete rejection of the goodness of God. There is no hearing of the word and therefore no understanding. Here is the foolish man par excellence.

The stony ground was shallow. The seed has little chance. It thrives with a fair show but cannot stand any dry spell, for there is no depth, no resources, no life-giving water which the plant demands.

The thorn patch allows the seed to sprout and shoot up in an initial growth but the briars and weeds thrive abundantly. The soil is depleted of its vitality as the ever-demanding weeds draw upon it. Thus the soil produces only a stunted plant. There is little strength for life with so much attention given to the negative things. The response of the thorn patch is not a full response, the word does not thrive, but dies.

The fourth kind of soil is that which bears a good crop. Here is the response that befits the worth of the word. Here we find the approval of Christ given to a response that is fruitful.

Jesus asked for full allegiance. As in Jesus' day, so in ours, kingdom commitment is the supreme need. Jesus saw clearly that committed lives were necessary if God's way was to be effective. He put the order like this—hear, believe, act. He saw the danger of having words lose their meaning. Even such word as Lord could be used without meaning.

The kingdom of God as Christ proclaimed it is God's eternal sovereignty. The kingdom is only realized in those who knowing God's love, respond with answering love. The kingdom can be seen only where men know God and live by that knowledge.

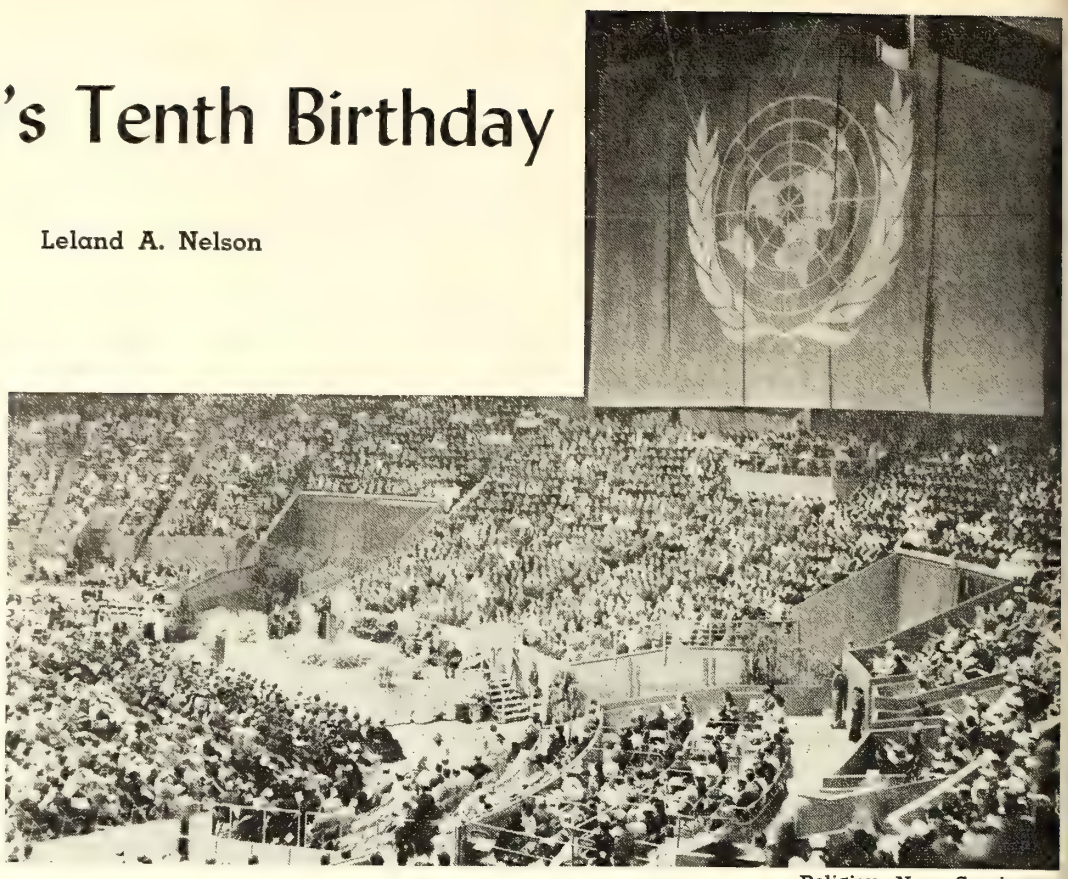
God was Jesus' major subject. In our day when in theological circles much is said of the "ultimate concern" we need only to be reminded, here it is. The whole mission and message of the Messiah was to reveal God. Unless we see Jesus as God's divine self-disclosure we do not see him. Jesus spent his earthly ministry trying to convey this to his disciples. He did not teach the twelve or the seventy very much about "Strategic Public Relations in the Greco-Roman World," nor did he have a course on "Techniques of Propaganda for the Mediterranean Basin." His main subject was "Our Father."

We have a faith that is a record of committed persons. The disciples gave all. They outlived, outloved, outserved and outdied the pagan world. Thus they could be accused of setting the world upside down—or right side up—depending on your point of view.

One need not be a specialist in Biblical interpretation to catch the full impact of the parable of the soils. No better analysis of our predicament has been given. (One can easily identify all the "soils" in an average congregation.) The word is still valid, filled with life, but the response of human life looms extremely important. The receptive and responsive life is the vital factor for kingdom work in our generation. The parables of our study give us two keys to the kingdom. One, see the kingdom's supremely great worth, and, two, lay hold on this kingdom or, rather, let it lay hold on you.

The Christian is a committed person. He is committed to the King of kings and to his kingdom which we must now seek with a new sense of urgency.

"Same God"



Edna Phillips Sutton

AS I walked into a crowded bus depot I glanced quickly around, looking for a vacant seat. There was none. Across the room sat an old woman wearing a long black dress and a heavy black veil draped around her head. She had a brown wrinkled face and it was one of the kindest, loveliest faces I had ever seen. I noticed that she was watching me. Then she moved to one side to make room for me to sit.

I began talking to her but she could not understand. She said something to me but I could not understand. After several useless attempts at conversation we smiled at each other and shook our heads over our failure. Then she said pointing to herself, "Portegee." She pointed to me and then pointed up and said, "Same God." The grand old woman had expressed a profound truth of life. If the masses of people would recognize the fact that regardless of the difference in color or language all mankind is created by the same God and that each person is endowed with a portion of God's divinity and if they then would live by that principle, the difficult problems of the world would be easily solved.

The UN's Tenth Birthday

Cow Palace in San Francisco was transformed into an immense cathedral for a "Festival of Faith" held as part of the week-long celebrations marking the tenth anniversary of the United Nations. More than 15,000 persons jammed the building for the impressive service of prayer for peace

Religious News Service

ONE of the greatest experiences of my life came with attendance at the tenth anniversary meeting of the United Nations in San Francisco, June 20-26, as the official representative of the Brethren Service Commission. My responsibility was to represent the commission at the meeting of nongovernmental organizations affiliated with the UN during the week.

Upon arriving at the San Francisco international airport one became aware that San Francisco was preparing for a very significant occasion. Huge flags and placards advertised the tenth anniversary meetings. An information booth provided twenty-four-hour-a-day service for the assistance of delegates, staff members and those arriving for the occasion.

Throngs jammed the streets around the Opera House, the site of the UN Charter meeting in 1945, and also the site of these tenth anniversary sessions. In front of the Opera House courtyard, we watched a large company of Boy Scouts raise the flags of the sixty member nations, all of whom are participating in this historic meeting. The raising of these flags in unison impressed one as being a symbol of the growing friendship and understanding between the member nations of the UN.

There was something in the air which promoted a unique spirit of friendliness and geniality. Eagerly the expectant crowd watched for the opening of the doors of the Opera House. About two o'clock the doors were opened and the crowds surged into the historic building. Every one of the 3,285 seats were filled, many were standing in the aisles.

We felt almost out of place seated with the staff members and members of the immediate families of the official delegation. We were very near to the speakers' platform, seated directly behind the delegation from the sixty member nations. The lady beside us was a member of the staff of the delegation from Israel. Helpfully, she pointed out the various delegates as they took their places for the opening session.

We were impressed with the friendliness of the official delegates themselves. On the platform from which President Eisenhower soon would speak, were delegates from forty-five of the fifty nations, who were present at the signing of the charter in 1945. The mingling, laughing and talking of these men, who had been together in this place ten years earlier took on the air of a family reunion. Perhaps the one attracting the most attention for those observing was Molotov. He smiled frequently and seemed most cordial as he visited with many of the other delegates, including Dulles, Spaack, Beck, Entezam and others.

Shortly before 3 o'clock, the Secretary General, Dag Ham-

Pastor of the Modesto church, California

marskjold, the president of the tenth anniversary assembly, Eelco N. van Kleffens, and the executive assistant to the Secretary General, Mr. Andrew W. Cordier, entered the hall. At precisely 3 o'clock, the president of the Assembly rapped his gavel to call the meeting to order. The hubbub of the crowd began to diminish and as he rapped his gavel again a hush speedily descended over the Opera House.

After declaring that the tenth anniversary sessions were officially opened he announced that it was to be the honor of the Secretary General and the president of the Assembly to escort the president of the United States to the platform. President Eisenhower was greeted by a standing ovation.

Following his introduction, President Eisenhower delivered a most fitting message for this historic occasion. It was reassuring, challenging and thought-provoking. He secured a tremendous ovation from the assembly, including the smiles and applause of Mr. Molotov, as he "pledged the United States to a policy of peaceful and reasonable negotiations." The mood of his address was one of deep solemnity and at the same time one of exuberant optimism. President Eisenhower put on record his willingness to assume that the Soviet Union's peace gestures reflect a sincere desire for an East-West settlement—indeed, that at last they make such a settlement potentially attainable. The President attributed Soviet peace moves to "heartfelt longings of countless millions for abundance and justice and peace" which, he said, "seem to be commanding, everywhere, a response from their government."

Sketching with a few vivid words the "new kind" of peace the world seeks as not a "mere stilling of the guns" but "a glorious way of life," he said: "These hopes are not new. They are as old as history. But now as we meet on the tenth anniversary in the city where was born the United Nations, we must realize that at last they are steadily and surely attainable. This is new."

President Eisenhower said the basis for success at the summit meeting—the key to "whether or not we shall then reach the initial decisions that will start dismantling the terrible apparatus of fear and mistrust and weapons erected since the end of World War II" was this: "That every individual at that meeting be loyal to the spirit of the United Nations and dedicated to the principles of its Charter." He pledged that the United States would be "thus loyal, thus dedicated."

Traditional Communist ideology clearly is incompatible with the basis for peace as he described it; therefore, only if the Kremlin is prepared now to place the interests of the Soviet nation above those of ideological communism can peace be obtained.

The President said, "A majority of nations, including the United States, hope that every government will abstain from attempting, or aiding others to attempt, the subversion, coercion, infiltration or destruction of other governments in order to gain political or material advantage, or because of differences in philosophies, religions, or ideologies."

Mr. Eisenhower appealed, by inference, to his own country to adopt an open mind and a flexible approach to the new opportunities presented by changes going on inside the Soviet Union. In a passage strongly resembling a speech on June 13 by Democratic leader, Adlai E. Stevenson, the President said, "We shall reject no method, however novel, that holds out any hope, however faint, for a just and lasting peace." Prolonged applause greeted this statement. Mr. Molotov, seated on the platform behind him, joined in.

As the Christian Science Monitor has said, "Americans who had been anxious lest the United States be too inflexible to meet the latest Soviet challenge with imagination and skill were reassured by the President's words. The speech was itself a reflection of new thinking and new acting. If carried forward by his subordinates, it may mark a turning point in the conduct of American foreign policy."

Following appropriate words of welcome from California's

Governor Knight and San Francisco's Mayor Robinson, the Secretary General, Dag Hammarskjold, stated the purpose of these anniversary meetings, "We are not here to debate and vote upon resolutions. In the formal sense there is no agenda for these meetings. But in a deeper sense the prospects for peace and better understanding are our agenda. The representatives of the member nations, in their statements in this Opera House and in their informal discussions, can help to present a world picture with a wider perspective and a longer view than is usually possible when dealing with specific issues at regular meetings of the General Assembly. We have come here to look ahead, beyond tomorrow and the day after tomorrow, to explore together, how, in the years ahead, we may be able to do better than in the years gone by, in the search for a more secure peace and a better life for the peoples."

President van Kleffens expressed appreciation for the cordial welcome and for the warm hospitality of the people of San Francisco and then reminded the representatives present that "the Nations of the World are looking to us, as we are meeting here, for an important contribution towards that improvement of the international atmosphere which they all want, without a single exception. We cannot be faithful to the trust placed in us if we do not earnestly strive to make that contribution. There is no doubt that there are various ways to bring about much desired improvement. The several agencies of the United Nations, specifically established for that purpose, are available at all times. But if this Organization has, under its Charter, an over-all responsibility for the promotions of good and peaceful international relations, it was never meant to have a monopoly." It is certain that meetings such as these, bringing together leading statesmen from member states engaged in a re-assessment of the situation and a frank discussion of ways to improvement, afford a splendid opportunity for shaping the things to come in accordance with those principles and purposes that were agreed upon here ten years ago, and are as valid today as they were then, and always will be.

What provided the marvelous environment in which these meetings began? Certainly there was the influence of the Festival of Faith, which was held in San Francisco's biggest Convention Hall on the preceding afternoon. Some 16,000 persons thronged the Cow Palace to testify to the invincible power of a higher law than the laws of nations. The Secretary of State of the United States, John Foster Dulles, told the vast throng that the past decade has shown that the power of the United Nations is primarily a moral power. The crowd listened as Dulles said, "The successes of the United Nations have been largely due to those throughout the world who believe that there is a God, a divine Creator of us all; that he has prescribed moral principles which undergird this world with an ultimate authority equal to that of physical law; that this moral law is one which every man can know if only he opens his heart to what God has revealed; that these moral principles enjoin not merely love and respect of the Creator, but also love and respect for fellow man, because each individual embodies some element of the divine and that moral principles must govern the conduct of nations."

Moslem, Hindu, Buddhist, Protestant and Hebrew resolutions were presented, all voicing this faith in one heavenly Father and its essential corollary, the brotherhood of man.

A Modern Parable

Roy Johnson

ONE night there was a man who was going to bed. When he had readied himself for bed, he reached for his old alarm clock, wound it and set the alarm for early the next morning. Then with a weary sigh he settled himself into his bed, hoping for a restful night.

But it was not long until he began to notice the endless ticktock of his clock. He thought to himself how monotonous and tedious its beat seemed to be. How tired he was, but the clock ran on and on, mocking his weariness. On and on it went. He could not sleep. Perhaps he could remove the clock to the other room. And this he did. When he had come back he settled down in hope of a sound sleep.

But the walls of his house were not thick and and his ears were keen. Still he heard the "tick-tock" as it continued to torment him. He buried his head in his pillow as it grew louder. It seemed to seep into every crack and crevice to plague him. It was terrible just to lie there thinking of the ticking of a clock, every moment growing more tired and more exasperated. Time labored on. His rage grew and grew until finally he went to the clock and with great anger cast it out of the window. Slamming the window behind it he again lay down.

All was quiet now. He felt the calm veil of sleep begin to settle over his tired body and he began to rest. But in a few moments, faintly, ever so faintly the ticking began again to creep into his ears. He was sure the clock was broken. His imagination was playing tricks. But the sound grew louder and louder. It rang in his ears; it throbbed until his head ached. Again he leaped from his bed with greater anger than before. With careless, reckless rage he dashed from his room and bolted down the steps to the yard below. He found the clock and lifted it to his ear. It was silent. He slammed it to the ground and stamped upon it and ground it to small pieces beneath his heel. In his rage he had destroyed the clock, trying to destroy the boredom of his own soul.

On this same night there was another man going to bed. He also wound his alarm clock and set it for early in the morning. After he had retired he lay in his bed and thought to himself, "How melodious the alarm clock is. Its steady beat will continue through the night while I sleep. When the first rays of a new day begin to wake the world from its slumber it will call me to arise and go forth to see what new tasks the Lord has for me. Then I can go and express the peace and joy that is in my soul."

Like a Living Stone. Ruth Statler. Brethren Publishing House, 1955. 187 pages. $2.50

A book by an able author who has demonstrated her fine ability to write interestingly and helpfully. It is written to portray the life, character and unique service Bro. M. J. Brougher gave to our church. Those who knew him will appreciate this intimate account of his life; those who did not know him at all or well may here have opportunity to learn to know a sincere, devout and consecrated Christian.—Charles Zunkel.

Encounter With Revolution. M. Richard Shaull. Association Press, 1955. 145 pages. $2.50.

"If you Americans continue on the road you are now following, many of my people will turn to communism." That's what people, especially young people, are saying in Latin America, Asia, Africa and in some European Countries. And this sums up what Richard Shaull finds and reports here as the fast spreading climate of political thought throughout the world.

Driving home his points with the relentless force of a trip hammer, Mr. Shaull shows that we Americans are hopelessly unaware of the social revolution that is rocking the world around us. He warns that this revolution—born of political and economic deprivation of the peoples of Asia, Africa and Latin America, and nurtured by international communism—will soon engulf us if we do not wake up and quickly take steps to answer the needs of the world's underprivileged millions.

In the first section of this urgent report to Americans, Mr. Shaull shows what is happening in the world around us, how and why the revolution is spreading. He tells us how communism is preying leech-like on this world ferment, turning it to Russia's own evil goals. He reveals that communism is betraying the revolution, but says that unless we Americans offer a more satisfying solution to the world's ills than that put forth by communism, we will continue to lose friends the world over, and eventually will stand alone.

Mr. Shaull sees the Christian church as having the greatest opportunity to act and act quickly. In a challenging section he calls on Christianity, because of its on-the-spot position throughout the world, because it possesses faith which provides an opportunity to act, as well as a key to understanding and a will for action, to lead in the fight to harness this revolution. He shows the church's responsibility to the Christian community and the world, and suggests how the church and individual Christians can meet this God-given responsibility.

Mr. Shaull notes our government's role. But he believes that the State Department is failing us by concerning itself for the most part with guns rather than a way of life in its program. In this light he calls for basic changes in our foreign policy.

Mr. Shaull's warning and call to American Christians is as ominous as the mushroom cloud of the hydrogen bomb. But Mr. Shaull knows that Christianity offers hope. He helps us to remember that if we use Christian teachings in our relations with the world, we will be truly acting with God and will be offering the only satisfying answers to the millions who stand now between despair and life.—Ralph E. Smeltzer.

Each Child Has a Right

your mannerisms or actions reflected in a child just as plainly as your image in the mirror? Certainly a child's beginning faith in God is a definite reflection of the faith of his parents; however, as the child matures, he must have the opportunity to develop his own faith. To make this possible, each child needs to be guided frequently into a realistic awareness of God. Each child has a right to a knowledge and understanding of what Christian living means. As a child matures, he has a right to a knowledge of the life of Jesus, a right to a faith centered in Jesus Christ. Each child has a right "to grow in wisdom and in stature and in favor with God and man."

A new dormitory for women is now under construction in the west campus area, formerly the apple orchard. This is the first phase of the ten-year development program. The two-hundred foot H-shaped, colonial, three-story red-brick structure will house 130 women and provide dining and kitchen facilities for three hundred students. Other provisions include a suite on the second floor for the head of residence, a suite and office on the main floor for the dean of women, an infirmary and the usual house office, lounge and laundry facilities.

Architectural plans are under way for the addition of a west wing to the Gibbel science building—the second phase of the development program. The first floor will provide two lecture rooms seating 90 and 190 students. The biology department will be housed on the second floor. The present biology room space will be made available to the chemistry department. With the completion of this wing the biology, chemistry and physics departments will each occupy more than double the present floor space.

President A. C. Baugher announces faculty appointments in the departments of English and psychology and education. Dr. James Roy King, formerly a teacher at Bloomfield College, N. Franklin Stump, formerly of Keuka College and more recently in the division of education, Bausch and Lomb.

Ninety-two students were enrolled for the summer session. This number includes eleven who completed a two-week Pennsylvania Dutch Life and Culture Seminar under the guidance of Prof. Ira S. Franck. Seventy-eight were registered for the three-week intersession.

The intensive campaign for $350,000 in capital funds inaugurated a year ago as the initial step in the ten-year development program has reached $305,000 and is continuing. According to K. Ezra Bucher, treasurer and director of the program, $95,000 of the funds raised will be applied to the supplying of movable equipment and to a portion of the dining and kitchen facilities for the women's dormitory under construction.

Enrollment for September shows a ten per cent increase over last year's figure. Applications for the freshman class were closed July 15. Approximately half of the men boarding students and a few women students will be housed in town.

In connection with the annual meeting of the Juniata Valley Alumni Chapter President A. C. Baugher filled the pulpit at Buffalo Valley; K. Ezra Bucher, Bunkertown; and Prof. Albert L. Gray, Free Springs.

The Eastern Region conference will be held on campus Aug. 24-26, followed by the young people's conference Aug. 26-28.

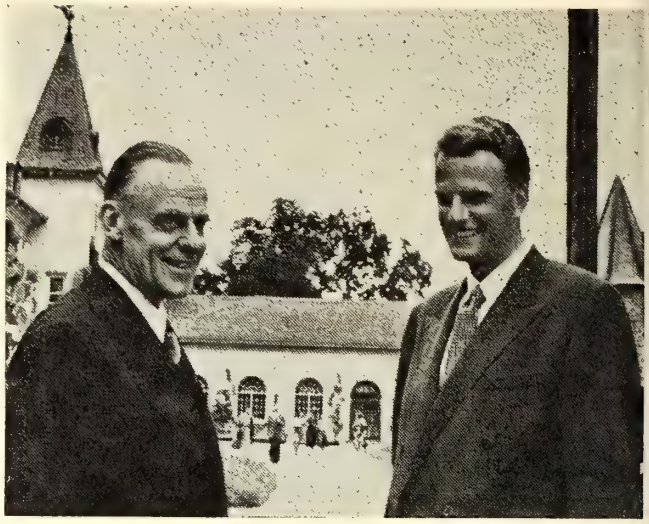
News and Comment From Around the World



Denominations Hold Annual Conferences

The month of June seems to be the most popular time for denominational annual conferences. While Brethren were turning their thoughts toward Grand Rapids, delegates were assembling in convention halls all across United States for similar denominational meetings. This year they came to grips with such questions as the ordination of women as ministers, possibilities of church union with other denominations, plans for better programs of stewardship and evangelism. They adopted resolutions directed at many social and political, as well as moral problems and set new goals for the coming year.

Early in the month the 95th General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the U.S. (Southern) gave attention to some of the causes of tension within its own group and suggested ways of achieving a greater measure of unity. Although Southern Presbyterian decided against further efforts now for merger with the Presbyterian Church in the U.S.A. and the United Presbyterian Church, they gave their approval to continued co-operation with all major denominations and interchurch agencies. Southern Presbyterians, however, are joining with four other Presbyterian groups in the joint publication of a new hymnbook which will be available in October.

Despite the vigorous opposition of a minority group, the Presbyterians in the south upheld their church's year-old stand against racial segregation. The pronouncement urged the abolition of segregation in all churches and church courts of the denomination. The church adopted a record budget of $6,495,000 for 1956. Their membership is now 784,000.

For the first time in its history the Reformed Church in America last year spent more than a million dollars for foreign missionary work. The Synod appointed a special committee to consider the eligibility of women for the offices of elders and deacons in the church. In recent years women have been made full members of the ecclesiastical boards. The Synod expressed its opposition to the proposed new World Calendar, asked for continued support of the United Nations, reaffirmed its traditional position against universal military training and took a stand for voluntary total abstinence as the desired behavior of its members.

The Presbyterian Church in Canada at its 81st General Assembly decided to send a mail ballot of all its presbyteries on the ordination of women as elders and ministers. Not a male voice was raised against the recommendations.

The General Assembly of the United Presbyterian Church voted to work towards union with the Presbyterian Church in the U.S.A. It decided to seek such unity without waiting for the Presbyterian in the U.S. (Southern) to join in a three-body merger. United Presbyterians went on record in favor of an interracial church. The assembly selected Knoxville College, Tenn., the denomination's school for Negro youths, as the site for next year's meeting. The delegates affirmed their opposition to any permanent system of universal military training. Leaders reported membership at 237,000. The General Assembly adopted a mission budget of $1,850,000 for the next year.

The Augustana Lutheran church reported an increase of 17,328 in their baptized membership to make a total of 516,968. The Synod adopted an operating budget of $3,326,000 for 1957. Delegates adopted a resolution discouraging the practice of raising funds by church dinners, rummage sales and other devious methods. The meeting upheld the freedom of Lutheran colleges to discuss crucial questions pertaining to America's welfare. Delegates protested the delays in the operation of the 1953 refugee relief act. On the question of Lutheran unity the church voted to join with United Lutheran Church in America in inviting all other Lutheran bodies to participate in merger discussions looking toward organic union. At a concluding service of this annual synod, sixty-two men from twenty-one states were ordained to the ministry.

The ordination of women as rabbis, a departure from Jewish tradition, was considered at the 66th annual convention of the Central Conference of American Rabbis. The conference is the rabbinical body of Reform Judaism. The conference approved the one-year study of the advisability of ordaining women to the rabbinate. It rejected, however, a proposal that the Hebrew Union College—Jewish Institute of Religion, admit women as rabbinical students. The rabbis hailed a new climate making for peace in our era, praised the government for its willingness to negotiate a cease-fire settlement with the Chinese Reds, criticized the State Department for its seeming indifference to Arab-Israeli tensions, expressed its support of the United Nations and called for unceasing government efforts to press for peacetime uses of atomic energy.

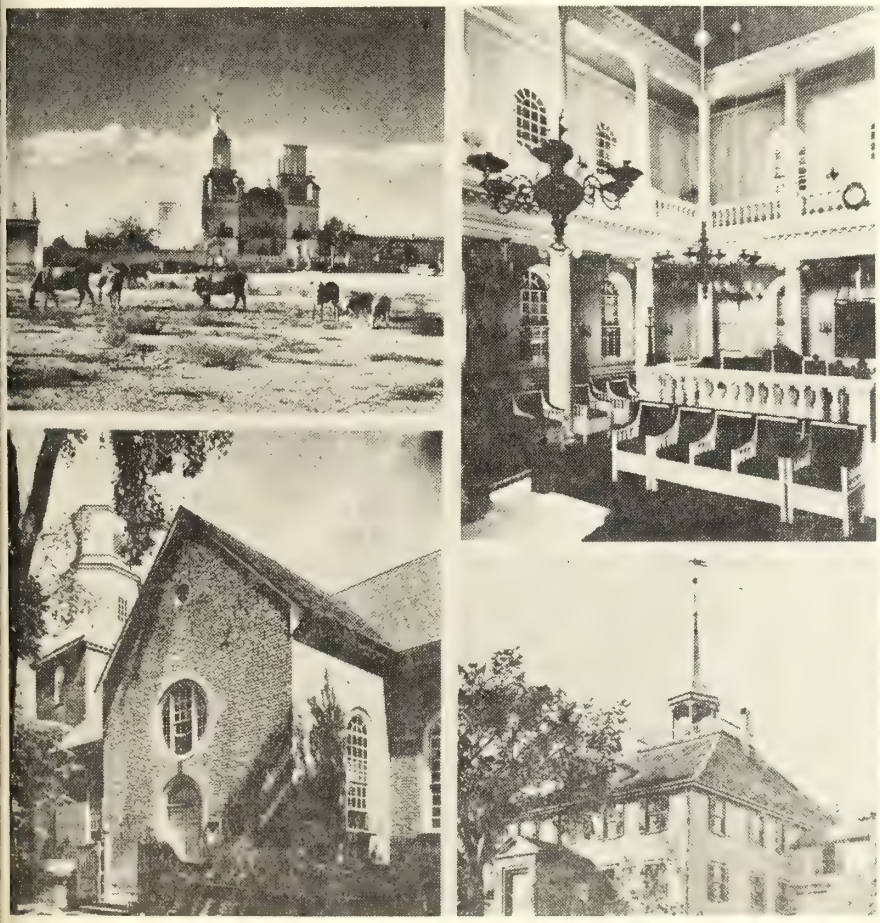
The Synod of the Christian Reformed church, which met in Grand Rapids at the same time as our Brethren Annual Conference, named a committee to study the possibility of closer co-operation and fellowship with the Orthodox Presbyterian church. The two denominations hold similar doctrinal positions. The Orthodox Presbyterian group has about 8,000 members and the Christian Reformed 200,000. The synod postponed any decision on giving women the right to vote at congregational meetings. Delegates named a committee to study the matter further and report at a later synod. Traditionally, only men have had voting rights in the church.

The Church of God in its annual convocation at Anderson, Ind., observed its 75th anniversary which climaxes a five-year midcentury advance program. A world missions budget of $1,200,000 for the coming fiscal year was adopted by the assembly. Funds will be used for foreign and home missions, church extension, evangelism, Christian education, radio, pensions and college and seminary projects of the church.

The 125th General Assembly of the Cumberland Presbyterian church acted to make tithing a part of the denomination's confession of faith. A resolution of this effect will be submitted to the church's fifty-six presbyteries for their approval. The assembly adopted a resolution calling upon Christians to promote equality of all people "in the area of racial and cultural relations." The denomination is largely a Southern body. The assembly also commended the U.S. Supreme Court for its historic decision prohibiting segregation in public schools. The assembly expressed its confidence in the ways of peace and hoped that America could seek external security without bringing on the blight of militarism.

Dr. Arnold T. Olson, president of the Evangelical Free Church of America, reported that the denomination organized sixteen new churches during the past year, bringing its total to 355. The foreign missions board sent out eighteen new missionaries, bringing their total to 130. Foreign mission giving in the denomination totaled $317,000.



A decrease in membership from 35,000 to 33,0000 was noted by the Finnish Lutheran Church of America at its national convention. The church plans to enter discussions with other member bodies of the National Lutheran Council looking toward broader Lutheran union. In other action, the synod recommended a stepped-up stewardship publicity program. The synod's consistory was asked to investigate the feasibility of printing an English-language yearbook. It now has one in Finnish.

The General Conference of the Free Methodist church voted to continue negotiations on merger with the Wesleyan Methodist church. In another action the conference voted to remove restrictions on the number and kind of musical instruments used in church services. No instrumental music of any kind was permitted in the Free Methodist church until 1943, when the General Council authorized piano or organ music but not both. Delegates also approved a program to combat juvenile delinquency. This quadrennial conference hailed the 1954 Supreme Court decision outlawing segregation in the public schools. Free Methodists called for prohibition on the local, state and national level.

Although Free Methodists voted in favor of continuing merger negotiations with the Wesleyan Methodists the latter group voted at its 29th quadrennial conference to discontinue its Commission on Merger. In so doing it turned down the possibility of merger with the Free Methodist Church. The action had the effect of bringing to a close 12 years of study and negotiations between the 36,000-member Wesleyan Methodists and the 52,000-member Free Methodists.

Leaders of the Congregational Christian churches and the Evangelical and Reformed churches have arranged plans for the merger of these two groups on June 25, 1957. The merged body will be called the United Church of Christ. It will have more than 2,000,000 members. A religious service on the night of June 25, 1957, will mark the union. Business sessions of the first General Synod of the United Church then will be held. Action on the merger date was taken after a committee of lawyers reported to the joint meeting held in Columbus that the churches are free to unite on the Basis of Union they adopted in 1948. The executive committees of the two denominations are planning for joint stewardship and

A crowded refugee camp has little room between cots and no place for children to play except on beds

A Helping Hand

Marvin Blickenstaff

Brethren Volunteer Service, Linz, Austria

RECENTLY I spent a day in Upper Austria visiting refugee families who are working for Austrian farmers. With the coming of the Austrian treaty, the refugees really have many worries. The government is pressing these people to make the decision between emigration or German or Austrian citizenship. Those refugees who have recently escaped from Iron Curtain countries have a frightening fear of being sent back to their homeland. One hears often from these people that they would rather "be shot here in Austria than be sent home." We feel a very urgent demand for a resettlement program in behalf of such people.

I visited in several refugee camps with registrants of our office. One of the families visited was that of Dragutin Kenig, who, with his wife, has been rejected for U.S. immigration. This elderly couple will now try to emigrate to Australia, where they have a son. If that cannot be accomplished, they will try to establish themselves here in Austria, but on the Austrian economy it will not be easy.

The Friedrich Schmoll family was really overjoyed when I visited them and was able to tell them that they have a sponsor in America. They have seven children, ranging from two to seventeen years of age, but a nicer group of children I have never seen in such a large family. They are very well behaved and there seems to be a harmonious spirit of love in the three crowded barrack rooms which they must call home. The mother impressed me especially. One can immediately see that she has a glowing Christian faith. Feeding a family of nine is no easy task and the father and older children must work hard, with many overtime hours, to keep the bread box filled and the milk pitcher wet. They certainly are happy to know that someone in America cares for them enough to sponsor the family.

Consular forms, the applications to the American consulate for a visa, have been a most time-consuming job for us recently. These forms cover every aspect of the refugee's life, including his vocational background, family history and personal activities since he was fourteen years old. The forms must be filled out for each family member over fourteen and, with some of our families, it runs into quite a lot of work, since the questionnaire contains sixty-eight questions on eight long pages!

Twenty persons who received help through our office were on the large transport of refugees which left from Bremerhaven, Germany, on July 2. When we see the refugee camps here, the Austrian economic situation and the seemingly limited advancement a person can make we cannot help but feel that this ship means a way to a better life for these twenty persons. Emigration to the United States is a fine chance for a refugee, but one must always realize that it is not easy for them to come into a completely strange country with a new language and different customs. Much responsibility rests on the American people to whom they come. Special and genuine friendliness to a newly arrived refugee will go a long way toward a good start; a patient and ever-present helping hand must be there for him to rely on. The resettlement of these refugees is truly a Christian responsibility.

The Refugee Relief Act is working! The first "refugee" ship carrying several families on Brethren assurances arrived in July. We are now convinced that Washington intends to make the Refugee Resettlement Act work; visa issuances overseas are increasing each week.

An assurance is the one thing that counts. A refugee must have an assurance before he can take the first steps toward securing a visa. Can the congregations of the Church of the Brethren provide more assurances—faster? If we are to secure our proper share of visas for our refugee people, we cannot wait until autumn; we must give the assurances now. Write to the Refugee Resettlement Office, Brethren Service Center, New Windsor, Md.

End of a Dream

NO ONE was more interested in Mr. and Mrs. Berzin's leaving for America than Mrs. Kovar, who, with her family, lived on the other side of the blanket in the refugee camp. Of course, she was glad for the prospect of a new life for the Berzin family in America, but who could blame her if she was thinking of herself too? When the Berzins left, there would be a tiny bit more room for her and her baby and little girl. Nights were not so bad; but the days. . .! Sometimes Mrs. Kovar thought she would scream for lack of room to move about and spread things out. Here there was not the fear she had known in the East Zone. Here it was tension . . . constant tension from overcrowding.

"And when now will your ship leave?" Mrs. Kovar asked politely when the Berzins came back from standing in line to get papers signed.

"Now, this time it seems certain . . . one more week." Mrs. Berzin said it emphatically as she bustled to sort things in suitcases she had packed and repacked so many times.

That night when the children were asleep, Mrs. Kovar lay on her cot, thinking of the corner space she would have. There would be an extra nail to hang things on. She would pile her boxes under the window and make a table of them. On top, she would put her several tattered magazines, and sometimes in the afternoon when the baby was asleep, she would lie on her cot and read. Luxury!

Suddenly Mrs. Kovar heard feet coming down the passage between the blanket-partitioned rooms. "This will be yours, your space," the camp director's voice was saying outside the Berzins' room.

Mrs. Kovar held her breath and listened. A man and woman were sighing their thanks and a small boy was coughing.

"I know it is hard to wait for a place," the caretaker continued. "So many others like you are coming in from the East Zone. Come back in a week, and I think the place will be vacant, and we'll see if we can squeeze in another cot."

Three instead of two! And the boy coughing so! Tears rolled down Mrs. Kovar's cheeks and wet the bundle of clothing she was using for a pillow.

This family like many others in Austria is permitted to rent four square yards of floor space in which to establish a home. The two children must study and play on bed in which they sleep

The Risk

HOW can we sponsor a refugee family when our church needs so many things?" one of the committee members asked. "When are we going to repair the organ?"

Everyone laughed at this mention of the organ that had been repaired so many times and now needed to be rebuilt.

The next objection was that a DP was a risk. Even with the family's dossier in hand, the congregation was bound to be taking a chance. The pastor and one or two others felt that there were a good many risks in the adventure of being a Christian; they urged that the church take the risk in order to bring one family out of its misery in a refugee camp in Germany and give them an opportunity in America.

There were many more meetings. Housing and a job in a tool factory were assured. At last, by unanimous vote, the committee decided to sponsor an Estonian family.

Not long after the family arrived the organ had one of its breakdowns. Two pipes continued to sound and nothing short of turning off the whole organ would stop them. The gentle Estonian mechanic modestly offered to do what he could. He not only repaired the two pipes but rebuilt the entire organ! He had been an organ builder in Estonia.

Make Use of Drama in the Local Church

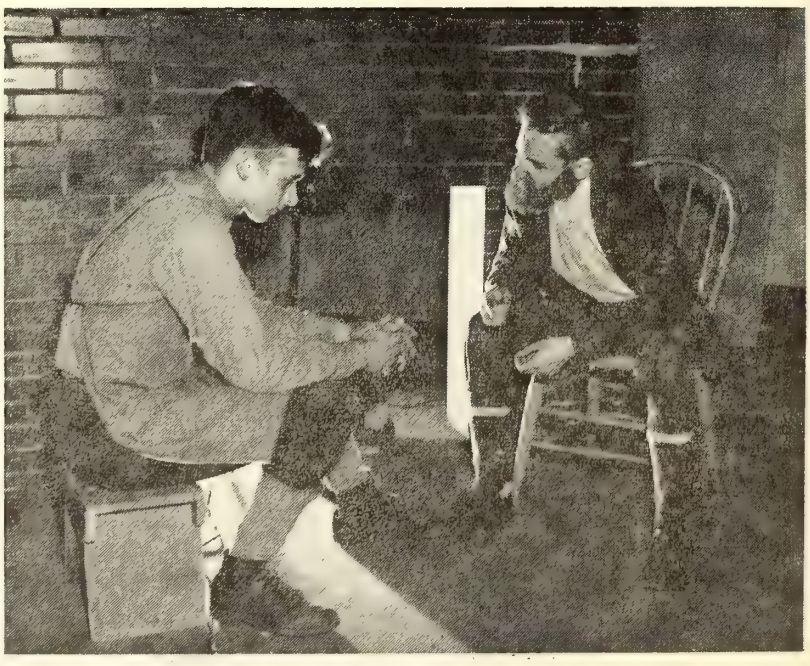
Harold W. Miller
Williamstown, Ohio

DRAMA is so much a part of life. It is seen all through the experiences of life. A child cries without tears and children love to put on big people's clothes and shoes and go clumping about acting like Aunt Jane or Uncle Ned. There is drama in the way love is expressed, drama in the smile and tender touch of the hand of a couple long past their fiftieth anniversary—as they sit quietly in their chairs in the afterglow of a happy life. In religion, drama is also universal—from the weird cries of the witch doctor with his dramatic driving out of the evil spirits all the way to our own most holy moments around the Lord's table or by the baptismal pool. To dramatize a thought or truth is to greatly increase the force of its meaning. The end result of drama is more than its effect upon the observers; something also happens to the ones performing. In some mystic fashion we become a part of the message we try to portray. The attempt here is to share some experiences of a pastor with drama in the church, in camp and in children's groups. For the sake of clarity, I offer eight points of consideration.

I. What is the motive?

Before any selection of material is made, the committee, pastor or person in charge should have a satisfactory answer to this question. It is my firm conviction that we have no right to take people's time in church work only for the sake of entertainment. There is so much in the field of drama that can be done in a very delightful way and yet be a very powerful teaching medium. Drama need not be confined to special occasions, such as Easter or Christmas. A well-chosen drama will teach something to both hearers and performers at any given time.

II. What age groups shall we use?



Some churches seem to think that the giving of a play is restricted to the young people. Probably they are most often used. But did you ever try intermediates, juniors or even younger children? Just let them get the feel of it and their enthusiasm knows no bounds. In one instance, a missionary play was given very effectively by a group of women —mothers and grandmothers. Age does not have much to do with it as long as people are willing to discipline themselves to the point of acting the message. Once you capture their imagination, the most important first step has been taken.

III. Selection of materials

The selection of materials is one of the most difficult problems. From many sources, books full of plays listed on many subjects, one must find a play that is worth giving. Many are so shallow, just entertainment and poor enough entertainment at that. Recently we sat as a committee for several hours scanning the synopses of many plays. After narrowing our choices down to one we sent for it only to discover that what had sounded like a good play contained a silly three-way fight between three women and a person who was a patron of horse-racing. It was supposed to be a Christmas play. It was completely inappropriate. Profit by several mistakes we made: one, that we did not have at hand a copy of the play to read before ordering it and, another, that we were so pressed for time we thought we could not wait for samples. The Christian Education Commission has a list of good plays to suggest and the Loan Library can supply you with some to read before you place your order. But please note this, the process of selection may take longer than the actual preparation for production. The obvious moral is: start early—don't expect to find a suitable play in one week to be given two weeks later.

IV. Selection of characters

This bears closely on the selection of material. We find ourselves passing over a play listed as six men and five women if the best we can do is to scrape up three men. There are usually more willing women than men. I have no magic formula to suggest to make men and boys more willing to serve. Will you quit reading this in disgust if I suggest that the sex of the players is not too important? The young people wanted to put on a Christmas play, but the group was composed mostly of girls. So, we put beards on three of our girls and they acted as men in the play. The end result was that the play which had a very good message was given, it went over very well, and the audience said that they very quickly forgot who was playing the part and were engrossed with the message. Another experience was with a group of younger children. Again there was a scarcity of boys. Girls took the boys' parts and the message was not marred at all. Both of these experiences were with plays using Biblical costuming which I will admit made our solution to the problem easier. But I believe that we have learned an important principle—it isn't so much who does the acting as it is how effectively the message is portrayed.

In the selection of characters, allow for the element of "stretch." With patience, encouragement and prayer, a seemingly unlikely person can suddenly come out of his shell of self and become a real person. I have seen this happen and believe that drama is worth all it takes for this one factor alone. Don't always give the lead parts to those who are the most promising and popular.

If you have in your play a character part that is a bit off the track of Christian ideals, don't give that part to someone who in real life is already on the shaky side. In that case, the comparison between his real self and the acted part becomes too obvious and can do much damage to the person's standing in the eyes of his fellows. If, on the other hand, you give this kind of part to a person of strong, upright character, the element of contrast will only drive deeper in the minds of the audience.

V. Costuming and staging

Fortunate is the church that has a chest or closet filled with costumes of many sorts. This takes work and interest on the part of some person or group. Costumes can be made out of dyed feed sacks, outdated clothing worked over, bathrobes, head scarfs, etc. Beards can be easily made by cutting a piece of crinoline the shape of the bearded portion of the face. To this sew a lot of yarn looped back and forth rather closely together. Clip the yarn and fray out the ends. Small wire will serve as the temples to hold the beard in place. Make them any color you like, big or little. With the coming of aluminum foil, many items of costume have been made much easier.

It seems to me that sometimes we forget that in drama we are not required to disguise the actor. Just dress him or her in a distinctive enough way to enable the imagination of the audience to take its flight quickly from the identity of the real person to the role of the actor. This flight of the imagination is really very easily stimulated. Use very simple stage settings. It is not necessary to haul in a lot of borrowed equipment. Use a chair with a blanket thrown over it for an easy chair, or a bench with a banket over it for a sofa.

Lighting and sound effects can be used with great success. Find someone in your church who is handy with wiring arrangements, tape recorders, etc. Get this person, or persons, to help with the spots and footlights. At one church an employee of the local light plant discovered an old discarded heavy-circuit rheostat which we hooked into the circuit of all the lights in the sanctuary. The lights could then be taken from full bright down to very dim and out. This was a great asset to the production of drama.

A play can be put on, with changing scenes, without the use of curtains. Dim out the lights at the close of an act, using only a dim offstage light to change scenes. Of course, curtains are better where possible.

VI. Directing

Pastor, if necessary, don't hesitate to direct a play. Give it all you've got. You will get very close to your cast in a way not often achieved by other means. But don't always do it; take on someone as an associate director. He or she may be scared stiff, but just assure them you will lead out. Then after several rehearsals when your associate director begins to get the feel of it, let him or her preside over a part of a practice. Sometimes a pastor is suddenly called to some other duty, then let your associate take over that entire rehearsal. Give your associate a lot of encouragement and many detailed responsibilities and before you know it, you will have available in your church a good director of drama. I think the associate director idea is always good as a means of training leadership.

There are four things, among many that might be mentioned, that make a good director:

First, be friendly with your cast; have fun, but let it be known that there is work to be done which is to be for the glory of the Lord and therefore demands our best.

Second, let yourself go in your imagination—visualize the effect upon the audience and build for maximum challenge and inspiration.

Third, become thoroughly acquainted with every speech, gesture, entrance and exit. You need not memorize it, but you must be thoroughly familiar and have the feel of every part of it.

Fourth, plan ahead for enough rehearsals to assure a reasonably acceptable production. Constantly encourage your cast to do their memory work early in the rehearsal schedule. At times we find that we have only a short time to prepare for a production, but do all in your power to avoid such situations.

VII. Writing your own drama

Really, it is not so hard and it is so much fun! A good imagination is the primary tool in this process. Of course, it must be within reason. I like to use pantomime with a reader, good lighting and sound effects, and tableaus (still scenes).

Pick out some theme or issue, determine the climax that you desire, then weave your story step by step toward that end. Picture the common scenes of life that everyone understands. Bring in the hopes, fears, joys, tears of everyday life and your play will strike a responsive chord. I dare you to try it—it really is not as hard as you think.

VIII. Attempting the difficult

That saying, "Fools rush in . . .," has dampened the adventuresome spirit of many good people. A drama interest group in an intermediate boys' camp in one week worked up and produced a drama of the life of Christ in twelve scenes. The drama was written to fit our possibilities. We had many very excellent helpers, and it did take much hard work, but it was done as a high point of the camp. The theme of the camp was "Christ is my Pilot." The boys rose to the occasion as people usually do if appealed to in a proper way. The play was a success, with special thanks to God for a thunderstorm which broke just at the right moment of the crucifixion scene. It was an experience not to be forgotten.

More than seventy Brethren women came to the Vyara Women's Institute in April of this year

SEVENTY MEET AT WOMEN'S INSTITUTE

Sarah Paul, Noted Indian Christian, Main Speaker

"WE WILL serve the Lord," was the timely theme of the Vyara Women's Institute this year. Many of the women of the villages choose to bring all the members of their household to Christ that together they might serve him.

One woman came from a village where she is the only Christian. Through many years of faithful devotion to Christ, she has been instrumental in helping her husband to turn toward the true God. He has not accepted Christ as yet but his mind and heart are open and he listens to the gospel with great interest. One evening before a large audience of village folks he gave this witness: "We believe in my wife's God. Before eating we pray to her God." He is the police chief of the village and can be influential in winning others.

Over seventy women came from sixteen different villages. Some walked eighteen miles through the heat of the day. Some had their small babies to carry. Each one brought bedding and grain for the three-day food supply. The meals were prepared by several who volunteered to serve. All ate together and enjoyed rich fellowship, for many of the women had not seen one another since last year. Talking and laughter lasted into the late hours of the night.

A fine array of speakers gave strong support to the conference theme. Brother Gershombhai of Anklesvar spoke on the Christian home. Brother Maganlabhai spoke on tithing and Sister Lillian Grisso gave instructions for religious teaching in the village. Harlan Brooks showed slides on the Life of Christ one evening.

Miss Sarah Paul of Bombay was the main speaker. She spoke on the power of the Holy Spirit. All went home rejoicing in Christ, whom they understood and knew better than before having had this experience.

Sarah Paul was born in 1898, the youngest child of a family of five living in Surat, India. The parents were Christians. She was hardly a year old when her father died, leaving a young widow to face the strain of bringing up a family, the oldest of whom was only ten. Mr. Paul had been educated at the Irish Presbyterian mission boys' high school. He had worked as a mechanical engineer in the mint in Bombay.

With the death of the bread winner, life became difficult for the family but Mrs. Paul worked very hard, trusting the promises of God that he would neither leave nor forsake them. True to his promises God provided for the needs of the family in a miraculous way. Through the financial help of Christians in Ireland, he opened the way for Sarah Paul's mother to get the necessary training to become a Bible teacher. Mrs. Paul, a devoted Christian woman, often taught Sarah about the promises of the Bible while she cooked.

The great turning point in Sarah's life came one day when she was still rather young. In her own words she says, "I was a girl of twelve years. It was a Sunday in September when my mother, brothers and sisters were all reading the Bible and praying individually to prepare themselves for the holy communion. I was not able to take communion and I was miserable. I went quietly and knelt beside my mother who was praying. Feeling that I was beside her, she prayed aloud. She made the cross of Christ so vivid in her prayers that I could actually see Christ on the cross in great agony and pain and suffering. 'He was wounded for our transgressions. He was bruised for our iniquities, the chastisement of our peace was upon him; and with his stripes we are healed.' I could see in the light of the cross that I was a sinful being. I gave my heart to the Lord and I felt a new power taking hold of me from that moment. I experienced great joy and peace."

Sarah Paul prepared herself for teaching. She became principal of the girls' high school at Ahmedabad; inspectress of girls' schools; superintendent of the government training college for teachers, and finally, deputy director of education for the state of Bombay. Sarah Paul was one of the great educators of India.

She tells of how the desire for deeper knowledge of the Scriptures grew on her during her student days and later when she took her first job in a government high school. "The happy student days were over and my career as a teacher began. While away from home the desire for a deep study of the Bible grew and I started borrowing books from a great scholar of the Bible and later on ordered books from abroad for my spiritual growth. The climax came in a strong inner urge to devote a sufficiently long time each day to the study of the Bible. Heavy as the duties of a government official were, I determined, together with a dear friend of mine, to get up at 3 a.m., and to study the Bible undisturbed from then until 6 a.m. The effort continued for months together and these hours proved to be the times of richest blessing."

She has retired from her responsibility in the education department of the Bombay government. Since her retirement the government has asked her again for her services to which she replied, "I promised my Lord that after retirement I would give full time to prayer and to the work of the church and I cannot take back that promise."

The secret of her life she sums up in these words: "I owe everything to the Bible and to the living Christ seen in the pages of the Bible. I owe my language and expression to the Bible; I owe the force and fire of my language to the Bible; I owe my status and position in life to the Bible and to the living Christ it reveals. The Bible has become a living Book to me ever since I saw my mother reading it devoutly with such zeal. My eyes were opened early in my childhood and I could see the scarlet thread running through the sixty-six precious pearls of the Bible, weaving them all into a complete whole."

She has been to England three different times and has had one visit in the United States. While in the States she made twelve different recordings in the Gujarati language which many are using in village work. I myself find them very useful.

At the present time Sarah Paul is living in Bombay and spending her time in writing a book for children in addition to the many pamphlets for Christians and non-Christians. She accepts every possible opportunity to speak for Christ at institutes and conferences. So it was that we were fortunate enough to have Sarah Paul address us at the Women's Institute at Vyara.

Sister Sarah Paul, outstanding Indian Christian, was the main speaker at the Women's Institute

Out of the Mailbag

"We have just finished three thrilling days of fellowship, study, and blessing in Quito in the yearly Inter-Mission Fellowship Retreat of Ecuador. Over one hundred missionaries attended representing the ten missions working in Ecuador. The emphasis this year was on methods, taking stock of past and present methods in the light of the results they have given and discussion of future direction in each area and type of work. Our group was responsible for leadership on the day when methods in Highland Indian work were considered.

"We were all encouraged and blessed by the warm fellowship and the spirit of unity among the missionaries and missions in Ecuador. At our request, our own mission was accepted into full voting membership this year for the first time. We had felt formerly that because of the necessity of signing a doctrinal statement, we would prefer to be only included in the inspirational retreats. However, our fellowship and the areas of co-operation have so increased in the past few years that we have come to feel that we should support this, the only existing effort toward unifying Protestant work in Ecuador. We were accepted with open arms and without any discussion whatever.

"This brought back memories of the suspicion with which we were looked upon only a few years ago when we came to the country and several groups, in fact all, doubted that we were here to do actual evangelical witnessing. Time, love and the results here in Calderon have changed things and the vote was an admission on the part of all that God has wrought a great work here in our area. After forty years of missions among Highland Indians of Ecuador, there are but two Indian churches and ours is the largest of the two. All recognize the toughness of the undertaking and all of us know that only God could bring it about."

Against the darkness and man's need stands the city church with its glorious hope in Christ

Making the City Church Vital

A Report of a Sectional Conference at Grand Rapids

WE OF the Church of the Brethren are relatively new in the business of making the church effective in the city. Gradually we are learning. In order to keep our mistakes as few as possible, we must share the insights we gain, from whatever source.

The Home Missions — Urban Church sectional conference at Grand Rapids lifted up values and gave help which we may well share as widely as possible. We were fortunate in having as guest leader, Rev. T. K. Thompson of the Joint Department of Stewardship Education of the National Council of Churches. With a background as a pastor of a young, growing mission church in a new area, his insights were particularly helpful. The conference had a panel of the following pastors: Harper S. Will, Gorden H. Shank and Kurtis F. Naylor. Foster B. Statler served as chairman.

The quest leader began by listing, with the help of the group, the characteristics of the city church and then placed over against them the answer of the Christian church. Careful study of these ought to help any of our city churches understand the problems with which they must deal, as well as some of the answers to these. We list them as follows:

Characteristics

1. Money values, problems in secularism, idolatry of things
2. Impersonality
3. Meaninglessness, wistfulness
4. Lack of neighborhood based on common interest
5. Suburbia, with its vast unchurched areas
6. Growth of the city. In 1865 75% of population on the farm; now one in fourteen making his living on the farm
7. Mobility of population, one out of five moving every year
8. Detachment, little sense of belonging
9. Escapism

The Church's Answer

1. Stewardship, the deeper and more basic values of life
2. Fellowship
3. Christian doctrine, doctrines of God, man, sin, Christ, salvation, etc.
4. Variety of interest groups
5. New congregations, ministry also in the inner city
6. Visitation evangelism, personal work to win persons to Christ
7. Inculcation of the deeper values of life, life to become deeper, more meaningful, and settled
8. Emphasis on the family, cultivation of a Couple's Club, etc.
9. Vital living faith, meaning in life

If our city churches will evaluate carefully their goals and programs in the light of these needs of city dwellers, they can begin to develop ministries which will be genuinely satisfying and helpful to those whom they seek to serve. Helpful background reading and study should include Man and God in the City, by Kenneth D. Miller, Church Work in the City, by Frederick A. Shippey, and The Church Serves the Changing City by Ross W. Sanderson.

evangelism workshops as their first co-operative projects.

At its annual conference in Worcester, Mass., the Evangelical Mission Covenant church voiced its opposition to the practice of serving alcoholic beverages on passenger planes, opposed the principle of universal military training and suggested that the road to peace lies through universal disarmament.

The Family Counselor

Naomi Will H. K. Zeller, Jr. Jesse Ziegler

The Family Counselor welcomes letters of inquiry. They may be addressed: Family Life Department, General Brotherhood Board, 22 S. State St., Elgin, Ill.

Dear Counselor,

Within the last two months we are slowly coming to realize that we are over our heads in debt. We own our home—or at least are making payments on one. The installments on the house, plus taxes, unexpected sickness, and all the things that happen to a family with five growing children are happening to us. We've tried to save, but we are continually "broke." At this time, we feel we may have to give up our house. We don't know how to get out of the box we're in.

Worried

Dear Friends,

Every family comes upon times when obligations pile up. If you have been over your head in debt for only two months—come up for air— that's not so bad! Many people have been debt-ridden all their lives. The important thing is that you look this matter of habitual debt in the eye, a thing which you are now doing.

In all probability you shrink from the idea of a budget. To many people a budget is "living on the same amount of money with less fun." A budget need not be a straight jacket. It can operate as a barometer of bad weather ahead. A budget can be quite helpful even when not followed to minute detail, but used only as a guide to financial security.

One family I know well pays all its bills at the first of the month—and lives on whatever is left! Occasionally there are too many bills to pay them all. This family then pays more bills than it should pay and it squeezes the living from the rest. Necessity being the mother of invention it is amazing what wonders they accomplish. Moreover, this discipline imposed in one area soon spreads out and remarkable economies are affected in other areas.

As a general rule—unless there are extenuating circumstances which you do not mention in your letter—you should keep your home. Every move from one residence to another is costly in financial outlay, in depreciation of accumulated possessions and to the security of the family. The actual upkeep is a stimulus to economy. The equity in a home is a form of saving. The present policies on home loans makes it unwise to sell your home to cover your other debts.

You will need to remember a fact that you already know—there is a vast difference betwen needs and wants. When you have learned the art of buying what you need rather than what you want, you will have made considerable progress towards the solution of your problem. Keep your sales resistance up. Be wary of tricky contracts. Break the treadmill of monthly installment payments by eyeing the dangerous habit of adding new purchases to the installment contract. Remember that the problems which you face are the same in the higher income bracket. Many people with three times your salary still find it difficult to live on the money they have in hand. Wealth is the absence of want, not the curtailment of needs.

SING,
CHILDREN,
SING!

A complete line of graded songbooks for use in home, school or Church School.

WHEN THE LITTLE CHILD WANTS TO SING

Included are 134 songs, 17 instrumental selections, and 11 poems. This collection of singable songs makes it easy for little tots to worship in song. 104 pages cloth (5 or more $1.00 each) Price $1.25

HYMNS FOR PRIMARY WORSHIP

The purpose of this hymnal is to provide hymns that will help the children grow in their relationship to God, to Jesus, to the church, to the Bible, and to people. The music has been kept within the range of the children's voices, and are joyous, attractive, and singable. Some folk tunes are included. 176 pages cloth (5 or more $1.00) Price $1.25

HYMNS FOR JUNIOR WORSHIP

The songs contained in this songbook have been carefully selected by workers with children who have been deeply concerned about the Christian education of Junior boys and girls. Many of the songs were written specifically for this songbook and appear here for the first time. 148 songs and a complete index encourages its use. 144 pages cloth (5 or more $1.00) Price $1.25

A TREASURY OF SONGS FOR LITTLE CHILDREN

Compiled by Esther Botwin

While not a religious songbook this treasury gives a delightful collection of 54 familiar little songs that all children love to sing. The songs are printed in color and bordered by clever pictures or illustrations which will aid boys and girls in understanding the meaning of the songs. Parents who know just a little about the piano will be able to enjoy playing for their children. Children just learning to play will master these tunes quickly. Excellent for family group singing. 96 pages. Price $2.25 held on June 7.—Mrs Mary Mishler, Topeka, Ind.

Southern Indiana

Richmond—We were happy to have with us recently Bro. Grover Wine, Bro. Galen Lehman and Bro. Lester Fike. The men of the church have been removing the brick siding and adding new wood siding to our church building. Two new cloak rooms are being added to the church, one on each side of the vestibule. New shrubbery will be planted after the construction work is completed. The two vacant lots are being cleared. One will provide more lawn space with an outdoor fireplace while the other will be used for parking. A new church bulletin board has been installed. In the absence of our pastor, the primary department of the Sunday school conducted the children's day services.—Florence A. Allen, Richmond, Ind.

Rossville — The women's work group sponsored a school of missions on the theme of India. Sessions included pictures of her work by Goldie Swartz, returned missionary to India; a play, The Heaven of Freedom; a singspiration; and one night an Indian family, Mr. and Mrs. Lingappa and son. Our worship commission sponsored a music institute with Bro. William Eberly as leader. Brother and Sister Ray Tritt, who recently returned to the States after having served with Brethren Service in Europe, showed pictures of the work in Kassel, Germany, and other places where they had visited. Bro. Eldon Petry of the Anderson church spoke to our church on evangelism. Bro. Billy Bosler of Canton, Ohio, served our church as interim pastor. Bro. John C. Eller, administrator at Bethany Hospital, was speaker at an evening service. Our women's work group made fifteen layettes for the district project which were dedicated for relief at the Arcadia church. Our communion was held on May 15. One has been baptized since our last report. Our church co-operated with the other two churches in the town in vacation Bible school.—Mrs. Blanche Gochenour, Mulberry, Ind.

Michigan

New Haven—Our spring council meeting was held with Bro. J. J. Cook presiding. Bro. Howard Keim of Indiana conducted a week of evangelistic meetings in our church with a candlelighting service one evening and a special youth emphasis another evening. Several from our church attended the World Day of Prayer services which were held in our community. The young people of our church sponsored an Easter breakfast and devotional service. Special services were held on Mother's Day for the dedication of babies. The ladies of the church are having the floor of the church refinished. Our love feast and communion was observed April 16. Vacation church school was again conducted during the month of June.—Lena Bosserman, Middleton, Mich.

Northeastern Ohio

East Chippewa—Brother and Sister Guy Buch were with us one Saturday evening for a fellowship supper and a social in the church basement. On the following Sunday morning Bro. Buch preached for us. In the evening of the same day, the young people of the Black River church gave a program. We participated in the One Great Hour of Sharing program. The Manchester College a cappella choir gave a concert in our church one Sunday evening in April. On April 3 Bro. Richard Coffman preached for us. At Easter four persons were baptized and six received by letter into our church fellowship. A peace rally was held in our church on April 30, with Ora Huston of Elgin as guest speaker. The film, All for Him, was used on May 1. A German exchange student spoke at our evening service on May 8. Eight babies were consecrated on May 8. Progress is being made on our new parsonage. Since our pastor, Bro. McFadden, is retiring, Bro. Guy Buch has accepted the call to be our pastor as of Sept. 1. Bro. David R. McFadden and Bro. Atlee Stroup represented our church at Annual Conference. — Sarah Blough, Rittman, Ohio.

Hartville—Our annual school of missions was a study on India. A fellowship hour was held each evening before the mission study and one evening the junior high group served Indian food. We co-operated with other Hartville churches for the community Lenten services. Our speakers during Holy Week were Ralph Martin, Curtis Dubble and Barry Deardorff. Communion services were held on Easter evening. Five persons were received into our church. Seven persons from our church attended the six-session training school for Christian service at the Springfield church. A series of meetings was held June 20-27 in our church with Ralph Schlosser of Elizabethtown as guest speaker. Hazel Messer, missionary on furlough from India, was guest speaker at a women's work meeting. On Mother's Day the young people of the church gave each mother a carnation. On the same day, dedication services were conducted for seven babies. The annual mother and daughter banquet was held May 6 with the men preparing and serving the meal. The film, Faith of Our Families, was shown at the beginning of Family Week. The district elders' meeting was held at our church in May. On May 17 our father and son banquet was held with Rev. C. C. Thomas from the Haven of Rest mission of Akron as guest speaker. —Mrs. Olive Pontius, Hartville, Ohio.

Southern Ohio

Dayton, Ft. McKinley—At our district mission rally, guest speakers were Leland Brubaker, Nettie Weybright and V. F. Schwalm. A number of our people, including some of our young people, had a period of training in preparation for a home visitation program. Nettie Weybright, who recently visited in India and Europe, spoke at our women's work meeting. Palm Sunday was the beginning of our Holy Week services with Bro. Earl Kurtz of Elgin as evangelist. Our Good Friday service was held at the Hillcrest Brethren church with pastors of the neighboring churches as speakers. We received into our fellowship five new members by baptism and nine by letter. After the baptismal service a reception was held honoring the new members. Our pastor and young people were the guests of the young people at a Jewish synagogue. The men of our church organized a softball team. Our church decided to begin an expansion program in September. Some of our members participated in the district presentation of the Messiah. On May 8 we had a service of dedication for parents and their children. Mrs. George Weybright was guest speaker for our mother and daughter banquet. Mr. Gordon Crowe of the Mental Health Association, Mr. Harry DeWire of the United Seminary and Chaplin Jim Flinchbough from the Miami Valley hospital in Dayton were guest speakers for our Family Life Emphasis programs. Bro. Walter Bowman, our pastor, began new classes in preparation for church membership.—Hester Buck, Dayton, Ohio.

Eaton—Since our last report five have been received into our fellowship by letter and nine by baptism. We were represented at Annual Conference by our pastor, Ellis Guthrie, and Cyrus Kiracofe. On April 9 the Manchester College a cappella choir presented a program at our church under the direction of Clyde Holsinger. The men of the church had charge of our Mother's Day program. On May 6 our church was host for the fellowship tea for the county Federation of Church Women. On pulpit exchange Sunday Bro. Byron Miller of the Painter Creek church brought our morning message, while Bro. Guthrie was guest speaker in the East Dayton church.—Mrs. Elizabeth Gauch, Eaton, Ohio.

New Carlisle—Twelve persons have been baptized and four received by letter into our church since our last report. We have had speakers from Formosa and British Guiana, both students at Wittenberg College, Springfield, Ohio. Ten from our church attended the school of Christian living at the Pleasant Hill church. Pastor Chester Harley held a class on Sunday mornings concerning church membership. A number from our church attended the district women's work conference at the Lower Miami church. Our church co-operated with the other churches of the town in a week of pre- Easter services, with union communion on Thursday evening at our church. Our mother and daughter banquet was held May 10 with Mrs. John Good as speaker. Our men's work planted soy beans as their Lord's Acre project. One Sunday we had the Girl Scouts and Brownies as our guests and on Rural Life Sunday, the 4-H clubs and their leaders were guests. On district pulpit exchange Sunday, Bro. Raymond R. Peters preached for us. Pastor Harley was at the Salem congregation. Our members donated 220 bales of hay for heifer collection at Delaware, Ohio. Annual Conference delegates were Bro. Harley and Wilmer Funderburg.—Mrs. Nora Funderburg, New Carlisle, Pa.

Pitsburg—Our church held a school of missions, studying the foreign and home missions. One division of the district preaching mission was held in our church with Bro. Earl Bowman, pastor of Mack Memorial church, Dayton, Ohio, as speaker. Bro. Carl Cawood of Bethany Seminary conducted our revival in April. Our church met in regular council on May 4 with Elder Dolar Ritchey in charge. On May 27 services were held for the ordaining of Bro. Carl Cawood to the ministry. Our spring love feast was held May 1. The men of the church served the mother and daughter banquet on May 11. Our church co-operated with the Methodist church in evening sessions of a daily vacation Bible school.—Mrs. Inez Bright, Arcanum, Ohio.

Poplar Grove—From January until the first of June Bro. Kenneth Long had been preaching for us. Brother Herbert Williams from Bethany Seminary will serve as summer pastor. In September Bro. C. C. Sollenberger will begin his pastorate in our church. During the spring we held a revival service with Bro. Byron Miller as guest speaker. On Mother's Day dedication services were held for six babies. Recently the mother and daughter organization held its annual banquet with Mrs. Paul Halladay as speaker. She told of her experience in Europe and urged members of the church to support Brethren Service. Bro. Levi Blocher was our delegate to Annual Conference.—Homer Halladay, Greenville, Ohio.

North Atlantic

Philadelphia, First—On Good Friday evening, seven persons were baptized into our church. Easter sunrise services were followed by a breakfast. Members presented flowers and plants for the church auditorium in commemoration of our risen Lord. Bro. Clarence Rosenberger, representing Juniata College, recently preached for us. On Sunday evening, May 1, our love feast was conducted by our pastor, Marvin E. Clingenpeel, assisted by Elder William I. Book. On district pulpit exchange Sunday, Bro. D. Howard Keiper was with us. Bro. Clingenpeel served in the Coventry church. We commend our various church committees for their efforts in planning for and purchasing the ground for our new church building.—Christine Rosenberger, Philadelphia, Pa.

Quakertown—Each home again received the church birthday calendar for 1955 which was sponsored by the Co-workers class. Our pastor, Bro. Luke Brandt, and his wife were ordained to the eldership. The Week of Prayer services were sponsored by the Christ for Upper Bucks County committee. Our birthday offerings which are received at the end of each month are given to missions. Several of our young people attended the district CBYF meeting at the Green Tree church. Dr. Franklin K. Cassel of Lititz, Pa., talked and showed pictures concerning his work in Korea with the United Nations Civil Assistance Command. Souls in Conflict, the Billy Graham film of the London crusade, was sponsored by the Christ for Upper Bucks Committee. Bro. Berkey Knavel, pastor of the Ambler church, was speaker for our father and son fellowship. There was also a film on our mission work in Africa. Our pastor was guest speaker for the community Good Friday services. The pageant, At Dawn, was given on Easter evening. Bro. Elmer E. Ebersole of New Paris, Pa., was our evangelist for our spring meetings. As a result four persons were baptized. The women's work group has as their new project the collection of staple food for relief purposes. Sister Wilma Lewis was guest speaker for our mother and daughter fellowship. Bro. Frank Carper, pastor of the Palmyra church, gave an illustrated lecture on the Holy Land. Several from our group attended the Wissahickon memorial dedication in Philadelphia. Our church participated in the pulpit exchange program.—Mrs. Blondell Ludwick, Perkasie, Pa.

Royersford—Our love feast was observed May 1. A number of our members atended the revival meetings in the Mingo church. On May 15 in the exchange of pulpits, Bro. Keppen of the Norristown church was with us while our pastor spoke in the Norristown church. On May 22 we had our missionary day observance. At this service the Sunday-school classes presented their missionary offering from the past six months. Bro. A. C. Baugher, dean of Elizabethtown College, was guest speaker for the day. —Ollive Flemings, Royersford, Pa.

Springfield—Bro. Robert Landis of the Springfield Mennonite church, spoke at a young people's meeting. The women's work group made comforters and layettes which were sent to New Windsor for relief along with used clothing, shoes and used handbags filled with useful notions. The Home Builders' class had charge of a service at which the Russell Lengle family were in charge of the service. Our church took part in the One Great Hour of Sharing. Bro. John Jacoby talked at a young people's meeting. Bro. Marvin E. Clingenpeel of Philadelphia was guest speaker at the Homebuilders class service. Our quarterly council meeting was held with our elder, Ralph Frey, presiding. The undersigned served as delegate to Annual Conference. —Minerva Strauss, Richlandtown, Pa.

Eastern Pennsylvania

Chiques—Our young people with the youth of four adjoining congregations sponsored group discussion meetings each Thursday evening for a period of six weeks. These meetings were held at the East Fairview church. The women sewed at the Lancaster General hospital. Sister Florence Miller Royer, missionary on furlough who is partially supported by our church, talked and showed pictures of her work in Africa. A group from our church assisted with the work at the New Windsor center one Saturday. Bro. Ezra Bucher of Elizabethtown College conducted a two-session Bible institute. Guest speakers for our morning services have included Bro. Clarence Sanger and Bro. Milton Hershey. The sisters' aid sewed new garments and also collected used clothing for relief. The young people gathered food for the refugee camps. We are looking forward to the rededication of the Chiques church in the near future. Our church participated in the community Easter sunrise service. Since our last report three persons have been received into our fellowship by letter. Our love feast was held May 28 and 29 with Graybill Hershey, Walter Mahan, Alton Bucher, Reuben Myer, Howard Bernhard and Omer Nicarry present.—Mrs. John K. Stauffer, Lawn, Pa.

Palmyra—At a special service, Bro. Carl Zeigler of Lebanon presided for the licensing of Roger Forry to the ministry; Wilbur Smith was licensed for an indefinite period; and George and Rebecca Bell and Clair and Esther Gibble were installed into permanent office of deacon. The Messiah College Choral Society from Grantham, Pa. presented a concert in our church. A farewell supper was held for Brother Floyd McDowell, who had served as director of religious education, and his wife. They have begun their pastoral duties in the Lititz church. Bro. G. Wayne Glick of Lancaster was guest minister for our Holy Week services. Thirteen members were baptized into our church. At a council meeting Bro. Gale Crumrine was chosen to be our minister of religious education for a period of two years. Delegates to Grand Rapids Conference were Mrs. W. A. Baldwin, Mrs. F. S. Carper, Earl Smith and Herman Wenger. Delegates to the July 4 Sunday-school meeting were Robert Buck and Roger Forry. We held our spring love feast on May 1 with Bro. Harold Z. Bomberger of Westminster, Md., as guest minister. Our mother and daughter banquet was held with Miss Ethel M. B. Wenger as guest speaker. On May 22 the older members of the church were given special recognition at the worship service. We are proud to claim fifty-seven members above the age of seventy. A dinner was sponsored for the above group by the women's work.—Mrs. Ruth H. Saufley, Palmyra, Pa.

A Page From the Past

WHEN you open the door to this country store you turn back the clock almost forty years. You can sit down to checkers over the cracker barrel. You can examine pictures of the latest model buggies, warm yourself by the round stove, read by a kerosene lamp, grind your own coffee with a hand grinder and help yourself to canned goods on the shelf or produce from a barrel.

The store is so obviously a page out of the past that we suspect the photographer simply wandered into a museum. No one really turns the clock back and no one succeeds in making time stand still, even if he stops the clock and keeps an ancient calendar on the wall. We were made to grow even as time moves on. For this reason we want neither our churches nor our homes to resemble a museum. Though we treasure the past we do not seek the living among the dead. God is a present help; he is just as available in a modern supermarket as in an old country store.

READERS WRITE . . . to the editor

The Gospel Messenger welcomes letters commenting on editorials, articles and news. Letters should be brief and brotherly.

Not the Whole Baltimore Story

I read with interest and with concern the article by Ernest W. Lefever, "What Every Foreigner Knows About America," in the June 18 issue. I agree completely with Bro. Lefever's thesis of the effect of domestic issues of this nation on the thinking of the world. But when he cited an incident in Baltimore as one of his three stories, I became extremely interested . . . .

As for the incident at Southern High School, the principal is to be commended for his forthright position and action. In fact, our district commission on social education and action wrote such letters of commendation and have responses from the men involved.

There was an attempt on the part of some to demonstrate but it was only a fraction from among the 2,000 student body. By no stretch of imagination did all 2,000 students participate. It was very sporadic and classes went on as usual. The police kept order and discovered the agitators were headed by professional rabble-rousers with local and national police records. For example, one man was apprehended going by taxi from one school to another in an effort to arouse demonstrators. He was not even a resident of the city.

Bro. Lefever in citing this incident has not given the full "Baltimore Story," as he puts it . . . . After almost a year of desegregation, the city hardly remembers the incident that is cited.

By no means would I dispute his main contention. I, too, feel that anything done in a local community reflects on the whole nation just as the act of any individual member reflects on the church. Yet in anything as serious as this matter of integration, let's keep the record straight and be in possession of all the facts. Desegregation in Baltimore is working in a very successful manner no matter what some news note might have represented or misrepresented. Often the trouble is not with the young people or students but with the emotional oldsters and deeply entrenched prejudiced adults.—Jacob F. Replogle, Baltimore, Md.

My article was trying to make a central point about the influence of domestic factors on U. S. foreign relations. I was not writing an article on the Baltimore experience with integration. That would require a great deal of research in Baltimore itself.

At no place in my article did I intend to refer to the total experience, which may have been laudable, of integration in Baltimore schools, but I may have given that impression by using the journalistic term, "Baltimore story."

By "Baltimore story" I was referring only to one specific incident, the incident reported in my third paragraph, a story of boys carrying signs which indicated racial prejudice. In no sense was I indicting Baltimore, the schools of Baltimore, the citizens of Baltimore, or the churches of that city. I was saying only that public demonstrations like the one reported have a negative influence at home and abroad.—Ernest Lefever, New York, N. Y.

Mrs. Kreitzer, the Bible and Us

Another case of from rags to riches is Mrs. Catherine E. Kreitzer's rise to fame in four short weeks. From obscurity, this working, Pennsylvania grandmother climbed till she became America's TV heroine.

This week she hit her peak, leaving Revelon, sponsor of "The $64,000 Question," some $32,000 poorer, and her public a wiser and a richer one for having shared her experience.

Her faith that the Bible has the answers to life's big questions caused many to dust off the forgotten book. Here's hoping that we are not content to study it only for the names of Jesus' followers, but that we search until we discover what the Master has to say to us as his present-day disciples.

She taught us that the big questions are worth all the little ones put together. It was a gamble to go from $64, on up the ladder. Perhaps Mrs. Kreitzer will challenge us to follow her Lord's advice, "Don't worry about the little questions of clothing and food (small in comparison) until you have answered the big question of what you are going to do with God and his kingdom."

Her rise to fame leaves still another truth: the greater the question, the greater the interest. Too long we Christians have been content to spend our time on questions of a bazaar-and-ice-cream-social caliber, when we should be asking ourselves what Christian stewardship really means.—Richard N. Miller, Dayton, Ohio.

"The kingdom of God is as if a man should scatter seed upon the ground, and should sleep and rise night and day, and the seed should sprout and grow, he knows not how. The earth produces of itself, first the blade, then the ear. But when the grain is ripe, at once he puts in the sickle, because the harvest has come"
Mark 4:26-29

"The kingdom of heaven is like a grain of mustard seed which a man took and sowed in his field; it is the smallest of all seeds, but when it has grown it is the greatest of shrubs and becomes a tree, so that the birds of the air come and make nests in its branches"
Matt. 13:31-32

The Growth of the Kingdom

OUR three parables provide two views of the growth of the kingdom. In "the seed growing of itself" we have a unified, inclusive view of growth. The Matthew parables view growth from two points of view, one showing its visible embodiment, the other revealing its inner vitality.

The parable of the seed growing of itself teaches the certain and orderly growth of the kingdom.

The harvest is certain because of the nature of man, seed and soil. Or to move back to what is ultimate, God's character and his creative act are the guarantee of the growth of the kingdom.

"The earth produces of itself." The Greek word is automatē, in which one quickly recognizes our word automatic, and it might be translated, "The earth produces automatically . . ." There is suggested here a potential quality in the earth which we are prone to overlook.

Our blind spot has worked its way into Christian conversation and literature. We call this parable, "the seed growing of itself." Such form of words is nowhere in the parable. Nearest to it are Jesus' words, "The earth produces of itself." We have been either afraid or too proud to admit that the earth is as good as Jesus says it is.

I propose that we rename the parable, using Jesus' own words, the parable of the earth producing of itself. This carries terrific implications in respect to humility and the Christian's participation in life's affairs. Our earth is such as, of itself, to bring forth harvest, once the seed is given to it. So far from dishonoring God, we truly glorify him, acknowledging that "the earth is his, for he made it."

The fact that seed can be placed in the soil and the result is harvest tells us much about soil; the fact that a bit of leaven can be hidden in a bushel of flour and the whole becomes the making of good bread tells us much about flour; the fact that belief in a Father-God, revealed in Jesus Christ, now commands the allegiance of one third of the human race tells us much about the human race.

There is a lovely story about Gregory and three Anglo-Saxon slave boys in Rome, early sixth century. When he was told that they were Angles, his mind launched into some brilliant and blessed punning: "Right," said he, "for they have angelic faces and are worthy to be fellow-heirs with the angels in heaven." When told further that they came from the town of Deira, he said, "Truly are they de-ira-ns, that is, plucked from the ire (wrath) to come and called to the mercy of Christ." And when his informant added that their king was Aella, he exclaimed, "Hallelujah! The praise of God the Creator must be sung in those parts!"

What Gregory saw as he looked at those slave boys is what the good man sees when he looks at any other man. It is what the Christian sees when he contemplates the world.

The soil is potentially a harvest; flour is potentially man's bread; the kingdoms of this world are potentially the kingdom of our Lord.

The certainty of the growth of the kingdom as set forth in our parable offers no support whatever for that immoral optimism which teaches the doctrine of inevitable progress. Because man's freedom is real freedom, and not sham, the awful possibility remains that any man or any nation or probably even any inhabited world can send itself down to eternal destruction. To none of these is the blessedness of the kingdom guaranteed. What is guaranteed is that God's kingdom will eventually triumph and gather together into it all who put their trust in him. This is the certainty set forth in these parables.

The growth of the kingdom is in due order: germination, the blade, the ear and the full grain in the ear.

Whether this pattern of development applies to the individual life of man or to the entire span of the kingdom's growth through all time or to certain epochs or institutions within that total, the best answer, I think, is, to all of these.

What challenge to humility, hope and tolerance, as one contemplates the miracle of divinely ordered growth!

God's providence may cast one's lot in the time of the full grain in the ear. He would be deeply sensitive who forgets that other men have labored and he has entered into their labors, that God gives the increase. The greater one's present good fortune, the clearer the call to humility and gratitude.

It may be one's lot to labor always with beginnings. The joy of harvest is not his. But aware of the living possibilities of that with which he works, his labor is glorified with hope. What he sets going with seed and soil reaches far beyond his little day. Tolerance is so much a part of the man who wisely fosters growth that he would scarcely think of himself as possessing that virtue. Love is forever finding new ways in which to incarnate itself in our world. He is a bungling destroyer who attempts to dictate the ways. Solomon in all his glory was not arrayed as beautifully as the divinely clothed flowers of the field. Rooted and grounded in love, one may have perfect peace as one leaves to God the shape of things to come, not only in the world at large but also in the lives of those who are dear to him.

The parable of the mustard seed points to the visible, institutional aspect of the kingdom's growth. Anyone who knows what it is to be deeply concerned

Evanston After One Year

JUST one year ago the World Council of Churches was ready to complete its second Assembly at Evanston, Illinois. Representatives of 163 churches had gathered there from all over the world to think and plan and pray together. They met to strengthen the council in its ministry and witness; they sought new opportunities and explored new avenues for co-operative efforts; they attempted, through study and prayer, to offer a message of hope to a troubled world.

The Evanston Assembly was ably reported by the more than six hundred ministers, newsmen, editors and broadcasters who composed its large press delegation. Pictures caught the color and pageantry of an assembly of world Christians; typewriters pounded out immediate stories of significant actions; mimeographs were overworked in order to provide every interested participant with copies of resolutions, reports and speeches.

While newspapers, church periodicals and many a sermon commented upon the meaning of this important gathering it is still possible that a large number of Christians, even here in America where we could practically look in on a world meeting, may still be asking, "What was it all about? What did the World Council say to my church? What did Evanston say to me?"

The answer is that Evanston had many vital things to say to all of us. But we may not have heard its message either because we were unfamiliar with its terminology or simply because we were not paying attention. If such has been the case, we can be thankful for two recent books that are designed to help us see what happened at Evanston and what the World Council said to us there.

If our readers are frightened by theological discussions, they should appreciate Harold Bosley's popularly written report on the message of Evanston, entitled What Did the World Council Say to You? He has limited his discussion to the actual documents that form the official message and reports of the Assembly. Although he quotes freely from these sources, it is his own concrete and understandable comments on them that will be most helpful for Christians who want to know how all of these statements apply to them.

As the pastor of the First Methodist church in Evanston, Dr. Bosley took a careful look at this world Christian gathering on his doorstep. He does not attempt to give an objective evaluation of the World Council or its Assembly, but rather to discover the positive words that it spoke to our churches. His short book would serve well as a study guide for several Sunday evening discussions in every local church. Those who read it and consider what the World Council said to them will of course be better informed as to what Christian minds have to say about the nature of the church, its evangelistic task, its approach to social and political problems and its message of hope. Even more, they will be challenged to greater service for Christ and his church.

Another volume that is intended for reading by laymen as well as by ministers is Evanston: An Interpretation, by James H. Nichols. This book by a professor of church history covers some of the same ground but devotes more attention to the historical and theological context of the Evanston reports. There are excellent discussions of the composition of the churches within the World Council and some consideration of other sections of the Christian community that are outside of the council. There are chapters on the World Council's ministry in the area of relief and rehabilitation. The worship services, notable both for their experiences of unity and the problems they created among the different communions, are carefully evaluated.

For readers who already have some familiarity with the traditions and viewpoints of the various churches in the Council, this interpretation of Evanston can be highly recommended. Readers who are unacquainted with churches other than their own may find it a little difficult. But unless we take advantage of such occasions to learn more about other Christian groups, how can we expect to take our place intelligently and usefully in the larger fellowship of the body of Christ?

The World Council's Second Assembly was far more than just another church gathering. As appraised in these recent books it was a significant moment in the life of the church—and it had something vital to say to every member.—K.M.

Christian Enterprise in Higher Education

Glenn L. Clayton

THE church founded her colleges some years ago with two chief goals in mind: (1) to supply ministers, missionaries, and lay workers for the church who would because of their college experience, have acquired a working acquaintanceship with the great minds of the world and have learned how to get along in a complex society, and (2) to provide the benefits of the Christian disciplines in a college program for all comers and thereby contribute, in a kind of educational mission program, to the Christian growth of the nation as a whole.

These two major purposes have continued through the years until today almost half of the national leaders hold collegiate degrees of high order. Their training is equal to that of the best available in a secular way and far superior to any other higher training as a basis for life work. These fine men and women have not only the knowledge and intellectual background for life; they have that additional religious orientation which makes their knowledge workable in a God-centered relationship. They are fortified with truth and wisdom and more able to cope with complex problems and "isms" than their less fortunate brothers.

We are all aware of the sharp growth in population since 1945 and of the rising interest in the church and its program. The role of the church college as a training institution of Christian leadership for this growing church is becoming daily more urgent. Ministers are in increasing demand and higher standards of religious education create a constant demand for college-trained leaders in the Bible school and on church boards.

These, then, are times when the product of the church college is in great demand. They are times when the work of the college takes on new meaning both for church work and in the secular field. It follows that these are times when the church college should take a long look at its program and do the best job possible for all concerned.

Christian enterprise in higher education will be more effective in measure as we eliminate waste effort and orient our programs to the needs of the hour. Three major areas of general emphasis will help materially in this assessment of our collegiate work .

Purpose. The church college is not a university. It must move out of the shadow of the large institution and be aware of its calling as an independent, church school. Research is very important as a part of higher education, but the primary objective of the church college is mastery and promotion of the liberal arts and certain needed professional training. Doing a good job here will require all the facilities and effort of the small college and leave the research and graduate work for the university which is equipped for it with specialized laboratories and extensive libraries. Let us try to see ourselves as church units, interested in the individual and assisting in the development of Christian living. In this area of individual attention and congenial social atmosphere, the small church college has no peer. This is our peculiar bailiwick, and the task for which we were founded. Realization of this high purpose will eliminate much waste effort and disillusionment.

Planning. High purpose is imperative for effective living in the atomic age, but purpose will flounder and fail unless guided by careful planning. Too frequently our college programs have grown like Topsy without rhyme or reason and the consequent overlapping of functions has led to disillusionment and misunderstanding. Thus, community interest, newfound and vitally needed, has turned the head of many a college away from the liberal arts to vocational and professional fields which may not entirely concur with the purpose of the school. The urgent demand for workers and ministers has caused others to reduce requirements for graduation from seven to five years and to compromise academic excellence in the process. Still others have seen or fancied a widespread shortage of money among students and launched into extensive scholarship, tuition rebate, and loan programs.

All these things may be, and probably are, in general, good for the colleges, but the impression of trial and error is not good. Careful planning is just as essential for the Christian college as it is for corporate business. We should be on a planned basis whereby general programs are projected at least ten years into the future, and here I refer not only to enrollment optimum and building and equipment needs, but also to curricular policy, faculty development, public relations and the various services which the college may render.

Perseverance. A striking characteristic of the small Christian college has been its tenacity. Although there is an impression abroad that colleges never die, this is not true. They do shrivel and become overburdened with debt and eventually close their doors, even in these prosperous times. However, their record of perseverance is good and closely related to their adherence to purpose and careful planning. Given these, there will be an adequate supply of friends, church support and alumni to see the college through difficult times if its administration displays vision and determination to face all obstacles.

Again, deep Christian roots provide a contact with limitless power which breeds confidence and overcomes opposition.

The atomic age is not an easy one in which to live and operate a college. Disappointments are sure to come. Even with careful planning, temporary defeats are certain. It is easy to quit. It is difficult to persevere. But as has always been true, it is true today that to him who has the desire and will to win, victory will come over surprising odds. We have all seen the phenomenon of desire at work. We have seen it on the football gridiron where an inexperienced and otherwise mediocre team rises in great desire and simply will not be beaten.

Even so must the Christian college face the problems of today. Christian enterprise in higher education can be such

Frink from Monkmeyer

The work of the Christian college takes on new meaning as training for leadership for a growing church becomes increasingly more urgent that the percentage of Christian college graduates will remain high in the busy years ahead.

Let us face the atomic age in the confidence that our cause is most just. There is not only a place for the Christian college; there is an absolute need for it. Let us search out and hold high our Christian purpose as church schools. Let us create and follow a plan of progress which shall be a road for us to travel as we move into the future, a road which may be rocky and perilous, but one which leads certainly to the blessing of God and to happiness and peace for those entrusted to our care. Finally, let us persevere. Defeat may look upon us and even be our lot, but can never engulf us completely if we are unwilling to accept it.

Dedicated Living

Edward E. Lyons

DEDICATED living is another term for our Brotherhood theme, "Seek First His Kingdom." The choices offered in the Bible become a matter of life and death. We must choose between God or Baal, Christ or chaos, heaven or earth. But many prefer to drift "on the misty flats," hoping that their lives may make for great triumphs. No matter how great our dreams or how high our hopes or how brilliant our insights, if we refuse to follow them out in our daily lives they are to no avail. The way to remedy this condition is to seek God's kingdom until we are all in and not half in.

Dedicated living begins with conversion—the making of a whole person. A person who is half for and half against is not really for anything. It exasperates our elders to have a part of the congregation meet a vote with stony silence.

As Jesus sat by the treasury he was watching people. Among them he saw a poor widow sharing all she had, that which cost her her last meal. The leaders who were busy with the procedures of the passover probably never noticed her and if they had, they would have brushed her offering aside because it was so little.

Very often we cut our personality up like a pie. We have part of our personality given here and a part there; we are a different person at home than we are at work. The tragedy comes when we become so divided that our own house falls. A wheel could not run if one spoke led from the wheel to the outside rather than to the hub. Neither can our lives be dedicated to Christ with one spoke of our life's wheel outside the center of our circle.

Jesus said that we cannot serve both God and Mammon. We are united with Christ or against him. We cannot give our life to opposites. We cannot have both light and darkness, neither can we go both north and south. Dedicated living means going in the one direction, facing Christ and not turning back. "If we are in Christ we are a new creation."

Dedicated living also means that we must have a feeling of nothingness. The widow could have said, "My mites are nothing and how can they even meet the budget?" Thank God for the nothings of men for on these have the church been built. Moses felt he could do nothing until God told him to use what he had in his hand. Moses again said that he could not speak and God told him that Aaron would be his mouthpiece.

One of the great laws of God's kingdom is that we must become empty if we are to be filled. Nothing is the secret of everything. The more of a zero we are the more that God can use us, the emptier we are the more filled we can be of the Spirit, the smaller we are the larger our tasks, and the humbler we remain the greater our experience can be.

It takes an empty cup to be filled. A cup of beer cannot hold a cup of milk, a warehouse of tobacco cannot hold food and clothing, a shipload of liquor for the boys across seas cannot hold a shipload of medicines and blood plasma. A mouth filled with curses cannot be filled with blessings. It is just as simple and as profound as that.

It takes an empty heart to have a filled heart of joy. It takes a poor spirit to have the riches of grace. Jesus put it this way: "Blessed are those who hunger and thirst after righteousness for they shall be filled." And again: "Blessed are the poor in spirit for theirs is the kingdom of heaven."

It is obvious that a person who has just eaten will not be very hungry and it is just as true that a person who does not hunger and thirst after righteousness because he has been filled with something else will not find spiritual manna. How can we be so concerned with the loss of physical appetite but never once think about the loss of spiritual appetite? How can we create in people's hearts a spiritual hunger?

The widow was more hungry for spiritual food than she was for her physical food. She was one who would rather worship than eat, share than get. There are those who would rather play basketball than eat, to fish than eat or to play golf than eat, but where are those souls who would rather go to church than to eat?

Dedicated living cannot become a reality until we realize along with St. Paul and even some alcoholics that we are nothing until God helps us. The greatest of saints felt worthless and useless. One who is truly educated will realize that there is still more knowledge of which he does not know. A true child of God will realize that there are more blessings yet to be given and only humility will keep us empty of greed and hate so we will be able to receive.

Dedicated living must continue as we enlarge our spiritual understanding. We are not to receive the same blessings but more and more.

We are only satisfied that our "cup runneth over." We are too content to be a pint-sized Christian rather than a gallon or ten-gallon Christian. We shed only a flickering light like a firefly or a weak flashlight rather than becoming a 200 watt bulb. We are to let our lives be transparent and to let God's light flood through. And we must enlarge our spirits so more light will shine through and more blessings can fill our cups.

It is the poor in spirit, the mites of the widows and the nothings of men which make for powerful living. The rich young ruler was too rich, the farmer who refused to tear down his barns had too much social security instead of eternal security. So rich, yet so poor. Having so much, yet so little. Still it is not the possessions that make us poor. It is not riches which sent Dives to Hell but rather what he let those riches do to him.

Truly we own nothing, have nothing. Our possessions may own us, but we do not own them. We cannot possess God but we can let God possess us. It is not what we give our lives to as much as what we allow to enter our lives. If everything else enters our lives, then God cannot.

Dedicated living is in reality moving self out and letting God move in. When this happens, we find men becoming Andrews who bring their brothers, Pauls who change the world, a widow sharing her mites, Kagawas, Schweitzers, or Peter Marshalls. It is time for us in the Christian church to dedicate our all that the kingdom of God might claim us and use us. It is worth the cost. Shall we give our lives up to him who needs us and can use us to spread the good news of salvation to all the world?

and then to do something about it has an experimental acquaintance with the principle involved here. If you have loved someone and, letting yourself go, have shown that love with a caress or a kiss, you have gotten at the bottom of this matter. The love which is the life of the kingdom must have for itself a body with which to work in our world.

I do not hesitate to say that every good deed, done by anyone anywhere, under any auspices, is part of the kingdom of God. But knowing the wiles of the devil as we do, we can be sure that the doing of good is always beset with subtle and deadly snares to evil.

One man puts up a front of righteousness to cover up the profitable practice of sin. The deep tragedy is that he thinks himself to be righteous.

Another is proud of his good works, which are therefore an idol, separating him from God.

Another encourages righteousness, and himself practices it, for the sake of the better world he thus helps to build, thereby the more completely forgetting whence he came, whither he shall go and source of all the good he so blindly cherishes.

All of this is terribly true but it does not contradict the truth that every good of man is part of God's kingdom. Whence else can it come but from God, "the giver of every good and perfect gift?"

The importance of recognizing all human good as part of God's kingdom is illustrated by any device or symbol by which men, enlisted in the same cause, are able to recognize each other any time, anywhere and in all circumstances. The distinctive form of dress, which used to be more in evidence among us than it is now, insured that Brethren would recognize Brethren wherever they might meet. The result was a closely knit fellowship that outlives the means that once fostered it. The army uniform has a similar value on the field of battle. Every means by which a shared loyalty is brought to light unites and strengthens those who hold that loyalty. This is the highest kind of ecumenicity.

Wherever the hungry are fed, the naked clothed, the sick visited, the oppressed freed, the exploited given justice, the underprivileged set on the path to a better life—all of this is our work, and those who do it are our brother and sister and mother.

The concern lest, under the pressure of activity, we lose the spirit is a valid and wholesome concern, but the solution generally does not lie in lessening the activity, but rather in deepening and vitalizing the spiritual life.

The inward character of the kingdom is recognized in the parable of the leaven. Note, the leaven was not added to, placed in or mixed with the meal—it was hidden in it. The words

When Jesus touched the life of the Samaritan woman she, forgetting the water she had come to get, went to tell others about him

I CAN still remember vividly some of those stalwart patriarchs of the plains of Texas who rendered a definite influence on my philosophy of life. Although many of them have passed through the portals of eternity, I can still see them, sitting together in the little community church, singing joyfully with their physical eyes closed and their spiritual eyes directed beyond Jordan. Among those patriarchs was elderly Uncle Bird Stump, who had lost one of his legs through an accident which happened while he was rounding up cattle. Another was J. C. Mills, pioneer merchant of the plains who weathered the storms of depression and dust. Although these men were members of different churches, their eyes were fixed upon a common goal beyond the horizons of their daily experience. Their hymn singing reflected that goal. One of the songs they loved to sing was the well-known gospel song, Will There Be Any Stars in My Crown?

We have moved a considerable distance from that day to this one in 1955. Our religious emphasis has moved from self-emphasis toward the divine emphasis; from the informal toward the formal; from the elementary toward the clasical. But within the inner confines of our beings we still long to know that there will be stars in our crowns. We are interested in achieving the star-crowned life today, as well as in eternity.

This picture of the star crowned life came to me clearly a few years ago. Until recently I maintained a wheat farm on the plains of Texas. Several years ago it became my lot to drive the tractor, preparing the soil for the seed, working during the night shift. There is something keenly beautiful and inspirational in the working of the soil during the dignity and the grandeur of the night. On one particular night my attention was arrested by a cloud in the northwestern sky. It was not a large cloud; neither was it pretentious. But it had a peculiar shape which appealed to my imagination. I could see in it a resemblance to the shape of a man's head. Then I was forced to turn a corner, and the image was gone. But when I came back around the field, there it was before me again. It had moved to a new location; the lines of the face were more clearly drawn, but the real beauty of the image was found in the crown upon the head. For above the image was a crown with three brightly shining stars embedded. Here was a star crowned head. Here was the answer to the constant driving pursuits of man; the life that is uplifted by brightly shining stars.

When we look into the perfection of Jesus' life we find that he had a star-crowned life. His was a life that could touch the rich and the poor; the haughty and the meek. His was a life that imprinted other lives. In the records concerning his birth, the Scriptures tell us that the wise men of the East, after looking upon him, turned and departed another way. No man has ever seriously looked upon Jesus and departed the same way. He becomes a changed individual. Surely this life was star crowned. Our task as his disciples is to discover those drives and disciplines that will make our lives star crowned. There must have been innumerable stars in his crown, and we can improve our lives by looking for those stars. I would like to mention three.

The first of these experiences is taken from the last evening of his earthly life, in the garden of Gethsemane. It must have been terribly dark that night in Gethsemane when our Lord knelt and prayed alone. Humanity was sinking to a new low level of despair; sin and evil were unleashed with all their final fury. A few days before the masses had shouted Hosannas in his favor, but one by one they had all turned away. Even in this hour the disciples were sleeping. But Jesus was not asleep; he was praying, praying so fervently that the sweat stood as blood drops upon his brow. Out of that prayer came a magnificent star in the words, "Not my will, but thine be done."

We submit ourselves and our wills to what we really love. Husbands and wives who love each other submit themselves and their wills to the common good of both. If we love God we will submit ourselves completely unto his will and ask him to pilot our ship of life whither-soever he wills, in the building of his kingdom. Sometimes this becomes a physical difficulty; sometimes the whole pattern of our life is changed and we find that God has different plans for us than we have imagined. But the star-crowned life is the life that is submitted to the will of God.

The second experience comes from the same evening in the life of Jesus. On that night, we are told in the thirteenth chapter of John's record of the Gospel that Jesus ate a meal with his disciples. However, in the partaking of that meal, someone had to play the role of the servant of the house. In those days men traveled largely by foot. There was very little pavement and the trails amid the Judean hills became quite dusty. Consequently, most households kept a servant whose duty it was to wash the feet of the guests as they came into the house. Since there was no servant in the upper room, we are told that Jesus took a towel and, pouring water into a basin, began to wash the disciple's feet. There is a great implication in the words, "You ought to wash one another's feet."

If you would make your life star crowned you should "take a towel" in the interests of your fellow man. Jesus said, in another instance, "And the second commandment is like unto the first, "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself!" We are now confronted with the question, "Who is my neighbor?" Jesus answered this question with the parable of the good Samaritan. In this parable the implication is made that any man who is in need, in any part of the world, is my neighbor. Many of us sit around life's table with our hands folded in pious praise to God while all the while we kick

If we want to make our lives star crowned we will take "a towel" in the interests of our fellow men just as Jesus did the shins of our fellow man beneath the table. Jesus' life was star crowned because he loved the people of the world; because he had the dignity, the grace, the poise and the courage to "take a towel."

The final experience is described in the words of Jesus, "And I, if I be lifted up, will draw all men unto me." In other words, Jesus knew the value of losing one's life for a great cause. In his particular instance, he literally gave his life upon Golgatha for the cause of man's salvation. And as the great personality of Jesus could not be conquered or killed, even by the fear, the pain and the suffering of death, just so the lives of those who have dedicated themselves to the great cause of Christ will not be moved by the storms and tempests of an insecure society.

The road to the star-crowned life is a paradox; if any one aspires to the goal, let him lose his life for the cause of Christ, for the hope and the future of the Christian Church. Those souls who are not willing to fix their vision upon a star of sacrificial service will never soar above the rabble. The Apostle Paul grasped this vision, when, toward the end of his life, he said, "For me to live is Christ; but for me to die is gain."

Grandma

James L. Houff

I KNEW Grandma Jones first when she was about sixty. That was when I became old enough to join the church Youth Club, and Grandma was an honorary member of the Youth Club. In fact, she had been a member for a long time. No one knew just when she had joined and no one cared.

Grandma was no meddler; she was one of the gang and her stories were always cherished. Her prayers in the Sunday-school class, where she taught, were soul searching and inspiring. Her dedication to the cause of every youth was much desired and her council to young lovers was wise and much sought after. In short the kids just loved her. The Youth Club was active and had more than fifty members, and the only reason the pastor could point to was Grandma Jones.

Actually she was not a grandma at all in the real sense. But to everyone who knew her she was grandma in the spiritual sense. This was because she treated all the young people as if they were her very own. Some people dislike being called grandma, but not Grandma Jones; that name fitted her personality of love and concern.

Not only the youth had a claim on her. The preacher loved her and the young adults were crazy about her. The young mothers called her to help when their babies were sick, and the young fathers called her to come and help when new babies were due to arrive. In all of her activities she was about her Lord's business of helping others in the way of love. Her old age was not a handicap to her but an asset. She turned every hour of every day into joy and love.

Maybe you have a desire in your own heart to be helpful as Grandma was. What she had was no secret. She wanted to share it with all. I remember seeing her each Sunday after church service as she quietly went about greeting the visitors to our church. Those who just looked into her face knew that they saw there a picture of heaven. Her smiles of love melted many long faces of envy, pride, selfishness and hate. Her words of kindness healed the wounds of many a lost temper.

From Grandma's heart radiated concern for the sick. She visited them and had them on her heart during her prayer. Those who had just moved into the church community soon were called on by Grandma. She welcomed them to the town and then she showed them a little picture booklet of church activities. This little booklet had been printed by the young adults of the Sunday school. It had many pictures of interest to all ages in the family. It really told the story of the church and the people. Grandma enjoyed showing the pictures of the children's departments to the new children who had just moved into the community. The children liked the kind old lady who brought the picture book about the church and they were very eager for their parents to go with them to the church.

A few years after I had first met Grandma, mother wrote me at college to say that Grandma had fallen on the church steps. The doctor said she had fallen because of a stroke. He put her to bed. What a shame to put such a useful person as Grandma to bed in an out-of-the-way, up-stairs apartment. How could anyone see her smile there? But people went there to see her love and feel her presence. She used her phone to call those who were in her circle of fellowship. Youth Club met often in her apartment and she mailed out from her room the little booklets that she had for the new families that had recently moved to town.

Then one day at college I got a letter from mother telling me of Grandma's death, or that is, of Grandma's change of address to heaven, because such as she could never really die. She loved and her love lives on in the lives of several hundred young people and young adults, older people and boys and girls. Her love came first from Christ, her Savior, to her. She passed it on to all those about her.

Her funeral service had a new note—at least everyone says so. Practically all of her spiritually adopted children were present. It was not a time of sad tears, but a time of solemn thanksgiving to God, thanks to God because he had sent Grandma into the midst of a community, and through her had made love, peace, joy and heaven dwell there in our midst. Her will, I was told, left all her very few worldly possessions to the church and its work. She had said in her will, "I came into the world with nothing, God gave me every blessing; so I leave all that was first the Lord's for his use now. I need it no longer."

You have a desire to be helpful like Grandma. You can do as she did. She took the gift of God's love as God gave it to her. She used that love for the glory of God and the good of her neighbor, and she passed it on to others. What was left over she gave back to God.

The Noncombatant and Conscience

ON OCTOBER 13, 1954, several representatives of the Mennonite Brethren Church met with representatives of the Department of Defense to discuss provisions available or that could be made available for a restricted noncombatant service for members of their constituency facing the draft. Their plan was to investigate possibilities of noncombatant medical service which would not violate the faith and principles upon which their church has been historically based. Following are five questions posed to top-level military leaders and the answers received.

1. Is there any provision or possibility for draftees who are conscientiously opposed to war to serve in the medical branch of noncombatant service in civilian units?

Major Abel offered an analysis of the classification of conscientious objectors as it related itself to the 1-A-O and the 1-O position. In a comprehensive analysis he pointed out, that all classification problems were a responsibility of the channels of civil government. The army assignments of draftees are based on the direction of classifications provided through the channels of the Selective Service System, which falls into the civil branch of the government. The division between civil and military law in the structure of the United States government makes it impossible to consider any provisions for civilian units in the framework of the United States armed forces (all italics our own).

Major Abel also pointed out that the United States government has made it possible for those who, because of conscience, have any conflicts in submitting themselves to military law, to have the choice of accepting alternative service under civilian direction. From the standpoint of military administration this channel should be used for anyone who has conscientious scruples with the issues of war and should not seek concessions of change in the provisions of military law. The channel of alternative service under civilian direction is the answer to this problem.

The contributions of the other officers from the various departments to this question confirmed the conflict of structural principles between civil and military law which makes the provisions for civilian units in the medical branch of the army an impossibility. To consider such provision in the future would first require a basic change in the structural division of civil and military law, which is unlikely to happen in the framework of a democratic country.

2. Are there any provisions for conscientious objectors, who because of their religious belief cannot subscribe to the military oath which demands obedience "according to the regulations of the Uniform Code of Military Justice?"

The same division between civil and military law was found to be involved at this point. The transfer from a civilian to military status without the commitment of obedience to military law would leave the draftee free from any commitment of loyalty and obedience. It was discovered that because of this principle, the transfer of an individual from one status, that of being under the jurisdiction of civilian law, to the status of being under the jurisdiction of military law, requires an oath and no possibility of a change in this ruling can be considered.

3. If there are no provisions as referred to in question 2, what would be the position of one inducted into the army who on the grounds of religious convictions would refuse to subscribe to the military oath?

4. What disposition would be made where an inducted serviceman finds that he cannot conscientiously perform the service demanded of him under military jurisdiction?

(a) On the basis of the liberty established for all citizens of the United States, no one is forced to take the military oath. It is essential, however, that a draftee make his objection to the military principle known before he is drafted and apply for a 1-O position, not permit himself first to be inducted and then refuse the taking of the oath. Not the oath, but the induction ceremony makes a draftee a part of the armed forces. Having been inducted, and then refusing to take the oath, will not make any change in his status. He will remain subject to the principles of the Military Code of Justice. The opportunity to take a civilian position before the induction absolves the army from all responsibility of conscientious conflicts which may hinder the draftee from taking the oath.

(b) According to the army regulation, an individual who refuses to take the military oath after his induction is charged with disobedience against the orders issued by his superiors and becomes subject to the punishment prescribed by the military code. The officers pointed out that even for a soldier in the army there exists channels of appeal for change of status and assignment other than refusal to submit to existing basic regulations. Personal legal advice is provided by the Code of Military Justice to every individual in the army. Help and counsel can also be obtained through the chaplain's division and the commanding officer.

5. Is there a possibility that noncombatant medical conscientious objectors could be grouped in specific units, so that spiritual care could be supplied by the church in addition to that which is offered by chaplains?

Lt. Col. Ahr indicated that the army structure is set up on the basis of rotation and replacement, as governed by arising needs within various army divisions, and it would be impossible for any grouping of CO's into specific units. The second problem, as given, in the analysis of the colonel, arises for them from the exceptions granted to one religious group as a precedent to similar requests which would follow from many other religious, social and racial segments, many of them with insincere motivations. The army looks upon such divisions unfavorably and considers them contrary to operational principles which seek to avoid all exceptions to any one particular person or group of persons.

Lt. Col. Ahr explained that the primary mission of the medical service was to contribute to the success of military operations and the Department of Defense was responsible to guard this objective in the formulation of the governing principles affecting this branch.

Saving lives and easing suffering are not mentioned as part of the mission of the medics. The Army Field Manual FM 8-10 states, "The mission of the medical service in a theater of operations is to contribute to the success of the military effort through—

"a. Conserving manpower. Military strength is preserved by seeing that only the fit take the field, by the protection of troops against unnecessary hazards to health and efficiency, and by effective care and early return to duty.

"b. Preventing adverse effects of unevacuated casualties on combat efficiency. Casualties within any combat unit restrict its movement. Lack of care and proper evacuation reduces the soldier's willingness to take necessary risks. Both can be prevented by adequate medical aid and rapid evacuation" (page 20). Casualties are called "noneffectives" (page 22) since they cannot contribute to military success.

Maintaining combat efficiency of the rest of the army is stressed as important for the medics. "The essentiality for physical fitness is a critical factor in the combat efficiency of troops. Military history is rampant with examples of battles that were lost and campaigns that failed solely because the troops were immobilized by disease" (page 22).

"Simple measures, instituted early, often contribute more to combat efficiency than more elaborate measures instituted too late" (page 21).

"The procedure of permitting troops of the army and other services to fulfill their combat functions without handicapping them with the care of their casualties must be preserved" (page 125).

" . . . The total effect of indifferent sorting of casualties might well jeopardize the success of any combat operation" (page 27).

The Family Counselor

Naomi Will H. K. Zeller, Jr. Jesse Ziegler

The Family Counselor welcomes letters of inquiry. They may be addressed: Family Life Department, General Brotherhood Board, 22 S. State St., Elgin, Ill.

Dear Counselor,

We are anxious, as parents of three growing children, to have them develop self-confidence and skills that will help them as adults to take their place in the world. Each of our three has a hobby—debating, sports, dramatics, and all of them have a musical talent. But we know of a few parents who are resented because they always push their children into the limelight, to be used on programs, to perform when there are guests in the home. How far should parents go in helping their children to "put their best foot forward," in praising them in the presence of and to other people? We don't want our children to grow up as over-confident, "cocky" people who think too highly of their own achievements and too little of others!

Anxious Parents

Dear Friend,

I feel you have touched on an important problem. A balance in the personality of a child between humility and reticence on the one hand and self-confidence and aggressiveness on the other is so much to be desired. However, overconfidence or "cockiness" is such an unpleasant characteristic that I feel a child would have a more useful, happy life with the balance a little heavy on the side of reserve and reticence. "Blessed are the meek" is one of the truths written into the universe by our Creator.

Children who have hobbies and musical talent such as yours will not need to be pushed forward but will have something to talk about and something to share in special skills as situations arise naturally. Psychologically, it is so much better for the child to have his talent and ability discovered by people whether they be guests in the home or members of organizations than for the parents to promote their child.

Praise by parents of a child's ability before people and undue pressure for him to perform can be very embarrassing to him if he is shy or ego inflating if he responds to it and, in either case, damaging to his personality. You will do well to guard against this error.

The role of you as parents, as I see it, is to encourage the childen to enjoy their hobbies and to be faithful in developing their musical skills. Give them every advantage of preparation within your means, then when they are asked to perform—and they will be, never fear—help them to respond naturally and with poise and not to seek to be coaxed.

Naomi Will

again motivates the treatment of injured soldiers. "The objective of all hospitalization is to return a maximum number of casualties to full duty within a minimum period" (page 32).

"A soldier must be moved no farther to the rear than that point where he can receive medical care required for return to battle" (page 22).

Military objectives must overrule the needs of wounded men. "The movement of troops and supplies may halt the movement of wounded" (page 31).

"Preferential medical support is given to combat elements that have the more important missions" (page 25).

All conscientious objectors entering into the army must reconcile with their conscience that it is their primary duty to serve as an instrument towards more effective combatant operation of the army.

The conference with the officials in the Pentagon establishes several very clear principles.

1. The primary purpose of the medical corps is not that of saving lives, but removing every obstacle which so easily is created through wounded and suffering soldiers in the pursuit of the army's assignment to destroy the enemy.

2. A conscientious objector who, on the basis of his personal relationship with Christ, considers it inconsistent to participate in the conflict of the army must face the issue that in spite of personal interpretations which he may attach to his participation in war as a member of the medical service, from the standpoint of the army he is considered part of the combatant operation.

3. The request made for provisions of a possibility to serve in a noncombatant capacity as civilians conflicts with the dual status of the civilian and military law. Because of these principles, the army cannot consider the possibility of such arrangement.

4. The military oath (as well as the induction ceremony) is an acceptance of the combatant status as part of the army and thereby transfers an individual from the position as a civilian into the structural organization, aim and purpose of the armed forces, whether he himself is willing to admit such status or not.

Books are reviewed here as a service to the church. A review does not necessarily constitute an unqualified recommendation. Purchase can be made through the Brethren Publishing House, Elgin, Illinois. Titles recommended for church libraries are marked with an asterisk (*).—Editor.

The Task of Christian Education. D. Campbell Wyckoff. Westminster, 1955. 172 pages. $2.75

The author does a good job in clarifying the theory, philosophy and practice of Christian education. He states, "The aim in Christian education is to nurture the Christian life . . . such nurture involves Christian instruction, the redemption of the individual, and the redemption of society." He insists that mere religion is not enough; the goal is the life in Christ. He sees a content of Christian faith and Bible that must be taught and lays down sound principles for the teaching of the Bible. Part III of the book deals with the transformation of personality and Part IV with such specific concerns as planning the curriculum; the development and selection of effective methods; and the location of responsibility for the process of Christian education in the individual, the home, the church, the community and the schools. The list of ten books which the author regards as the best out of hundreds which he has examined for covering the whole general field of Christian education —only one book representing a given topic, area, or need—is one of the extremely valuable features of the book.—C. Ernest Davis.

Complete Home Book of Money-Making Ideas. Douglas Lurton. Hanover House, 1954. 496 pages. $3.95.

Stretching the family income is a deep concern to many families just now. Books such as this one bring a wealth of ideas to those who want to increase their funds while working in the home. Older adults who seek to add to their post-retirement income will find authoritative information here. Mothers with growing children who want to help financially but do not want to leave their children to the care of others will find an abundance of ideas.

The Growth of the Kingdom

fifth column, spy, secret agent and infiltration have only an evil connotation in our minds. However, the method of operation which they name is the method by which fundamental good increases in the earth. Infiltration is bad because it hides what ought to be out in the open. Leaven is good and because of its very nature grows quietly in the hearts of men.

Let your actions, words, manner express the right spirit. Set them afloat upon the wide, wide sea. You may lose all trace of them. You may never see the good merchandise they return to port, but they are in God's care. To change the figure from sea to land, they are sown in a soil meant to make them multiply!

It is our lack of faith in God which makes us zealous to measure and contain the fruit of our labors in terms of institutional growth. What eludes our institutional net may easily be the more important part of the harvest. Our measurable gains are good. We are grateful for them. But the leavening power of the gospel ranges far beyond these ordered ranks, and harvests appear where no one knew the seed was sown.

The parable of the leaven is the perfect word for a time like ours. The forces that contend in our world are titanic. Their weapons are cosmic. The issues are infinitely complex. The time for deliberation is short. What can a man do? Surely it is an error to say that he can do nothing. Each of us can hide in the meal, which is the world, a bit of God's leaven. And when we remember that the meal is fitted to be leavened, and that leaven was made to grow in the meal, the prospect is by no means wholly dark.

KINGDOM GLEANINGS

Fifty thousand children in West Germany are still without parents they lost during the last period of World War II and the chaotic conditions of the aftermath. The Red Cross has already united ninety thousand lost children with parents or relatives.

In a resolution terming the future of the American Indian as "critical" the National Fellowship of Indian Workers recommended adoption of a long-range, bipartisan government policy on American Indian welfare. The Fellowship urged the government to appoint a commission, including Indian members, to conduct a study "from the viewpoint of Indian welfare," as the basis for forming national policy. The organization held its triennial conference recently in Estes Park, Colo.

The Central Committee of the World Council of Churches has unanimously adopted a proposal for the reduction of armaments under international inspection and the development of "methods for peaceful change to rectify existing injustices." The statement calls upon the United Nations to establish an international commission of scientists and technicians to identify essential scientific requirements for an adequate system. Dr. O. Frederick Nolde, director of the Commission of the Churches on International Affairs, a joint agency of the World Council and the International Missionary Council, presented the statement to the Central Committee.

Pocket Testament League workers have visited fifteen camps in which are held the Mau Mau in Kenya Colony, Africa, in an intensive campaign of Scripture distribution and mass evangelization. They have held forty-two meetings and distributed Scriptures to nearly sixty-two thousand detainees and warders and also had the privilege of preaching to and distributing Gospels among the African guards and European officials of the camps. The significance lies in the fact that the gospel message and Scripture portions will be carried back to the families and communities as the detainees are screened and released.

Western European church leaders are exploring the possibilities of setting up a permanent organization through which European churches can work together in developing "responsible Christian attitudes" towards economic and social changes on the continent. "The churches must take account of the great economic and social changes now in progress in Europe," Sir Kenneth Grubb, chairman of the Churches on International Affairs, told his colleagues at a two-day Conference of Western European Churchmen. He said that the churches have a responsibility to explain to their members the significance of these changes and their challenge to the individual Christian's life.

Heifer Project, Inc., had one of its biggest months in July. Two hundred eighty-eight heifers were sent to Germany; one shipment was composed of "all Michigan" cattle collected by a Brethren layman and a Congregational and an E & R minister. Nineteen heifers and one bull went to Greece and twenty heifers to Japan, the first cattle shipment to that place since 1948. Heifer Project has shipped to date eight thousand head of cattle to twenty-six different countries.

Minneapolis church, Minn., fiftieth anniversary on Sunday, Oct. 9. Bro. William M. Beahm, dean of Bethany Biblical Seminary, Chicago, Ill., will be the guest speaker at the morning and evening services. There will also be an afternoon program following a fellowship dinner. The congregation is especially eager to have present as many of the charter members as possible.

Chiques church, Pa., home-coming, Sunday, Sept. 11. There will be morning and afternoon services.

Juniata College

"School Administrator succeeds school administrator" as Joseph W. Howe, supervising principal of the Burlington high school, N. J., took over the official duties of president of Juniata College's national alumni association from Telford B. Blough, supervising principal of the Conemaugh Township Joint Schools, Davidsville, Pa. Dr. Howe took over his new duties on June 4 at the annual alumni dinner held at the college.

A record high of $65,340 has been contributed to the Juniata alumni fund this year to bolster the college's ten-year "Build Juniata" program which has a goal of two and a half million dollars. Gifts this year totaled $137,409. Nearly 50 per cent of the total gifts was given by 1,125 alumni and friends through the alumni fund.

A group of nine young people from Holland were guests on the Juniata campus for two weeks beginning July 29. They participated in college activities, attending classes, eating in the dining hall and living in the dormitories. Under the auspices of the Experiment in International Living, the group spent a month living as members of separate families in a given community, a second month in an informal trip, and these two weeks at Juniata College. There are twenty-three groups of young people from eight different countries spending time in the United States.

The Pennsylvania School of Alcohol Studies held a five-day session on the campus at Juniata from the 11th to the 15th of July. The Rev. Norman Dettra took over duties of the dean of the school, Dr. Maynard Sparks, who was unable to attend the session.

The annual summer term at Juniata College opened with eighty-four students registered for the first five-week session, from June 20 to July 23. Men outnumber women sixty to twenty-four in the summer enrollment. Forty-one of the eighty-four were listed as resident students. For the second term, July 25 to August 26, sixty-six students registered.

Two summer schools were offered at Juniata College in co-operation with the Eastern Region of the Church of the Brethren. A workshop was held from July 31 to Aug. 5, for home and family life workers, workers with children and workers with junior highs. The Bethany summer extension school for ministers, church school teachers, and music leaders was held Aug. 1 to 6, with President Paul Robinson in charge. Bro. Robinson and Bro. David J. Wieand taught courses.

La Verne College

La Verne College received the good word from the Western College Association in June that the college had been given full accreditation by that regional association. The college has long been accredited by the California State Department of Education and its graduates have been accepted by the many graduate colleges.

The 1955 summer session enrollment reached a total of 217 during the regular six weeks' term. This compares with 219 last year and 140 in the 1953 session. The two weeks' postsession which included seminars in international relations and current social issues in education enrolled forty-seven persons.

A gift of $6,000 has been received from the George Henry Mary Educational Trust of Los Angeles for student scholarships during the 1955-56 college year. This is the fifth consecutive year the college has been recognized by the Mary Trust, but this is the largest gift ever received.

Business Manager Virgil Wilkinson spent the week of July 24-30 in a college business management workshop at Omaha University as the recipient of a Carnegie Corporation scholarship.

The opening convocation at the college will be held on the evening of Wednesday, Sept. 14, at 8:00. Clarence Bowman, pastor of the Church of the Brethren in San Diego, will be the speaker. The convocation will also be the occasion of commencement exercises for those who have completed requirements for graduation since the June 2 commencement.

Other dates marking the opening of the college year include the faculty conference, Sept. 6 and 7; student leaders' workshop, Sept. 8-10; new student day, Sept. 12; and the first chapel service on Sept. 20 with President Fasnacht speaking.

The new course in social studies to be required of all sophomores, United States History and Institutions, will be taught by Mr. James Russell Davis, a candidate for the doctor's degree in history at the University of Southern California. Mr. Davis has also been a minister in the Evangelical United Brethren church. Mrs. Esther Biays, former housemother at York College (EUB) in Nebraska will succeed Mrs. Mae Heiny as housemother of Miller Hall.

News and Comment From Around the World

Negro Clergy Ask President to Back Up Antisegregation

A delegation of 27 Negro clergymen, representing the 8,000,000 members of churches affiliated with the National Fraternal Council of Churches, called on President Eisenhower to back up the Supreme Court's decision outlawing segregation in schools. The clergymen asked the President to insist that no Federal aid be given to schools, hospitals, public housing projects or recreation areas that practice racial discrimination.

Tablet With Genesis 1: 1 in Cornerstone of Office Building

A pottery tablet containing the first verse of the Book of Genesis in more than forty languages has been encased in the cornerstone of the office building being built in Cincinnati by the Proctor and Gamble Company. Designed to give future archeologists and language scholars a key to 20th century civilization, it is believed that repetition of the same words in many languages will permit the deciphering of tongues which may be lost or forgotten hundreds of thousands of years from now.

Italy Receives 25,000 Chicks

Twenty-five thousand chicks, the gifts of American churchmen and hatcheries, found new homes in the countryside of Italy in June. Heifer Project secured this contribution of poultry which will be given to Italian farm families who need high producing chickens. A plan whereby first recipients return fertile eggs for hatching and redistribution to other farmers will be followed. Long distance chick flights are possible because newly hatched chicks can live for seventy-two hours without feed or water. During that time, temperature regulated airplanes can successfully transport chicks thousands of miles.

To Seek Stronger Laws Against Obscene Material

Senator Estes Kefauver has said that the Senate Judiciary Committee's subcommittee on juvenile delinquency will seek stronger Federal laws against obscene material. He said, "We have been derelict in dealing with the pornography business at all levels of government, especially the Federal level." At the hearings, Dr. George W. Henry, psychiatrist and professor at Cornell University College of Medicine, testified that there is a definite relationship between the spread of suggestive books and pictures and the rise of juvenile delinquency.

Urge Government Take a Religious Census in 1956

Protestant, Roman Catholic and Jewish leaders are urging a nationwide census of religious bodies next year. Such surveys were made every ten years from 1906 through 1936, but Congress did not provide funds for a census in 1946. Church leaders have talked with Robert W. Burgess, Census Bureau director. The bureau has not yet decided whether to ask Congress for the more than $1,000,000 needed for a religious survey.

World Balance Must Be Restored Says Mrs. Pandit

In an address to students of fifty nations at Laughborough College in England, Mrs. Pandit, India's High commissioner to the United Kingdom, described the large areas of the world that are yet underdeveloped and on the border line of existence. She said that there are large areas of the world today where the basic needs of human beings have not been fulfilled despite the United Nations' Charter. On the other hand, there are countries which are prosperous and have reached the peak of their prosperity. She said, "We must find a way in which the balance of the world can be restored."

West Losing Battle for Minds of Middle East

Dr. Charles Malik, ambassador from Lebanon to the United States, recently stated that the West's battle for the minds of the Middle East is being lost. He cited two outstanding impressions gathered while on a visit to his homeland this year. First, that in many Middle Eastern countries papers will not print anything critical of communism, yet are full of the adverse comment on the West and its way of life. Second, that the best sellers in the bookstalls of the Middle East are those books which are slanted toward the theory of communism. In suggesting possible reasons for this startling shift to the left within the last two years, Dr. Malik thinks the most likely reason is that "the West really cares but does not know how to alleviate the situation."

Religious Broadcasting Over Finland's Radio

The Finnish radio which is closely connected with the state has in the last year used five per cent of its time for religious broadcasts. Most programs of a religious nature are arranged by a special radio committee appointed by the Council for Parish Work of the Finnish Church. During the year sixty-one morning services have been broadcast as well as evening services on church festivals. A new type of evening religious program is the so-called Home Evenings With the Gospel, during which the microphone visits different homes where family discussions are focused on Christian problems. A Gallup poll has shown that the religious programs on the radio have a very large number of listeners.

Amish Bishops Ask Social Security Exemption

Seven bearded Amish bishops recently went to Washington to ask that their members be removed from the "temptation" of Social Security benefits. It was the first time in the twenty-year history of federal social security that a group had flatly asked to be excluded from the benefit payments.

The bishops, head of the Old Order Amish Mennonite church, presented a petition signed by 14,000 persons, representing 90 per cent of their members, requesting exemption from the social security payments on retirement. The bishops said their church has been in Pennsylvania almost 300 years, since William Penn invited them to settle there, and promised them exemption from military service and government control. And now what they want is exemption from taking social security benefits.

United Church Center Planned in New York City

A united church center will be constructed on Morningside Heights in New York as a national headquarters for Protestant and Eastern Orthodox church groups. The structure will house the offices of the National Council of Churches and a number of its thirty member communions. The proposed building can accommodate at least 3,000 staff-workers. John D. Rockefeller, Jr., in addition to offering the site, is willing to pay for a modified Gothic limestone exterior which will harmonize with other non-commercial structures nearby.

Liquor Outlets Outnumber Grocery Stores in U. S.

Outlets for the sale of alcoholic beverages now outnumber grocery stores in the United States, according to the Methodist Board of Temperance. Latest Federal licensing figures disclose that there are 273,454 establishments that hold retail liquor licenses and 159,282 more that hold retail malt (beer and ale) licenses. Compared to this the U. S. Department of Commerce reports 358,000 grocery stores in the country.

Billy Graham Visits World Council of Churches

In connection with a meeting in Geneva, Switzerland, Billy Graham called on the General Secretary of the World Council of Churches and its staff. He said that he deeply appreciated the privilege of being welcomed by the World Council. He said, "During the Assembly at Evanston last year, when I was an invalid, I was deeply sorry that I was not able to be there. During that time the great Evanston meeting was in my prayers every day. I am sure that in the area of evangelism we can be ecumenical. The evangelistic emphasis makes it possible for ministers to work together."

Report Nine Per Cent Increase in Juvenile Delinquency

Juvenile delinquency increased nine per cent during the past year, according to the Children's Bureau of the U. S. Department of Health, Education and Welfare. Preliminary court reports indicate that 475,000 children were involved in offenses against the law in 1954. One child out of every forty-one in the ten-to-seventeen-age brackets got into trouble with the police. Between 1948 and 1954 the number of delinquency cases reported in court records increased fifty-eight per cent.

Bible Society Publishes Illustrated New Testament

A new, illustrated edition of the New Testament has been published by the American Bible Society. Designed to give both the Bible scholar and the ordinary reader a new insight into the life and times of Jesus and his apostles, it was produced by rotogravure in modern picture book style and titled The Good News. The edition contains 566 photographs, 9 maps and 6 diagrams to illustrate and clarify various portions of the New Testament text in the light of recent archaeological and historical studies.

First Protestant Press Conference Since 1928

For the first time since 1928, a German Protestant Press Conference was held at Kassel in June. It was attended by about 300 press representatives. The conference stressed the fact that the press which today is read by over ten million people had for many years been confronted with new problems. The renewal within the church, the increased responsibility of Christians for public life and the stronger emphasis on the task of the laity in the world have given the church press a new appearance. According to a survey presented at this conference, the Evangelical Press Service in Germany reaches more than eleven million readers. The church press has a total circulation of about four million readers.

Chart Study of Evangelism

Setting up of a special commission to study the need, nature and purpose of evangelism for contemporary America was approved by the General Board of the National Council of Churches. The aims of the study commission as proposed by the department of evangelism would include finding out what are the present-day spiritual needs of the American people, how the people can be reached with the gospel, and how the gospel must be presented, interpreted and applied in view of changing social conditions.

News Briefs

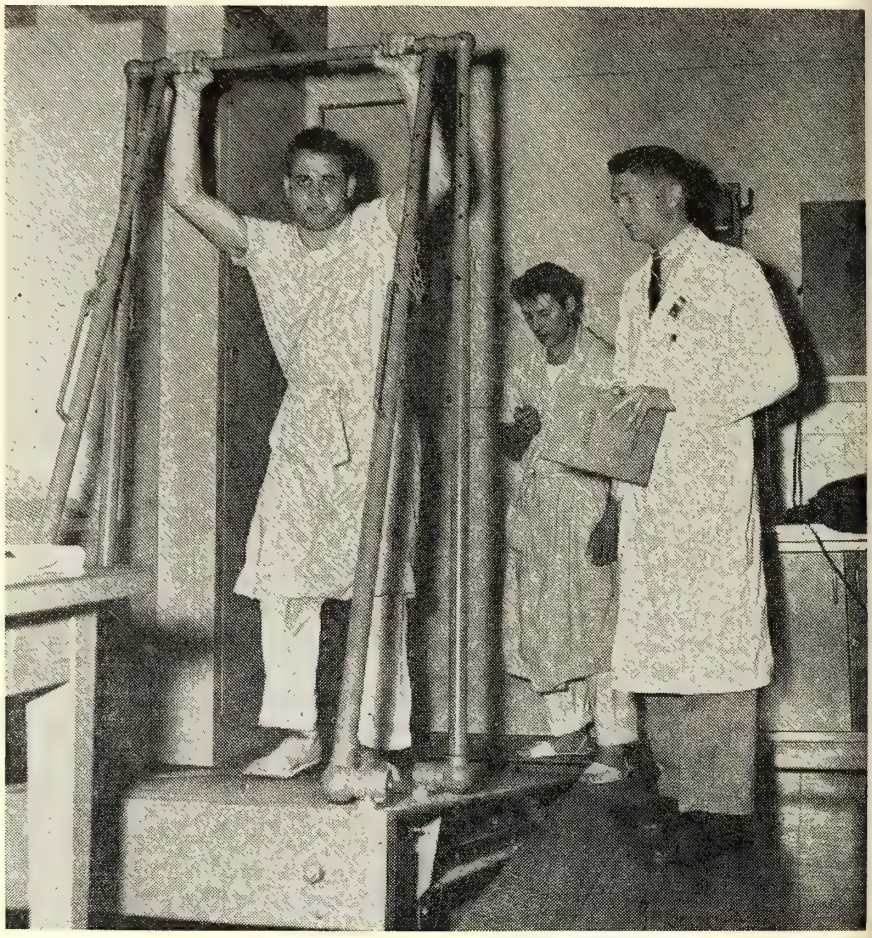
Contributions for missionary work reached a new high in churches of the Christian and Missionary Alliance last year, with a per capita giving of $46.68. The missionary giving totaled $2,700,000 from 1,042 churches. This was in addition to support given to local church work.

Dr. Edgar Chandler, associate director of the World Council of Churches' Division of Inter-Church Aid and Service to Refugees, said that the agency is confident that the rate of refugee resettlement will be stepped up during the coming year.

Membership in the Congregational Christian Churches in the United States has increased to a total of 1,310,000. Giving to benevolences last year totaled $9,525,000, while expenditures by local churches on their own programs rose to a total of $43,000,000. Twenty-five new churches were completed and dedicated, and during the year fifty-two churches with less than fifty members each were closed.

Quotes in the News

Dr. John R. Brobeck, professor of physiology at the University of Pennsylvania's medical school: "Science is changing. One of the results is that a scientist is no longer able to say honestly that something is impossible. He can only say it is improbable. If we could identify the power of God in the same way we study other forms of power, it seems to me we would see miracles every time they happened."



Judge Julius H. Miner of the Circuit Court, Chicago: "Criminals are not born. They are reared in an era which has discarded morality. They are victims of spiritual starvation. Irreligion has obviously become the major contributing factor to our national juvenile crisis. A home built on religious concepts is a fortress against crime. We go into church wavering, and go out strengthened and inspired. Home training can never offer an adequate substitute in the religious education of a child for the planned instruction of the Sunday school."

J. Edgar Hoover, director of the Federal Bureau of Investigation: "The youth who has experienced old-fashioned Christian training and discipline in the home, and has received sound, efficient Bible teaching in the Sunday school has been given a sword and buckler against temptation. With every child who is taught to accept Christian ethics as his guide to daily living, secular materialism as a national philosophy is dealt a crippling blow."

Dr. Walter W. Van Kirk: "I can't understand how otherwise intelligent people can believe the kind of falsehoods that are circulating about the UN. It was conceived at Yalta by the Soviet Union as a clever device to hamstring the U.S.A.; I hear that all over the country. In reality, there is not a single crucial UN issue in the last ten years that has been decided in favor of the Soviet Union."

The Pool of Bethesda

William Miller, Jr.

National Institutes of Health

As part of a study that may yield clues to the control of heart disease one volunteer exercises on a treadmill while another assists the research scientist

THE National Institutes of Health is truly a modern version of the ancient pool of Bethesda, told about in the Bible in the fifth chapter of John. To NIH come people who have all the chronic diseases known to man, with the hope and faith that they might find relief and possibly a cure for their ills. If this can't be had at NIH, there are few other places to which these persons can turn for help. These people have faith in the doctors there and allow them to try new treatments and medicines on them in hope of finding solutions to the problems of chronic disease which could possibly lead to a cure for them or for others in the future. Here the battle of faith goes on continuously for these patients. Many times "blind alleys" are entered, but as a result of this enlightened trial-and-error process may other times avenues are opend to the researcher in finding answers to the questions which baffle those who are fighting to learn the cause and control of many chronic diseases.

Into this battle of faith go many 1-W men who volunteer as normal control patients. The volunteer joins the team of a doctor, nurse, technician and patient in fighting man's common enemy, disease. His job is to stay normal so that the researchers may run tests on him to obtain normal data with which data from diseased patients may be compared and correlated. These tests involve diets of all kinds including 90% rice, low sodium, low phosphorus, high phosphorus, low fat, high fat and those containing certain amino acids. Tests which are run on the 1-W man periodically include blood samplings, infusions, intravenous and intramuscular injections of medications.

In my experience as a "normal control" at Bethesda, I have found numerous occasions to witness to the peace testimony. Daily I talk with other patients, doctors, nurses and lab technicians, and they are curious about why I am there and why I volunteered for such a duty. There I have the "opening" I need to tell others of my beliefs. My testimony is usually heard by receptive ears.

Normal control patients are very necessary to medical research and the need for them will be present for a long time to come. The information gained from one 1-W's contribution to the program amounts to "a drop in the bucket" of the reservoir of data that needs to be collected to make possible the drawing of conclusions. But that one 1-W's participation is very necessary and vital to the researchers at NIH.

Brethren Tours for 1955

This is your chance to travel abroad with others of similar interests and with the assistance of an experienced tour director.

There is still space available in the Brethren tour group which will visit Europe this fall. Anyone interested in receiving information concerning this tour should write immediately to L. W. Shultz, Milford, Ind.

A Healthy "Patient"

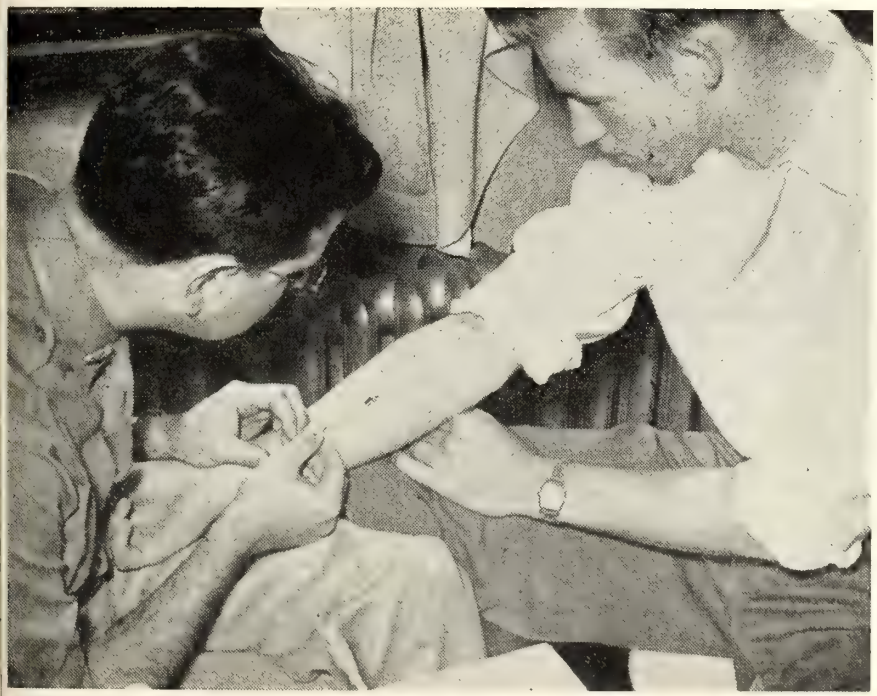
BEING a perfectly healthy "patient" was a new experience for Ruth Hepner of Hamilton, Mont., when she became a resident of the Clinical Center at the National Institutes of Health in Bethesda several months ago. And Ruth says it gives her food for thought to find herself a full-fledged member of a team of physicians and scientists.

A member of the Church of the Brethren, Ruth volunteered her services to science for one year. She feels that her stint at the Clinical Center is a service to mankind.

"This is full-time Christian service," she says, "and more along the material line of doing something for humanity—not just the saving of souls."

Actually, Ruth has helped to save souls, too. She conducted services for some time in the Skid Row section of Chicago, and she plans to be a missionary.

Right now Ruth is taking part in a study on arteriosclerosis, or hardening of the arteries. In this disease the normally smooth artery lining is narrowed by patchy deposits which consist largely of fatty substances, especially one called "cholesterol." Clots may form in these narrowed arteries and cause death.



Helping scientists determine the relationship between a stepped-up thyroid gland and cholesterol, Ruth has been taking hormones manufactured by the thyroid. Three times a day she swallows a pill slightly smaller than an aspirin tablet, and she has contributed 125 small samples of her blood for tests.

While aiding science, Ruth has also found time to pursue some personal projects. She is learning to paint with oils, to knit and to do leatherwork. She takes part in various patient activities and occasionally joins in a short sightseeing trip to Washington, D.C.

It is too soon for anything significant to have come out of the research in which Ruth has participated. When it will come, no one can predict. But Ruth has always been interested in medicine, anyway, and is quite happy about the whole thing.

Eventually, doctors may be able to prevent fatty deposits that narrow the arteries of the body. To accomplish this, they need persons like Ruth Hepner.

At Home and Abroad

NEW WINDSOR

The arrival of the thirty-eight members of the June unit completed the biggest year in the history of Brethren Volunteer Service. There are hundreds of young people in the church that are willing to serve and there are hundreds of places in the United States and in the rest of the world where their services are needed. It is up to us as Brethren people to bring the two together for the ongoing work of Christ's kingdom.

PUERTO RICO

Bible school started off with an enrollment of 123 pupils for a two-week period. Classes closed July 1 with a program and party in the morning.

Helen and Robert Duemler from Kirkenwood, Mo., arrived June 26 for a two months' stay at the project. We welcome them and hope they enjoy their work with us.

AUSTRIA

Twenty-six members of the 1955 international work camp tour entered Austria from Italy on July 1 in the second week of their three-week tour. They were met in Villach by John Kreps and Kenneth Sheaffer of the World Council of Churches project at Tenschach and heard a briefing on Austria from a member of the U.S. Information Service office in Graz. On July 3 the group arrived in Vienna, where they were met by Harry Berkey of the Vienna PAX unit and Don Durnbaugh. This group spent July 4 in Linz, where they viewed various Brethren Service activities before leaving for Salzburg.

Distributions of 150 washcloths and 100 towels were made to each of the administrations of refugee camps in Neukirchen, Thalheim and Ried.

This thank-you letter was received recently from one of the camp directors: "We herewith send you a distribution list covering your donation of 29 baby packages for the camps 1000 and 1001. I thank you cordially and also for the recipients of these useful gifts."

Marvin Blickenstaff, Brethren worker in the Wels World Council of Churches office, reports that American visas were issued recently for two more families of five members each. It was expected that fifteen to eighteen more persons would emigrate from Austria to the U. S. before the end of July.

John Kreps reports from Tenschach that the boondoggle "Bugs" which Prof. S. M. Dell taught them to make while he was there seem to be a big hit with the children in the neighborhood.

The seeds which were distributed earlier this spring are producing vegetables with which the neighbors are well satisfied and pleased.

Challenge People to Use the Church Library

SOME churches have invested considerable sums of money in good books for their church libraries. Then they are disappointed when the books are not used as they should be. This need not happen!

Church libraries may provide books for several groups of people within the congregation and for various purposes:

(1) Church leaders and workers (resource books, leaders' guidance materials, inspiration).

(2) Parents (study and inspiration).

(3) Congregation as a whole (leisure time reading, study, inspiration).

(4) Youth.

(5) Children.

Ruth Lehman of Nickerson, Kansas, in reporting on the use of a district traveling library for the women's work groups of Southwestern Kansas, lifts up a number of very practical suggestions that could well be put into use by each local church library. Read the account carefully and note especially how motivation was built up in her local church so there was a real demand for the available books. Mrs. Lehman also lifts up the values of a systematic way of caring for the distribution of the books and for records.

The ideas mentioned in the following report are excellent for the traveling library for women's groups. They are just as excellent and applicable to any local church library for all groups within the church. Books provide a needed ministry in the church and when available should be used.—Editor

The Ministry of a Traveling Library

The district traveling library is a wonderful idea for local women's groups since it makes some of the best books and pamphlets available to a great many women. But, like any other worth-while project, it needs some "behind the scene" work. Women need to be sold on the idea of reading the books once they arrive and they must find them readily available whenever they attend a church function of any kind.

In our local church, we find it helpful to mention the books frequently before they arrive, reminding the women that we will have them for a limited time only. As soon as possible after we receive the traveling library, we present the books to the women, telling them a bit about each one, emphasizing anything we feel might be of special interest. Again during morning worship services, a special announcement is made on several occasions, with the pastor or women's work chairman giving some of the highlights of special books which they feel might interest the young people and men of the church. Actually, we find that quite a number of books are read by people other than the women's group.

In order to avoid loss or misplacement of books, we type a list of book titles and authors, with ample space after each for a number of names. This list, with attached pencil, is posted on the bulletin board in the church vestibule where it is easily accessible to everyone attending any church function. The books are placed in an upright position between book ends on a table below the bulletin board. In this location any interested person can hardly fail to notice the books upon leaving the church. As a result of the interest created, some of the books and pamphlets are in almost constant demand.

Each person is responsible for writing his name in the proper space when taking a book and checking it off when returning it. This prevents any mix-ups and avoids a frantic search for missing books when it is time to send them on to the next church. We encourage our readers to return the books as soon as possible, for the two month period allowed us passes very rapidly and we want every interested person to have an opportunity to read as many as possible.

Brotherhood Program Exhibit

YOU AND YOUR CHURCH Teach Kingdom Values, Witness to Christian Beliefs and Extend the Church Fellowship through the Brotherhood Program. Hundreds of Brethren attending district and regional meetings this summer and fall will see illustrations of this program through means of a portable exhibit which made its debut at Annual Conference. Accompanying this pictorial display will be free literature interpreting the work of the Brotherhood.

The exhibit will appear at only a number of conferences, since many districts hold meetings at the same time. When folded the exhibit measures 5" x 24" x 48" and weighs sixty-two pounds. Shipping costs are paid by the General Brotherhood Board. The exhibit may be secured with or independent of the Brethren Publishing House sales exhibits which have been a part of many district conferences for several years. Write to the General Brotherhood Board, 22 S. State St., Elgin, Ill.

library was organized, our district president kept a check on its success by pasting an envelope for individual comments on the inside back cover of each book. She also made space available for names of those who had read the book from each church in the district. This information helped considerably in the cabinet's selection of new books for the following year. For several years now our district has had two separate groups of entirely different books traveling simultaneously. Under this plan, each church has one of the traveling libraries two months of each year.

Our books are chosen carefully with the various needs of women in mind. There will be some on the devotional life, a few on child care, problems of discipline, family life, perhaps one or two on personal problems, some excellent biographies, some of simple inspiration. We have felt in our local church that the district traveling library is a truly worth-while project, for it makes available to our women so many excellent books that wouldn't otherwise be read.—Ruth Lehman.

Equipment for Religious Education is the emphasis of the special July-August issue of the International Journal of Religious Education. A dozen articles and many pictures present numerous practical helps for every church as it considers the adequacy of its equipment. Items covered range from toys for the nursery to storage cupboards for supplies and from coat and hat racks to audio-visual equipment. The small church will find a wealth of space-saving hints. Copies are available from the Brethren Publishing House, Elgin, Ill. 35c a copy.

MEN'S WORK

Projects for the Year

FOUR projects were chosen for the year. One or more of these projects should be promoted by each local, district and regional group.

1. Road Signs and Decals

These are uniform signs and are obtained from the Brethren Publishing House, Elgin, Ill. We suggest that each local group purchase a quantity of decals and distribute them among their members. They sell at one dollar per dozen. It goes without saying that every local church should direct people to their church by the use of these artistic and beautiful uniform signs.

2. The Ten Dollar Club

This is proving to be the greatest home mission church builder that our church has known. Individuals and groups should join this club. Join and help to build our Brotherhood. Write to the General Brotherhood Board for information.

3. Daily Bible Reading

How can men know His will without studying His Word? More concerning this will appear at various times throughout the year. Guidance for certain seasons will also be given. Start today and get commitments for Bible reading from your men.

4. The Christian College

The Christian college faces hard days if the men of the church do not rally to its support in a larger way than they have in the past. Less than one per cent of our income goes to support our church colleges and in return we get ninety-five per cent of our church leaders. In what other field can you invest and get such returns?

The Library Listening Post

A Doorway to Knowledge, a play by Mrs. H. D. Brubaker, is available from the Christian Education Commission, General Brotherhood Board, 22 S. State St., Elgin, Ill., free of charge.

This play inspired by stories told by Miss Florida Waite at the Elgin School for Librarians a number of years ago was written to be used as an introduction to a discussion period on the book ministry of the local church. If you do not have a church library, here is an excellent opportunity and a unique way to begin the "ball rolling."

Good News of Garkida

CENTURIES ago the ruler of India, Rama of Benares, discovered that he had leprosy, abdicated his throne and fled to the forests, where, according to legend, he lived on the seed of the Taraktogenos Kurzii tree, which yields chaulmoogra oil, and was cured. Until very recent times this oil and its derivatives were the only truly practicable remedy for the disease, inadequate and slow-acting as they were. Since 1941 the sulfone drugs have revolutionized the treatment of leprosy. Never before could the victims of this disease be offered more than hope of arrestment—now many, many cases are permanently arrested.

But the Christian church has, from the first century, concerned itself with this problem, following Christ's example and in obedience to his command.

Today the Church of the Brethren at Garkida in Nigeria, West Africa, is ministering to some 1,700 sufferers within the colony. This colony or leprosarium includes a hospital, wards, operating room, laboratory, church, also several chapels, two school buildings, workshops, toolhouse and cottages (round mud huts where the patients who are able live in native style with some new ideas on sanitation). Properly trained families need not fear infection from one sick member.

Garkida began in 1929 as a dispensary with a handful of very advanced cases. More recently the settlement has become a pioneer in the establishment of segregation villages which afford an easy and inexpensive way of diagnosing and treating a far greater number of cases than could be handled in the colony hospital. These villages are developed outside the colony proper. The idea is to gather leprosy victims and their immediate families into villages voluntarily. Twenty generally warring tribes have been persuaded to gather their sick each in his own segregation village in the vicinity of Garkida. So successful has been this experiment that other missions are doing likewise. In 1948-1949 one hundred six segregation villages had been established in Nigeria; by 1953 there were 202.

The Garkida colony has more than 400 children with leprosy, who are given not only the most painstaking medical attention (and fortunately children respond quickly and most favorably to the drugs), but schooling and Christian training as well. The disease is not hereditary, but is usually contracted in childhood. Babies born in the colony are separated from their mothers and sent to the nursery to keep them safe from infection.

Leland S. Brubaker, executive secretary of Foreign Missions, giving paper of release to "cured" patient of Garkida leprosarium

Healthy children of patients are cared for in a children's home, and their education and Christian upbringing are a part of the mission work and goes a long way in relieving the minds of their parents.

The Garkida colony succors the minds and souls of the patients. This is very important in dealing with a disease which in its advanced stages ravages the soul as well as the body so savagely. Again Christian nurture and work—all ambulatory patients work—farming, especially the production of peanuts, soy beans and fruit; stock-raising, carpentry, masonry, well-digging, also nursing and laboratory work—all these combat the sense of dejection, despair and being outcast that have plagued people with leprosy through the ages. Patients are paid for their work and thus self-supporting and self-respecting.

About 200 colony residents are baptized; over six hundred attend chapel services. Bible teaching is daily routine. The native chief at Garkida is a Christian. The pastor of the church is an African prince, Mai Sule.

Leprosy is one of the oldest diseases in history. Egyptian records making mention of it are older than the Old Testament writings concerning it. The leprosy of the Bible probably included other skin diseases besides what is now know as leprosy. But the germ mycrobacterium leprae was not discovered and isolated until 1874 by Gerhardt Hansen, in Norway, where the disease was still prevalent. For this reason leprosy has justly become known as Hansen's disease. Doctors, nurses and all who work with its victims agree that the name Hansen's disease might well be used in hospitals and colonies, and should become familiar to the general public, inasmuch as the term leprosy has an entirely unwarranted stigma attached to it. The word leper which is even worse, should never be used by anyone.

Hansen's disease usually attacks the skin and the peripheral nerve fibre. Commonly contracted in childhood from parents or other members of the family who are of the infective type, the disease may manifest itself within a few weeks or it may lie dormant twenty years or longer.

Hardly too much can be said for the sulfones. Work with these drugs began in the United States in 1941. The results were so gratifying that their use soon spread all over the world. Now experience has convinced doctors that the parent drug of this group, diamino-diphenyl-sulphone, DDS for short, is the most efficacious. It is easily administered in tablet form and is cheap. About eighty cents worth will be sufficient for the treatment of one adult for one year, and generally doses are given twice a week. The simplicity of the DDS technic makes the outpatient centers and the segregation villages possible and practical.

There are probably ten million people in the world suffering from Hansen's disease and to date less than two per cent are receiving any medical care whatsoever. Asia and Africa account for by far the greatest number of sufferers. Some authorities believe that Nigeria has the highest incidence of this disease in the world.

But the colony proper and hospitalization of advanced cases is still very important. Long-developed Hansen's disease is painful and dreary. The healthy color of the skin becomes pale in spots; skin, flesh and bones waste away; the extremities become numb; the patient may become crippled; paralysis is common; blindness, deafness, mutism, difficulty in swallowing and attaining sufficient nourishment are not uncommon results of the disease. And many more physical miseries could be added to the list. DSS clears up many of these tragedies, even when they are rather advanced. Other cases, where the drug will not suffice, yield in a truly wonderful manner to the fast developing technics of modern surgery. Horrible deformities and disfigurations are improved and alleviated when they are not actually cured. Paralysis of the hands, which, of course, renders the patient helpless and unable to earn a living, though the disease itself may have been completely arrested by the DDS may be overcome by surgery and exercising the fingers.

Today methods to prevent nerve damage, disuse stiffness and infec-

Briefs From the Home Mission Field

Tucson, Arizona. In this university city we Brethren have a small but vigorous and active fellowship group who are planning for the day when a congregation can be established. Dr. Arthur W. Cable of the Department of Speech in the University of Arizona is assuming an active role in leadership and planning. The Arizona Missionary Association of the Church of the Brethren, as well as the District of Arizona and Southern California, is giving careful guidance to the work.

Yuma, Arizona. This city also has a fine nucleus of Brethren who are giving consideration to the formation of a fellowship group which can ultimately develop into a congregation. Information comes that land for a church site and resources in finance are available. We watch with eager hope this possible development. The District Missionary Association and the district board are giving leadership here as well.

Boise, Idaho. The District Board of Idaho and Western Montana has purchased a church site in Boise. On it is located a house which has been furnished and is being used by the summer pastor, Carl Beckwith. Early reports of the survey being made indicate this to be a most promising opportunity for a growing development where a congregation can soon become a reality.

Pulaski, Virginia. A Wells campaign has just been completed in this home mission congregation which looks to relocation and church building early in 1956. According to early reports of the campaign, $45,000 has already been given in commitments to budget and building needs for the next one hundred fifty weeks. The goal had been set at $40,000. There is renewed interest, loyalty and eagerness resulting from the campaign.

Evangelism in Home Mission Churches. Some of our finest progress in evangelism is taking place in home mission churches. For instance, look at the following record of baptisms for March to June:

Flat Creek, Ky.,	9
Mud Lick, Ky.,	6
Lewistown, Pa.,	9
Covington, Wash.,	11

These are but four instances from the latest quarterly reports being received in the home missions office.

Dayton, Ohio (Kettering area). Pastor and Mrs. Richard N. Miller of the 1956 graduating class from Bethany are now located in this new and growing area of South Dayton, where a new congregation is being established by the Southern Ohio District. Many Brethren already live in this area and hundreds of new homes are being built there. A strong congregation should be the result.

Wichita, Kansas. The four districts of Kansas have decided to sponsor jointly a new church in Wichita. Survey work indicates the need for our second church in the city. It is hoped that pastoral leadership can be secured to begin the work yet this fall. The pooling of the resources of the entire state will give splendid undergirding to the work.

Northern California District. Surveys have been made in the Sacramento area in the new Larchmont Village and indications look good for the beginning of work at an early date.

In the Oakland area in the Pleasant Hill community there is also the possibility of a new place to initiate church development.

Northern Illinois and Wisconsin. The district has employed Bro. Matthew Meyer, under the summer pastoral plan, to survey the Westchester, Wheaton, Glen Ellyn and Rockford areas as to possible places for a new mission church. Plans are being developed to raise funds on a continuous plan, hoping to establish new congregations at regular intervals.

The Three Districts of Missouri. Resources of these three districts are being shared in a tri-district home mission development at Springfield (in the Southern district). Bro. Warren Shoemaker has been called to be pastor in the new development. A site with a parsonage has been purchased and the pastor is already on the field and at work. Real interest, enthusiasm and sacrificial sharing are being put into this work.

tion, the causes of paralysis, are problems that also are given great attention. The mind and will of the patient in keeping his hands busy are of great importance in the preservation of the health and use of the hands.

This may be said to hinge on an equally important side of life—the spiritual atmosphere of the leprosarium. The modern colony is a clean, neat collection of buildings and cottages, even picturesque native huts, with gardens, trees, and flowers, often cattle and goats to enhance the picture. Christian doctors, nurses, chaplains and other workers are prone to cheerfulness and goodwill in their every task, giving hope and courage to the sick; in as far as is humanly possible they that go into this high calling should reflect in their lives the spirit of Christ.

The financial support of the Garkida colony comes from American Leprosy Missions, Inc., aided by the Nigerian government. The Church of the Brethren and funds from the United Nations contributes the time and services of our missionaries. For the fiscal year, 1954-1955, the American Leprosy Missions will contribute $9,840. Through these combined efforts 298 patients were sent home as cured in the year ending March 31, 1954.

Besides maintenance funds American Leprosy Missions supplies drugs, hospital furniture and equipment. Christmas packages also come through this society. The presents are interesting to note and reflect the native culture and economic status. Everybody receives salt and soap. Clothes, baby clothes, pictures, mirrors, combs, English Bibles and easy Bible storybooks are distributed. The little Nigerian does not understand toys, even dolls, but balls are one exception. The ball game is universal.

At one time Hansen's disease was prevalent all over Europe. Segregation was a slow process, but after centuries of effort the disease was conquered in Western Europe. The American Indian never knew Hansen's disease. It was brought to the Western world by early Spaniards and Portuguese, later to a greater extent probably with the slave trade. In South America where the disease is not as prevalent as in Asia and Africa the leprosaria are mostly government run. In Asia and Africa also the governments are taking more and more responsibility for the control of the problem, and giving financial aid and large tracts of land for leprosaria. But this is far, very far, from saying that these governments are prepared or willing to do the actual work—medical treatment, nursing, training, care of children and care of the spiritual welfare of the victims. Often in government-maintained hospitals Christian doctors and nurses are employed to staff the institutions.

Inasmuch as not more than two per cent of the ten million victims are receiving medical care, about eight million are wandering around the backward parts of the world.

This is one of the great opportunities of the Christian church today!

our mother and daughter banquet.—Mrs. Alpha S. Roller, Harrisonburg, Va.

Mill Creek—We had a week of pre-Easter services with our communion on Sunday evening. Our services were conducted by Bro. Olen Landes of Harrisonburg, Va. Mrs. Joe Miller of the Linville Creek congregation was guest speaker at our mother and daughter banquet. We recently secured a sound projector for use in our church work. Our regular council met May 28. On Sunday morning, May 29, three of our local preachers, J. E. Seehorn, Wilbur Garber and Albert Burgess, were ordained to the eldership. These services were conducted by Paul H. Bowman of Timberville. This was an unusual service since Bro. Burgess had died suddenly on the morning of the service, but the service was carried on as if he were present. At the same service, Beverly Good was installed as minister of the church. Our Bible school was held in July. A number of our young people plan to attend Camp Bethel this summer. —Mrs. Eva Mundy, Port Republic, Va.

Second Virginia

Forest Chapel — Our church met in regular council with Elder Ernest Wampler in charge. The CBYF gave the play, By Thy Faith, in our church on Easter and later presented the play in the Barren Ridge church. Our pastor and his wife, Brother and Sister Byron Berkey, attended Annual Conference. We observed the One Great Hour of Sharing. The Clericus chorus of Bridgewater College gave a musical program at one of our morning services. Bro. Olen Landes of Harrisonburg will conduct our fall revival. One Sunday evening the ladies' aid society sponsored a missionary film. The men's work group is raising a heifer for relief. Our Bible school began June 6. We observed our love feast in May.—Mrs. B. J. Blessing, Crimora, Va.

Pleasant Hill—We have completed our ten-day revival meeting with Bro. Eugene H. Kahle of Danville, Va., as evangelist. We had a prayer hour each day and a fifteen-minute period each evening during our meetings. Several times during our services we had slides or films. Neighboring churches also provided special music at our services. As a result of these meetings, three new members were received by baptism and one by letter into our church fellowship. Our union vacation Bible school was held June 6-17.—Mrs. Leon Rankin, Crimora, Va.

Sangerville—Merle Crouse gave an interesting talk and showed slides of his experiences in Turkey. Bro. James Renz was also with us for a fellowship supper and a temperance message. The young people sponsored Carolyn Ikenberry who showed slides and talked about her year in Germany as an exchange student. Quarterly council was held with Elder I. J. Garber in charge. The women's work had a mother and daughter banquet with a covered dish supper and invited the neighboring church women. Mrs. E. A. Jordon, district home and family life director, was guest speaker for the occasion. Bro. Grant Simmons was ordained to the ministry in a service conducted by Bro. S. D. Glick. The children's department presented the Easter program, The Life of Our Savior. Our men's work had a father and son banquet with Bro. Rufus B. King of Bridgewater College as guest speaker. Shirley Zimmerman has entered BVS for a year. Five of our ladies attended the district aid meeting at Staunton. Evangelistic services were held in our church by Bro. Dewrey Fleishman of Boones Mill. Five were baptized into our church. Brother and Sister C. A. Click were delegates to Annual Conference.—Mrs. Victor M. Click, Bridgewater, Va.

Summit—Our church held its love feast on Good Friday. Seven babies and their parents were dedicated on Mother's Day. Bro. S. D. Glick was in charge of the installation service for our pastor, Bro.

Eglon, Maple Spring—Two deacons have been elected. Our CBYF group attended regional roundtable at Bridgewater, and won the district youth fellowship banner at the district roundtable at Kelley Chapel. The youth are sponsoring a Lord's Acre project. Several from our men's work group attended the district men's work meeting at Keyser, W. Va. A group from our church visited their congressmen concerning UMT. Several from our group attended the Spiritual Life Institute at Bridgewater. Twenty-four persons of our number participated in the peace conference at Petersburg, W. Va. The community Easter sunrise service was held in our church. We co-operated with the other churches of the community in the World Day of Prayer service. The Bridgewater special deputation team gave a musical program. A group from Crellin, Md., gave a musical program in our church. Our guest speakers have been Brethren Rufus King of Bridgewater and Don Ford. Three babies have been consecrated. Our pastor, Paul D. Crumley, attended National Camp Planners Conference en route to Annual Conference. Our Conference delegates were Jesse H. Harsh and Harold White. Delegates for district conference at Keyser, W. Va., are Rogers Fike, Harper Kidwell and Janet Waybright. Bro. Emmert Bittinger was evangelist for our meeting in July.—Charles E. Arnold, Oakland, Md.

Oak Grove—We assembled in council meeting April 5, with Moderator H. W. Peters in charge. A report was given concerning men's and women's work groups. Bro. John Bechtol was elected Annual Conference delegate and district conference delegates are Bro. Stern McDonald and Sister Mary Ellen Snyder. Bro. H. W. Peters was re-elected elder for another year. Bro. Howard A. Whitacre of Mechanicsburg, Pa., conducted our revival services July 10-17.—Bessie L. Moreland, Levels, W. Va.

Tear Coat—Our church celebrated the fifty-first anniversary of its organization with Bro. Emra Fike of Terra Alta, W. Va., bringing the message, as he did fifty-one years ago. The women's work group presented the play, Finding a Home. The men of the church remodeled the parsonage and installed a bathroom. Eldon Shingleton, who was licensed to the ministry, brought the morning message on June 12. Our annual memorial service was held June 5, with Bro. Shingleton and Bro. Harley Myers in charge. The CBYF group packed two boxes of food for overseas use. The young people are preparing to give a play at different churches to help pay for the new organ. The women's group presented a special peace program in June with Mrs. Ansel Sowers in charge. At Easter the CBYF group along with the adult choir presented the pageant called Ye Are My Witnesses. The young people honored their mothers with a covered dish supper and presented each mother with a corsage. The women's group has collected used clothing and a special recognition service was held May 29, with Mrs. Harry Durst in charge of the program.—Mrs. Ralph R. Combs, Augusta, W. Va.

Terra Alta—Our church has been progressing under the leadership of Bro. Emra T. Fike. Bro. Fike has been dividing his time with the congregation at Laurel Glen. The Laurel Glen congregation is in the process of building a new church. The Clericus chorus of Bridgewater College was with us on Good Friday. Bro. Norman Harsh was guest speaker on May 15. The women's missionary society has been active in relief work and mission work. The women have also been beautifying the church grounds by planting some shrubs. Their annual mother and daughter banquet was held on May 5.—Mrs. Maxine Whitehair, Terra Alta, W. Va.

Stewardship of Power

THANKS to high-voltage cables stringing around the nation, thanks to smokestacks towering over giant furnaces, thanks to whirring wheels translating raw force into controlled energy, the modern workman has great resources of power at his command. But the greater the available power, the greater his responsibility. His vocation now calls for a deeper sense of his stewardship before God. Like the servant with talents to invest he must inevitably give an accounting for his stewardship of power.

Since tractors replace horses, since turbines replace water wheels, since automatic means of production will soon replace much hand labor, the concept of a workingman's stewardship takes on new meaning. Power need not corrupt, any more than money need become the root of all evil. The choice is between our reckless misuses of power—for greed or for destruction—and the consecrated use of power as a God-given resource for which he holds us responsible. Labor Sunday is an appropriate time for Christians to review their stewardship of power.

A Song in the Heart

Once, as a visiting minister was holding revival services in our local church, he was asked to visit a group of sick and shut-in folk over the community who would not be able to attend the services. As he came to call at my home, we talked of many things and he became interested in my attitude toward my lot in life, since I am a shut-in myself. The subject was brought up of how each one can best serve our heavenly Father. Some have been given the gift of being able to stand before an audience to deliver a message from God's Word and thus "feed the flock." Others have been given voices to sing praises. When the subject of singing was mentioned, I remarked that I used to love to join in with others as songs of praise were being sung, then had to confess that my singing voice has left me, but stated that I have songs in my mind and heart. The visiting minister remarked that if one has a song in his heart, God can hear it.

Among shut-in and handicapped people, many have sick souls as well as ailing bodies. A kind word of encouragement and cheer and a prayer in behalf of the ailing person are often the best medicine for them.

Out of this need to minister to shut-in people grew what is now known as the Friendship Committee of the Waynesboro Church of the Brethren, Va. Some serving on this committee visit the sick in hospitals and homes. For quite a number of years, it has been my privilege to send greeting cards in the name of the committee. Get-well cards are sent to the sick; sympathy cards to those who have lost loved ones in death; cards of remembrance and cheer to the shut-in folk; and messages of congratulation to parents of new babies. Usually, my own name is not signed on the cards, only the name of the committee.

This kind of service to others is much like that described in Eccles. 11:1: "Cast thy bread upon the waters; for thou shalt find it after many days." Many who have received cards express their appreciation, and as the word eventually gets back to me, this brings a song to my heart, for I know that I have had a small part in ministering to someone in his time of need. Being a shut-in myself, I look forward to mail time. Often, there are letters and messages from far and near. Then my heart again sings, for someone has remembered me.—Mary E. Root, Waynesboro, Va.

Because the Church Has Failed

I took note of several items in the article written by Julian Griggs, "Kind of Church I Want," in the July 30 issue. Mention was made of scouting at the points of drill, military-type uniform, selling war stamps, and "going to war."

In twenty-four years of association with scouting, of which eleven years were in several positions of responsible adult leadership, I have participated in and seen more drilling in physical education courses in my schooling than I have ever seen in my scouting experience which covers four scout councils in Indiana, Wisconsin, Iowa and Michigan. Scouts march in parades; so does the high school band. Never in my experience have I heard of or seen boy scouts selling war stamps. Perhaps Mr. Griggs' scouting experience has been different, but four of the largest scout councils of the nation do not follow such a program.

The reference to the military-type uniform brought back memories of two decades ago or more when the Church of the Brethren was becoming aware of the scouting movement. Take a closer look at the styling of the traditional coat worn by some of our Brethren even now. Just change the color, Mr. Griggs. "When America goes to war, scouts do likewise" reminds me that members of our denomination, campers in our church summer program, Sunday-school classmates, Hi Y'ers, F.F. A'ers, likewise go to war.

Realizing this was not the major emphasis of the fine article and realizing that it touched a favorite area of my interests, a more earnest question is "What factors gave rise to the Boy Scout movement?" It is my feeling that Boy Scouts, Girl Scouts, the Y.M.C.A., the Y.W.C.A., organizations for farm youth, many extracurricular activities of the school, and other programs for youth, have come into the picture largely because the church has failed to see its opportunity and responsibility for youth. This position assumes, however, that the function of the church goes beyond baptizing, marrying, burying, preaching, praying and singing, "When the roll is called up yonder, I'll be there."—David O. Schechter, Detroit, Mich.

Land to till is a matter of major concern to half a billion people today and men vie with one another to get little plots of land on which to grow food is the challenge to the church in today's rural world

LET MY PEOPLE GO

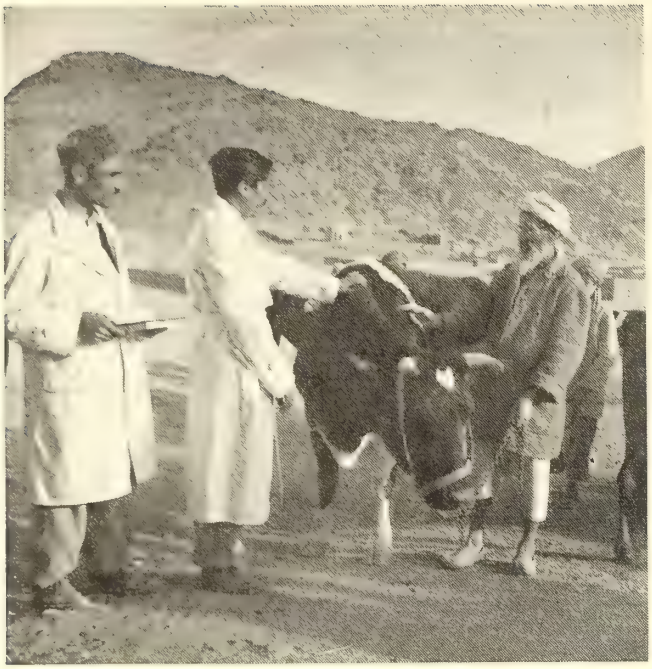
I. W. Moomaw

DURING a recent journey which took me to seven countries, I decided to collect a sample of soil from each of the lands visited. So, I returned with samples from England, Italy, Lebanon, Syria, Pakistan, India and Egypt.

The samples were placed on my desk as an exhibit, but something seemed wrong. Two central facts made them more alike than different. They had the same Creator and all possessed the God-given power to support plant growth. I later poured them all into a small bag and scattered the soil in my garden where it shows forth the harmony we may find in nature and the sense of unity that God, through Christ, would give to all mankind, a thing so urgently needed in our time.

What are some distinguishing marks of today's rural world?



First, we face the twilight of materialism. Slowly we have come to see that technology of itself does not solve all our problems. Even the production of greater crop yields does not of itself eradicate poverty and hunger. More secure spiritual foundations are also needed, if the complex problems of poverty and want are to be solved.

Again, there is increased hunger and anguish in the world. Never since Christ broke bread to the multitudes in Galilee, have so many innocent people been hungry and homeless on the Jericho road. Despite notable efforts in technical assistance the world's food problem is becoming very serious.

Second, land to till is a matter of major concern to over a half billion people today. As population mounts in older countries of the world, rates of rent increase and men vie against one another to get little plots of land on which to grow food. Japan now has .2 acre of cropland per person. Korea has .5, India, .6, and Egypt has .2 acre. The United States is fortunate to have three acres of reasonably new cropland per person.

There is a strange irony in the fact that in a world so far developed technically the age-old problems of land, poverty, usury and hunger are still with us. Yet God has placed in the soil of the earth food for even the smallest child.

UNations from Monkmeyer

Finally, our world is passing through a quiet but profound revolution. Everywhere, distressed people on the land have come to believe they need not remain in want forever. A young agricultural officer in Egypt told us last year, "We have too many Cadillacs on the one hand and too many empty bellies on the other. You can't hold a country together long on that." Today, the agrarian multitudes of Asia, Kenya, South Africa, and sections of Latin America seem to join in the one chorus, "Let my people go!"

In a true sense what we see is not revolution but a festering desire of dispossessed people everywhere to join the family of free and democratic nations.

What is the relevance of Christ and the church to the present rural world situation? May I suggest four points of urgent emphasis?

A stronger rural church. Our studies both at home and abroad reveal that the rural church is, to a large degree, the basic growing point of the Christian movement. It is an old story, but still true, that in Bombay, Cairo, Mexico City or Cleveland, the church grows largely from the countryside. Across our own land we see numerous examples of a strong rural church rebuilding entire communities. In addition to its normal growth, one great rural church in Ohio has sent forth during the past fifty years, twenty-eight ministers, thirty-six missionaries and a large number of physicians, teachers and others to their respective vocations.

The tasks of today's rural life call for a ministry specially trained, adequately supported and with reasonably long tenure in a given place. I have been especially pleased with the contributions of the Rural Life Advisory Committee of the church and advances in the field of home missions. The church must now move fast to substitute new spiritual goals and vision for some of the old or secular ideals of exploitation that have guided the world for the past century. Point Four and technical assistance to underdeveloped countries are noble ideals but what shall it profit the world if we only substitute one form of materialism for another?

Send More Lay Delegates

THERE ought to be more lay people among the delegates to Annual Conference. We recognize the excellent contribution that ministerial delegates make in considering the business of the church. We believe that every pastor should be encouraged to attend each Annual Conference—but not necessarily as a delegate. Our churches should send more lay delegates.

Many of our churches are entitled to send only one or two delegates. There is a tendency for church councils always to vote for sending the minister. Obviously he is qualified. Perhaps if the church does not at least help with his expenses he will be unable to attend. He may not even take a much needed vacation trip unless he is encouraged to take time off in connection with a Conference trip. So members in a council meeting are likely to vote first for the pastor, perhaps next for his wife, and some deserving lay worker whose understanding of and enthusiasm for the Brotherhood program could be increased a hundredfold is seldom considered.

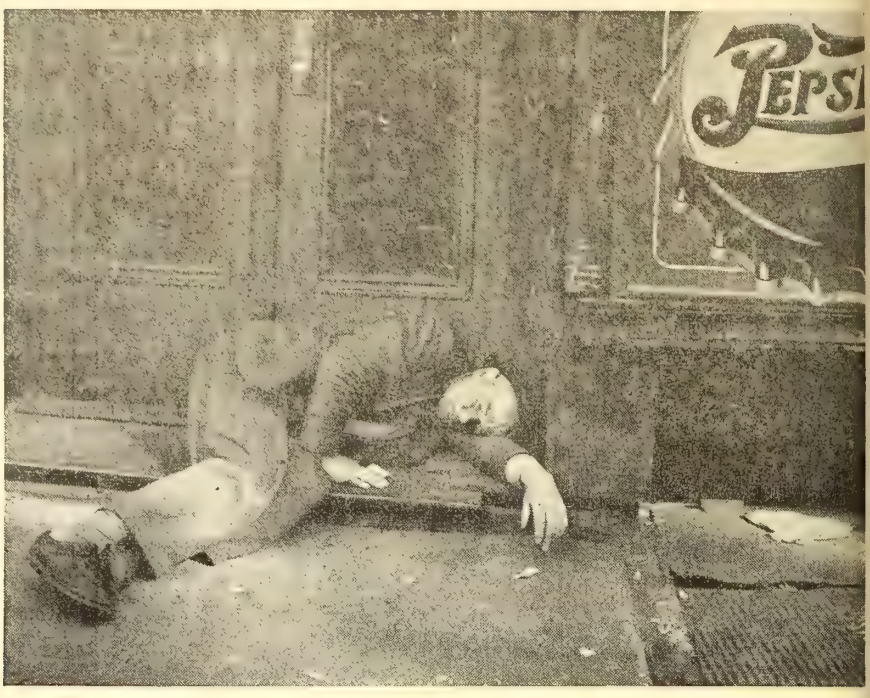
By all means continue to send the pastor to Conference, giving help with his expenses, but let him take his turn in serving as delegate, perhaps once in three years or on whatever basis the local church prefers. Why not make sure, however, that the budget for each year provides for sending a layman as delegate? Within a few years a local church could send several of its most promising lay leaders as delegates. They would profit by inspirational and training sessions. They would feel a new sense of responsibility for implementing the decisions they helped to make. They would be better Brethren, better Christians, better aides to the pastor in developing a local program that will be vital, spiritual and dynamic.—K.M.

A New Publication

WE ARE pleased to welcome a new member to the family of Brethren publications. The new periodical, soon to make its appearance, is Brethren Life and Thought, a "quarterly journal published in the interests of the Church of the Brethren."

A prospectus of the new journal was distributed widely at Annual Conference time. It indicates that this new venture in Brethren journalism will not be sponsored by any official body but by a Brethren Journal Association, of which Dean L. Frantz is the president. On its distinguished editorial board are William Beahm, S. Loren Bowman, A. Stauffer Curry, Kermit Eby, Chalmer Faw and Jesse H. Ziegler. Serving as editor will be Edward K. Ziegler, assisted by Desmond W. Bittinger as associate editor and Frances Clemens as managing editor.

When the prospectus first appeared many friends of the Gospel Messenger expressed their concern lest this new journal might compete with or detract in some way from our church paper's usefulness. Because of the nature of the new publication we do not anticipate any such difficulty. The new quarterly will meet a need that the Gospel Messenger by its very nature cannot supply, a need for the presentation of scholarly pioneering articles addressed chiefly to the leadership of the church. The Gospel Messenger is seldom able to carry such solid and well-documented articles as this journal will welcome. The Messenger seeks to be a general church paper intended for family use. Our articles must be shorter, more popular in treatment and aimed at a larger reading public. Whereas a scholarly quarterly will present thorough reviews of a few books, we shall still try to give brief evaluations of many new publications.



Although Brethren Life and Thought is unofficially Brethren, we believe the caliber of its editorial board guarantees that it will actually be published "in the interests of the Church of the Brethren." No one need cease his regular and, we hope, enthusiastic reading of the Gospel Messenger in order to make room on his reading table for Brethren Life and Thought. There is a place for both.—K.M.

Drinking drivers were tested recently at Michigan State College, where their actions were carefully observed. Although each drinking driver deliberately tried to hold his speed to twenty-five miles an hour, the speedometer was concealed and revealed how much faster each driver actually drove. One driver said, "I simply couldn't tell whether I was going slow or fast." After three drinks they were unable to correct their driving errors. . . .

When a prominent leader of society in New York and Newport died a newspaper commented, "She was known as the most exclusive of the great ladies of the city. FIFTEEN YEARS OF FREEDOM

Those who take a drink to overcome a feeling of inferiority or to escape their problems never believe they will be like this person

Three Lions

FIFTEEN years ago I found myself in the throes and final stages of chronic alcoholism. I was literally drinking myself to death. But for the grace of God and the help of Alcoholics Anonymous I would have succeeded. After fifteen years of sobriety and constructive living I now find that it is not easy to turn back the pages of my life to that sordid period of problem drinking which qualifies me to speak with some measure of authority and conviction on the subject of beverage alcohol.

As a lad of five years at the turn of the century in a rural community of the Southwest my temperance education was brief and to the point but strictly negative. It was simply a "sin" to drink—just that and no more. The conception of problem drinking as the hopeless and pitiful attempt of a frustrated and inadequate person to make some sort of adjustment to life was unheard of. The alcoholic or drunkard as he was known in those days was looked down upon and shunned by decent people and thought of as some sort of degenerate weakling, social outcast and moral leper. The only reason advanced as to why some people drank more than others was that they were the more sinful and degenerate.

I was raised in a Christian home by devout Christian parents. During one seven-year period of my childhood I established a record of perfect attendance at Sunday school. And in those days children also attended all other church services including prayer meeting. At the age of fifteen I went through the accepted form of conversion experience by going forward in a crowded church at one of the annual revival meetings and publicly confessing my sins. It was quite an ordeal for me as I was a very shy and timid lad and I held out against it for several years until everybody became very much concerned and the pressure on me was unbearable. That one event was the culmination and climax to which the whole of my religious training had been pointed. Then everybody was satisfied and happy. I was a "saved soul" and come what may—a little backsliding and sowing of wild oats to the contrary notwithstanding—I was sure to go to heaven when I died. Personally I must confess that I did not feel much different except that I was finally released from the most terrible and dreaded fear of my childhood that if I were not "saved" I was doomed to spend eternity in hell. And believe me, the hell of those days contained plenty of fire and brimstone and damnation!

I was subjected to a negative, repressive, other-worldly religion more calculated to confirm me in my childish ways than to remove them—a religion more calculated to give me an escape from reality than to give me the strength and courage to face it. The religion which should have served my needs was more likely to develop neurotic tendencies and personality conflicts than to remove them.

I was twenty years of age and a freshman in the university when I took my first drink. I did it deliberately although with a sense of the deepest feeling of shame and guilt. I remember the incident as though it had happened yesterday. I had gone to a neighboring state to see our team play football. Liquor flowed freely in the crowd I was with but I refused to participate. However, before the game I slipped away from my associates and entered a saloon alone and ordered and drank a glass of whiskey. I even remember the brand—it was a shot of "Four Roses." And I want to tell you it made me feel mighty fine. I was agreeably surprised beyond all expectations and I said to myself, "if this is sin, I want more of it"; so I drank another glass. Words cannot describe the feeling of contentment and well-being that came over me. I no longer felt shy and timid and backward which was a fault I had that gave me great concern. My feelings of inferiority and inadequacy disappeared as if by magic and my ego expanded. My inner conflicts and inhibitions vanished and for the first time in my life I felt at peace with myself—complete, unified and able to face whatever problem life had in store for me.

Thus began for me a period of indulgence in beverage alcohol that was to last for twenty-five years and end in the shame, degradation and humiliation of chronic alcoholism. Once started, I drank steadily but in the early stages very moderately and not as a debauchee. I drank for the motive of exaltation—the desire to live life to the fullest, to achieve and accomplish. And I was thoroughly convinced that while liquor might be bad for some people who drank to excess, for me and in moderation, it was just what I needed to help me get on in the world.

Of course, it was a false adjustment and one that had to be continually supported by deeper and deeper phases of alcoholic indulgence. It was like a crutch—a false crutch—but in the beginning it seemed to serve a useful purpose. The sad part was that there was no one to tell me the unvarnished truth about alcohol and how badly I was being deceived.

My problem grew and became a habit. I went along attempting to gain achievement through alcoholic fantasy rather than by hard, plodding constructive work. And strangely enough, because of my native ability and desire to succeed in the world, I did achieve a measure of success in spite of the added handicaps which the drink habit necessarily brought to bear.

My periods of intoxication became more frequent and it became harder for me to sober up. My desire and craving for drink began to pass from the motive of exaltation which characterized the early stages of the habit and I began to drink in order to satisfy the narcotic motive—an expression of fatigue and a desire to escape from a reality which had become too unpleasant to bear.

One drink was sufficient to throw me completely off balance so that will power, love of family or self-respect was of no avail in curbing the extent or duration of intoxication. In fact, because of my sensitive nature, considerations of self-respect, love of family and a realization of the mess I had made of my life brought on emotional attitudes of despair, shame and self-pity which heightened my desire to escape completely from reality and to go into deeper and deeper phases of intoxication.

Finally when I had lost all hope and it appeared certain that I would die a drunkard—and soon—the pastor of my church heard about Alcoholics Anonymous and purchased a copy of their book for me, and he was wise enough to get it into my hands without letting me know that it came from him.

A mere reading of their great book brought me the first sensible explanation and understanding of what my problem really was; that the drink habit was only symptomatic of a deep-seated personality problem; that I was a potential alcoholic before I took my first drink. It lifted from me the burden of shame and feeling of degradation that I was some sort of spineless moral degenerate. It helped me

The most important step in overcoming the desire to drink is to surrender oneself to God and discover his will for one's life to understand without any feeling of inferiority or hurt to my pride and self-respect just why drink was so attractive to me.

The book also brought me a satisfying realization that my problem was not unique or hopeless; that it was of a typical pattern; that thousands of other fine people had been misled and baffled in much the same way as I had been—some even sinking to lower depths of despair and degradation than I and yet live to tell me, convince me and give me hope and faith that there was a way out for me.

It made clear to me the urgent need to "get out of the driver's seat" and surrender my life to God. And as you may well imagine the religious phase of their program caused me the greatest difficulty and I approached it with fear and foreboding. My first attempts at prayer brought nothing but discouragement and a feeling of futility.

In my discouragement, I very nearly threw the whole program overboard. However, I did not want to die a drunkard, my life was completely miserable and I had a feeling that my only hope was the A.A. program—religion and all. So I kept trying. I set aside fifteen minutes each morning before breakfast for meditation and prayer. While I was able to stay sober during this period, I was very fearful and it was over three months before spiritual light came to me and I was able to obtain a workable conception of God.

One morning I had difficulty in tuning in my radio for a devotional program to which I often listened and then when the dial was finally in the right place and the room was flooded with beautiful sacred music, the thought came to me that the program was there on the air all that time and the only difficulty was that I had not properly tuned in—"if only I could tune in with God!"

Another morning after three months of meditation and soul searching and while I was still in confusion, I heard a bird singing outside my window, singing as though his heart would break. As I listened, the thought came to me that the bird was in tune with God! "If only I could bring myself to the same mental attitude of that little bird, would I be in tune with God?" I well knew what was meant by God's program of living—a spirit of good-will and brotherly love, a genuine desire to be kind and helpful and to make those about me happy. Certainly it could not be that simple, and yet it was worth a try.

So I left my study and went into the kitchen where my wife was preparing breakfast and I gave her a hug and a kiss and began helping her cook the bacon and set the table. As we worked and talked together I noticed certain birdlike tones come into her voice, reminiscent of happier days. With the knowledge that I was bringing joy to my beloved wife, I began to feel happier than I had been in many years.

My two fine sons, almost of high school age and practically unknown to me, came down for breakfast. I gave them both a hug and shoved them about in a playful manner. During the meal when I began to ask them about their school work, they at first looked at me in amazement but when they finally realized that some change had come over me and that I was really being friendly with them, they responded with friendship. And there in my own family circle, and just because of my changed attitude, I began to have a spiritual experience. Theretofore I had been cross and self-centered, just getting over a drunk or worrying about when I would go on another; yet in fifteen minutes' time while in tune with God and by living his program, I was able to turn my home circle from something sordid and depressing into a little bit of heaven here on earth!

I will admit that my conception and understanding of God was still rather skimpy but it was sufficient unto that hour of need. However, there was no question whatever about my prayer being heard and answered—I could feel God's presence all about me. It seemed as if a heavy load had fallen from my shoulders. I felt like a new person and I began to realize that I had never really lived before.

Fifteen years have passed since that wonderful morning. I have not only been able to let drink alone but my entire life, my personal life, my home life and my business life have been completely changed. I can truthfully say it has been the happiest and most constructive period of my entire life. Each day my faith in God and my understanding of his power to remake the lives of men has increased. I have been able to evolve a workable conception of God and spiritual power consistent with my intellect and the teachings

MILDRED ALLEN JEFFERY

Must we always search for comfort
When the Comforter is here;
Must we struggle blindly, fearful,
When our Savior is so near?

Must we seek for joy and blessing
When the Blesser lives within;
Must we pray, "Our heavenly Father"—
Then continue in our sin?

Must we wait till we reach heaven
For a life of victory;
Did not Christ upon Golgotha
Win our pardon, set us free?

Since God loves us and takes pleasure
In his people—Christ's own bride,
Let us then adore and serve him
Radiant and satisfied!

of Jesus Christ. It is a creative, affirmative religion which frees me from the bonds of self and gives me strength and courage to face life and live it up to the hilt consistent with my highest capabilities, in short, a religion which makes me feel even better and more complete than did that first drink of beverage alcohol so long ago.

As I was able to take up again my wider responsibility to society in church and civic groups, separate and apart from the alcoholic fraternity, I learned that people generally have the same basic personality faults of the alcoholic, only not to quite such an exaggerated degree. Selfishness, greed, hate, frustration and insecurity are prevalent the world over and are the basic cause of all the war, misery and suffering of untold millions today. I have become convinced in the last fifteen years that the illness of the alcoholic is but a reflection of the larger illness of a sick world and human society in general. From my own experience as an alcoholic and the peace that has come to me through a complete surrender to God's plan of friendly, unselfish living, I am satisfied that the one thing this old world and every person in it needs today more than anything else is a great spiritual awakening, a return to the fundamental teachings of Jesus Christ, a simple faith in God and in the beauty of his works here on earth! There is no other way to salvation and it is not to be found in wealth and industrial power or atomic bombs but in service and sacrifice, friendliness and brotherhood!

A more vigorous challenge to youth. We are proud and grateful for the wholesome programs developed for Christian youth. But are they good enough? Last year we attended a Communist youth meeting in East India. The leader summoned the young people to days of toil and nights of study with a meager diet of plain food and homespun to wear. The young people responded with a devotion worthy of a more noble cause. I felt sick as I recalled a meeting only a few months before where a leader of limited vision "challenged" young men to give up soft drinks for a month in order for each to give a dollar to a worthy world project. Today's youth seem to call for greater imagination and self-searching than we are using.

Vocational counseling must now help to provide spiritual insight and commitment that will not merely lead to a good job but help more young people to a vital experience of God in their chosen vocations.

Land stewardship of larger dimensions. With our high degree of agricultural technology, we need to remain sensitive to the concept of the holy earth as seen by the early prophets.

The soil as the basis of life still provides our number-one source of wonder in the natural world. A cubic inch of fertile, moist garden soil may contain as many tiny forms of life as there are people in the world. In the Ganges Valley of India they show us fields that are said to have produced wheat year after year for over 3,000 years. I wonder if we realize the responsibility placed upon us by the possession of such vast land resources.

Science has now placed in our hands power to improve greatly cultivation on the land or to destroy life from the face of the earth. The earth must help us use this new-found power for more secure spiritual foundations and noble ends.

The late Dr. Henry Bennett declared, "When will peace and plenty come to earth? They will come only when men become faithful stewards of the land God has so abundantly provided."

Apply the gospel in more concrete and practical ways. It is for us to live in a time of great urgency and human need. The relevance of Christ's gospel to the present struggle becomes increasingly clear. Many young people today are eager to help build a better world. They are being prepared by experience and study, on our farms, in our churches and in agricultural schools, yet less than four per cent of the missionaries sent out are prepared to apply the gospel to the day-to-day problems of peasant life. When we realize Christ's concern for "the least of these," it is hard to understand why the churches devote so much of their resources to presenting the gospel by verbal means only.

I am rather apprehensive as I view some tendency in our church to consider "missions" and "service" as separate arms of Christian expression. Convenience seems to call for separate consideration and we take pride in our progress, but it would be regrettable if time should dull us to the fact that both are parts of one Commission —to lift, strengthen and redeem life, spiritually, socially and economically.

It is for us to live in a time when the flood tides of destiny and change are moving at great speed. May the church do her part as helmsman to a new and better day that God would show to all mankind.

Work in the Kingdom

Burton Metzler

God has endowed us with abilities and numerous opportunities come to us daily; we are responsible for the use we make of our abilities and our opportunities

JESUS' parable of the talents presents three successive scenes. The first may be called Entrusting the Money. In this scene the master of the house before leaving on a long journey calls three of his slaves to assign them tasks to do in his absence. The first slave is a capable man and the master gives him five thousand dollars to invest. The second slave is of mediocre ability and so the master entrusts two thousand dollars to him. The third slave is rather slow and dull and the master judges that he is capable of handling only one thousand dollars. After charging the men to use their funds well and make as much profit as they can the master is off on his journey.

The second scene may be called Managing the Money. In this scene the first slave gets to work at once. He is careful in his investments and makes his master's profit his first concern. In course of time he has doubled his money. The second slave also sets to work at once and in course of time succeds in doubling his money also. The third slave simply went and hid his money in a safe place. At this point in the story we are given no motive why he did so.

The third scene is Settling Accounts. After a long absence the master came home. Without delay he called the three slaves to see what they had done with his money. The first slave was pleased to report that he had doubled his money and placed ten thousand dollars in his master's hands. The master received the money with appreciation and commended the slave thus: "Well done, good and faithful slave. Since you have been faithful over a little I will trust you with a larger amount. Come and share my enjoyment."

Then the master called the second slave. He too was able to report that he had doubled his money and placed in his master's hands four thousand dollars. And the master commended him with the identical words with which he had commended the first slave and invited him also to share his enjoyment.

Last of all the master called the third slave. He came forward bringing no profit. By way of explanation he stated that he was afraid to invest his money lest he lose it, for he knew his master to be a hard man. Therefore, he hid his thousand dollars to keep it safe. He was now returning it just as he had received it. But the master refused to accept the explanation. The plea of fear was mostly alibi and he was wicked for making such a plea as well as for failing in his trust. The chief reason for his failure was his slothfulness. Therefore, the master took the money from him and gave it to the first slave and put the unprofitable slave out into the darkness.

The whole parable of the talents focuses on the idea of faithful, useful work. The master has work which he wants to get done. He assigns work for his slaves to do. The three slaves illustrate the importance of work in the kingdom by positive and negative examples. Finally the master's commendation of faithful work and his condemnation of the slothful, worthless slave complete the focus of the parable on the necessity of work in the kingdom. This parable in its context literally shouts in the ears of his disciples the message: You are living in momentous and dangerous times. Out ahead are my crucifixion, the destruction of Jerusalem, false Christs, wars, earthquakes, persecution, the end of the age, my coming and the day of judgment. But do not get excited and let nothing keep you from your work in the kingdom. Leave times and signs in God's hands and, whatever you do, work faithfully in the kingdom.

This same lesson is prominent in Jesus' teaching throughout the gospels. He said the harvest is plenteous but the laborers are few. He sent his disciples out again and again to do his work. He said he had come to do his Father's work and that he must be diligently at it for the night comes when no man can work. He urged his disciples to bear fruit, much fruit and more fruit. He expected them to do greater work than he did. And just before his ascension when the disciples were again asking about dates Jesus pointed them to a task rather than to a calendar. Their work was to make disciples of all the nations. God would take care of the dates.

With regard to the first scene let us note that abilities and opportunities are thrust upon us. Suddenly and without their consent the three slaves found the money on their hands and they were responsible for its use. Similarly we find on our hands the gift of life, our five senses, physical health and strength, a mind to think, and a heart to love, in fact, all the abilities with which our Creator has endowed us. In addition, we find on our hands the numerous opportunities which life brings to us. There is the Bible on our stand to be read and lived, the church at our door to be built, the hungry to be fed, children to be taught, the lost to be saved, the gospel to be preached; the list of opportunities which come to us daily is almost endless.

And let it be remembered that with every ability and opportunity there comes a responsibility. One may hide his talent but he cannot escape the responsibility. One may refuse to use his opportunity and run away from his duty but he cannot escape the responsibility or the necessity of sometime giving an account of how he has used his talent.

It is to be noted also that our endowments differ. To one servant was granted five talents, to another two and to another one. We were granted two good eyes and two good ears but these abilities were denied Helen Keller. We were born with two good arms but Harold Wilkie was born with none. We were born in favorable circumstances but George Washington Carver was born in unfavorable circumstances. But whether the endowment be great or small there is no room for pride or envy for these endowments come as gifts. It is required only that a man be faithful with what he has.

In the second scene, Managing the Money, if we accept the statement of the one-talent man, we learn that fear was his fatal weakness. He was afraid to make a venture. He lacked faith. Fear of losing paralyzed any business initiative he might have had. The coward would never set out with Abram, the pioneer, to find the city whose builder and maker is God. He would be afraid the venture might fail. Neither would the coward become a follower of Jesus because Jesus' disciples ran the risk of persecution and death. Therefore, John in the book of Revelation consigns the fearful along with adulterers and drunkards to the lake of fire. Faithfulness in the work of the kingdom requires a spark of heroism, a faith that dares to make a venture.

Of course, there are other fatal weaknesses which can keep one from doing his best in the work of the kingdom. One man may be too lazy to work. The master implies that this was the trouble with the one-talent man. Another puts his own selfish interests and ambitions first. Another is simply indifferent. Thus for one reason or another men leave their God-appointed tasks in the kingdom undone.

Turning to the third scene, Settling Accounts, we are impressed first with the fact that the reckoning is an individual and not a group matter. Had the master dealt with a group of three men who received eight thousand dollars and returned to him fifteen thousand dollars he probably would have commended the group and the unfaithful slave would have slipped in on the merits of the faithful slaves. But the master dealt with each one alone. We may expect that the Judge will not deal with us on the last day by races or nations or denominations or families. The wife will stand alone and give account of herself and the husband will stand alone and give account of himself.

A second important fact is that judgment is on a proportional and not on a comparative basis. On a comparative basis the two-talent man gained only forty per cent as much as the five-talent man but on a proportional basis each gained one hundred per cent and the master commended each in identical words. This is fair. It is right to expect the farmer who is equipped with a tractor and six plows to plow more land than the farmer who is equipped with only a single plow and a team of horses. But it is required that each be faithful in the use of what he has. So from him to whom much is given much will be required, and from him to whom little is given little will be required. Responsibility is measured by opportunity. God will not hold us responsible for doing what we are incapable of doing. The achievements of a Helen Keller, a Harold Wilkie and a George Washington Carver may teach us that our potentialities may be much greater than we think they are.

A third fact to note is that if we do not use our talents we lose them. If a man does not use his right arm it atrophies, if he does not use his intellect it deteriorates, if he does not use his capacity for worship it diminishes and if he does not use his opportunities he forfeits them. Unfaithfulness in one duty renders one less capable of doing the next duty. On the other hand, the faithful use of one opportunity equips one to do a larger task. To him that has shall more be given and he shall have in abundance. And, apparently, faithful stewardship of our abilities and opportunities here in this life prepares us for larger service in the kingdom in the life to come.

A fourth lesson is that the one talent is important and God expects it to be used. The poor widow who put in only two mites gave a small gift in comparison to the gifts of the wealthy yet the Lord commended her. Dorcas could not establish churches and preach the gospel like Paul but she could use the needle and thread and her work was important in the kingdom. John the Baptist was not the Messiah; he was his

Naomi Will H. K. Zeller, Jr. Jesse Ziegler

The Family Counselor welcomes letters of inquiry. They may be addressed: Family Life Department, General Brotherhood Board, 22 S. State St., Elgin, Ill.

Dear Counselor,

I have been in bad health for some time: my doctor has done everything he can, but I still am no better. Recently one of my friends says that I am going to a "quack" doctor, that he is only after my money, and that he will not cure me. How can I know if this is true? He is good to me and I trust him.

One in Bad Health

Dear Friend,

The confidence one has in his physician is a curiously personal thing. The first step in checking on a doctor's integrity is to see that he is recognized by his colleagues as a valid member of the profession. Medical organizations attempt certification to insure the public against the lack of integrity. If your doctor is in another branch of medicine than the M. D. you can check his status with the state or national organization of chiropractors and osteopaths. Beyond that you must use common sense in analyzing his service to you.

Doctors are always confronted with the charge that they are after your money—like the auto mechanic or the plumber! Doubtless some doctors are—greed has not been eliminated from the success society in which we live.

You report that your doctor is good to you and you trust him. Perhaps even his pat on the shoulder and the pink pills he prescribes are worth what they cost. You alone can judge if his competence and integrity merit your cost and confidence.

The Family Meets a Crisis

Paul and Ellen Miller

GENE was a typical high school boy growing up in an average American home. He had learned to do the normal things that any growing boy does. It was his lot to have contracted the flu, which had put him to bed for two days. At the close of the second day he had gotten up to help with the chores. It was while they were working that his father discovered that Gene had an appointment to take his girl friend to the basketball game.

After some discussion of the pros and cons of going, Gene got his way, and he and Marg went to the game in Gene's family's car. As they left the game, they started toward a cafe to get something to eat. At one of the street crossings the stop-and-go light was in their favor, and just as they entered the intersection a car seemed to come from nowhere, striking Gene's car broadside. Some man who could not tell green from red because of his tipsy condition had driven the car which collided with theirs.

The door flew open and Gene was tossed out of the car onto the pavement. The crowd gathered quickly. Fortunately Marg was only shaken; she had presence of mind to allow no one to move Gene until the police and ambulance arrived. As the doctor lifted the unconscious boy gently to the stretcher there were some heavy hearts.

When Gene's parents answered the phone which aroused them that night, the police informed them that Gene was at the hospital and that they should come at once. By the time they arrived, the family doctor had called for a brain specialist to come and examine Gene. In the consultation room, the doctors felt that something must be done to relieve the pressure. This demanded a very delicate operation, which was scheduled for the following morning.

Word soon got back to the church that the operation was set for 9 a.m. The homes set aside 8:30 a.m. as the time when each family would meet for prayer in their separate homes. They would place Gene more fully in the hands of God. The response to this was electrifying. Even the small children of the homes prayed in a very real way for Gene. Many persons expressed afterward the feeling of God's nearness in this hour of need. The skilled hands of the physician seemed to move with precision as they brought the operation to completion.

Gene would need special care for some time. Either they could help as parents or get special nurses. He would need attention. The chores at home were done by neighbors who came to help so the parents were free to be at the hospital. The other children were taken into neighbors' homes, and everything was cared for until the return of the home to near normalcy.

Some time later Gene's parents sat down one day to take inventory of their experience, with hearts filled with gratitude for their many blessings.

First, they were fortunate to live in a community that felt the call to commit them in prayer to almighty God. Whether Gene got well or not, they could feel the sustaining arms of the community and church in giving them strength.

Clark and Clark

The family together discovered a new strength in faith and the patience and understanding that come from a sense of his nearness

Pastor of the Panther Creek church, Adel, Iowa, and his wife

Second, where could they live in a world and walk out for a couple of weeks, leaving their family and their work, yet knowing that everything would be looked after acceptably—perhaps not as well as if they had been there, but well enough that nothing suffered too much? Even persons in the community whom they scarcely knew and strangers whom they met at the hospital wanted to be of help.

Third, the experience taught them that life and its frustrations must be accepted. The joy of recovery was sweet. There was no use in running away; the concussion was a reality. There was no use in wringing hands and shouting, "Why does this happen to us?"; the son needed attention. There was no use in weeping and saying, "This is my cross to bear"; the only Christian thing to do was to accept it and face it in the strength God gives us for daily problems.

Fourth, they learned more fully that it is possible to discover a new strength in faith. Recovery is not measured by the hour or day. If progress comes in a month, they will give thanks. Even though complete recovery never takes place, they search for strength to live with what recovery has come.

Fifth, amid the pressure to get excited, they felt the inner bracing of God's nearness that gave them discipline, patience and understanding. Jesus shows them how to put their trust in a heavenly Father. As they walk from day to day in his love, they are strengthened and led to take longer strides for him.

Sixth, this was a family crisis. All of them shared the burden together. And as they faced it, even though a loved one might have been taken, they were made ready to move with courage in Christ's strength.

"We give humble thanks for church, community and friends who are our neighbors, who commit themselves unto God, and hold up our hands in an hour of need."

forerunner. But his work was needed and he was happy to play his minor role. He who gives only one cup of water in the name of Christ shall not lose his reward. Men who care for sewers and dispose of garbage in a great city do not hold the spotlight, yet how could the city exist without them? One blade of grass is small and insignificant. It is not nearly as showy as a rose. Yet what would this world be without grass to cover the soil as a carpet of green? Therefore, let not the one-talent man count himself as unimportant. God needs him in his kingdom and expects him to be faithful.

Jesus commands us to seek the kingdom of God first. Nothing in this life is more important than our faithfulness in the work of the kingdom. Some day we, like the three servants, will stand before our Lord to give account of what we have done with our abilities and opportunities. We may, therefore, well ask ourselves, Am I faithfully using my talents for God?

Anon, By and By, and Presently

Luther A. Weigle

STRAIGHTWAY and Immediately are two words much used in the New Testament, which leave one in no doubt as to their meaning. But unfortunately the Greek words which mean immediately and straightway have also been translated in the King James Version by the terms "anon," "by and by" and "presently," all of which once meant immediately but now mean soon or after a while. When Jesus entered Peter's house in Capernaum, they told him immediately that Peter's mother-in-law was ill (Mark 1:30); but the modern reader gets the impression that they did some visiting first, for it is said that "anon" they told him of her. Salome demanded that the head of John the Baptist be given her on a platter at once (Mark 6:25), but the King James Version says that she asked that it be given her "by and by."

In the parable of the sower (Matt. 13:21), Jesus said of the hearer who is like stony ground that when persecution comes he immediately falls away; but the King James translation has "by and by he is offended." When Jesus said to the barren fig tree, "May no fruit ever come from you again!" the account in Matt. 21:19 records that the fig tree withered at once; but the King James Version says that it withered "presently."

When Jesus rebuked one of his followers for drawing a sword and striking out in defense of his Master in the Garden of Gethsemane (Matt. 26:52-54), he said, "Put your sword back into its place; for all who take the sword will perish by the sword. Do you think that I cannot appeal to my Father, and he will at once send me more than twelve legions of angels?" Jesus used a clear, strong word which means "right now" or "at once." But the King James Version imports a more leisurely air to the saying by using the word "presently"—"he will presently give me more than twelve legions of angels."

"A fool's wrath is presently known; but a prudent man covereth shame" is one of the realistic observations of the Book of Proverbs (12:16). But it is clearer and more realistic in the present translation:

"The vexation of a fool is known at once, but the prudent man ignores an insult."

To Those Who Work

Labor Sunday Message, 1955

Issued by the National Council of Churches through the Department of the Church and Economic Life

ONCE AGAIN, on the eve of the day set aside each year in tribute to labor, the National Council of the Churches of Christ extends its greeting to all who work.

For our Labor Sunday Message to the workers of America we refer them to the words spoken by our Savior: "You shall love your neighbor as yourself." Those who follow this teaching of the Master give meaning and nobility to their work. Insofar as workers have heeded this admonition by realizing the mutuality of their strivings, their sorrows and their joys, they have increased the stature and the dignity of labor.

Historically Labor Day has had special meaning and recognition for those who have joined together in labor unions for mutual aid, protection and service. This Labor Sunday Message is intended as a recognition also of those essentially Christian motives which have played a part in leading workers to form voluntary associations with their fellows.

While Christian principles thus encourage individuals to join in relations of mutual aid and protection, so they require that all organized groups in their internal and external relations advance the general well being of the whole society in which they live. No man lives unto himself alone, nor does any organization.

There was a time when, of necessity, the labor movement was largely a struggle for the protection and relief of oppressed and underprivileged workers and their families. We thank God that to a marked degree that struggle has been won. Generally speaking, workers today have achieved a more secure, better compensated and widely respected position in our American society. It is not only a change in living standards and economic welfare. Millions of individuals in labor unions have gained opportunity to participate in significant decision-making, which is a vital expression of democracy. They have gained also that sense of dignity and of belonging which every human being craves and which everyone needs for full development of his personality.

The churches acknowledge a debt to the labor movement and to the men and women who have built it for the significant part they have played in this great constructive change. Such voluntary association in mutual help and support also encourages the development of Christian relationships which the churches seek to foster everywhere.

And in this year 1955 we hail the progress in the relations between labor and management, in the lessening of jurisdictional disputes, and in the growing spirit of co-operation among the branches of organized labor in the United States.

But with strength comes obligation. And in labor's case, the stronger its organization becomes the greater is its obligation to be truly democratic in its procedures and to weigh its every act in the light of its effect upon the general welfare. This, of course, is not an obligation of labor alone. Such an obligation lies upon every organizatin—as upon every individual—in direct proportion to its power. That obligation is not discharged, for any of us, unless there is a maximum practicable degree of employment and opportunity for creative expression. It is not discharged unless the opportunity for employment and creative expression is equally available to all men and women regardless of creed, race, social status or national origin. It is not discharged until justice has been done to every child by the provision of good educational opportunity and by the elimination of the slum as a breeding place of suffering and delinquency.

Nor can our obligations be limited by the borders of our own country. One of the greatest of all new movements of our century may well be what we call "technical assistance"—a sharing by those who have with those who have not of the knowledge and the methods whereby a better and more abundant life for the peoples of the world can in time be created by their own effort and through their own institutions. Where stark need exists—anywhere in the world—our obligation is to share goods also, to share generously and without thought of return. There are no surpluses, in God's sight, while there exists a single hungry person anywhere on earth. The National Council of Churches commends American organized labor for its effective support of international programs directed toward these ends.

Our generation lives and does its work under the very shadow of possible universal catastrophe. Man's rapid development of weapons of total destruction has not yet been matched by corresponding progress in the development of institutions and relationships which can and will control such weapons and spare mankind from death by his own hand.

These circumstances make clear once again our continuous dependence upon the forgiving and empowering grace of God. In humble acknowledgement that the God of all men and nations has summoned us to obedience, we have faith that his care and guidance will enable us to act responsibly in this day. The National Council of the Churches of Christ is profoundly committed to a moral awakening which issues from a rededication to the Christian faith.

On Labor Sunday it is appropriate that the call for moral awakening and rededication to faith be especially directed to American Labor. We know it will fall on receptive ears.

Faith Makes the Difference

What happened?
Nothing much.

But on another day

For he was there
To answer prayer.

KINGDOM GLEANINGS

In a recent baptismal service at the Council Bluffs, Iowa, church six persons, representing three generations of the same family, were received into the church by baptism.

In sending a generous gift to the Brotherhood Board, a Maryland woman wrote the following: "Enclosed find check for my share of my father's estate. He served more than fifty years in the deacon's office, raised ten children who are all active in the church. He gave liberally to the church all his life. I do not really need the money and the church always needs money, so I am sending it to you to use as you feel a good deacon would want his money used."

Brother and Sister Ellis Powell of Bethany Biblical Seminary were among the forty-one persons who recently completed courses in Techniques of Adult Literacy and Writing for New Literates. These courses were offered at Chautauqua, New York, by Syracuse University as a means of training students to teach and write for the masses of people emerging from illiteracy. Dr. Frank C. Laubach, pioneer literacy leader and his son, Robert S. Laubach, of the faculty of the School of Journalism of Syracuse University, were on the teaching staff.

Lee Nelson, pastor at Modesto, Calif., who talked with a number of U.N. leaders at the San Francisco conference, recently received a personal letter from Charles Malik, Ambassador from Lebanon, which included the following comment: "I wish to assure you again that your work with the humble folk whom you serve is the most real work that there is. On its quality and its fruits everything depends. Do not let therefore grand international or political distractions bother you too much. The service of the Lord in the church with ordinary men and women is the greatest calling that any man can have."

Change of Address

Lyle C. Albright from 3435 Van Buren Street, Chicago 24, Ill., to Udell, Iowa. Brother Albright has become the pastor of the Fairview church in Iowa.

Paul B. Sanger from Route 4, Roanoke, Va., to Free Union, Va.

Harvey R. Hostetler from 2724 Hillcrest Dr., La Verne, Calif., to 1237 K St., Reedley, Calif. Brother Hostetler is assuming pastoral duties at the Reedley church.

J. Willard Bowman from Grottoes, Va., to Route 1, Boones Mill, Va., where he will be farming and serving as part-time pastor of a church.

A. P. Wenger from 445 N. Ninth St., Allentown, Pa., to Box 13, Rossville, Ind., where he will be serving the Rossville church as pastor.

W. David Albright from 2478 Fourth St., La Verne, Calif., to 512 Eleventh Ave., S., Nampa, Idaho. Brother Albright is the new pastor at Nampa.

Fred Hollingshead from 215 Hummel St., Harrisburg, Pa., to 9554 Inkster Rd., Detroit 28, Mich. Brother Hollingshead has become the pastor of Trinity church in Detroit.

Four area conferences for church workers have been planned by the Board of Christian Education of Western Pennsylvania for four Friday evenings in September. Youth counselors and teachers, junior high counselors and teachers, deacons, music leaders and directors of stewardship will be especially interested. The conferences will last from 7:30 until 9:30 p.m. at the following churches: Sept. 9, Rockton; Sept. 16, Meyersdale; Sept. 23, Plum Creek; and Sept. 30, Uniontown.

President Eisenhower signed the Compulsory Reserve-UMT bill on August 9 saying he'll ask Congress early next year to make major changes in the law. Eisenhower said the measure "falls short" of his recommendation. His goal is expansion of the present 700,000-man "ready" reserve to 2,900,000 men. Eisenhower wanted this goal met by 1960, saying it was vital to his plan for reducing the active armed forces. But changes made by Congress in effect postponed the full reserve buildup by two years.

Manchester College

The 1955 Summer Session showed a considerable increase in enrollment. During the first five-week period the enrollment was 16% higher than the previous summer. During the second term it was 25% higher. The general morale and standards of academic application by the summer students was particularly high this year.

In August Manchester College was honored by having the Conference of Church and Educational Leaders on its campus. More than sixty representatives were present, representing all the colleges, the seminary, some of the Elgin staff, a number of pastors and field secretaries of the church. The main themes of the conference were: The Church—Its Nature and Mission; The Church of the Brethren—Its Uniqueness and Doctrinal Bases; Our Place in the Ecumenical Movement; and The Place of the Church College in Our Church and Time.

Both William Gnagey and John P. Brown, Jr., of the faculty, are attending graduate school during the coming year. The college has employed David McCormick of Arlington, Virginia, to fill the band position, and Professor Fred Bishop of Milwaukee, Wisconsin, to fill the interim position in education, left vacant by Mr. Gnagey. Mr. Bishop is a veteran school man, having served as principal, superintendent, and Assistant State Superintendent of Schools in Wisconsin.

Wilbur S. Barnhart, who for many years has been identified with the Indianapolis public schools, has decided to retire from the public school system. Mr. Barnhart has been employed as assistant business manager at Manchester College. His last assignment was as principal of the George Washington High School in Indianapolis.

The United States Government has given its final approval for the loan to Manchester College for the girls dormitory. According to present plans, the contract will be let late in September.

The Faculty Retreat was held at Camp Mack on September 2. In addition to discussion and addresses by members of the faculty, Norman Burns, Secretary of the North Central Association in Chicago, spoke on The Effective Faculty Team.

During the months of July and August, the March of Progress Campaign took a vacation, and was resumed in Southern Ohio about September 1. To date the campaign has covered the faculty, students, local community, and a number of church of Middle and Northern Indiana. Cash and pledges to date are $197,743.35. In addition Mrs. Isaac Oppenheim has endowed a Chair of Mathematics for the College, which in effect amounts to a gift of $100,000.

McPherson College

Dr. Maurice A. Hess was given a citation for service at the Church of the Brethren Annual Conference in June. Dr. Hess has taught for 30 years in McPherson College having given most of his time to Debate and Freshman English. He will continue his work in these areas.

McPherson College finished this past fiscal year with a balanced budget. She expresses gratitude to her many loyal friends whose gifts have made it possible.

Prospects for enrollment during the 1955-56 year are good. The college is expecting an increase in the total number of regularly enrolled students.

Twelve apartments for married couples have been constructed at an estimated cost of $65,000. All apartments have been reserved since early summer. Space is available to add twelve additional units when they are needed.

Additions to the faculty include the following: Paul Wagoner became the new alumni secretary on September 1. Paul graduated from McPherson College in 1949 and Bethany Biblical Seminary in 1952. Homer Brunk, class of 1930, leads the rural life department. Mr. Brunk got his master's degree in agriculture from the Montana State College in 1939. Kenneth Kinzie of Chicago, Illinois, is the new art instructor. In June 1954, he graduated from the Art Institute of Chicago with the Bachelor of Fine Arts degree. Mr. Kinzie has also been employed in the field of commercial art as an art designer.

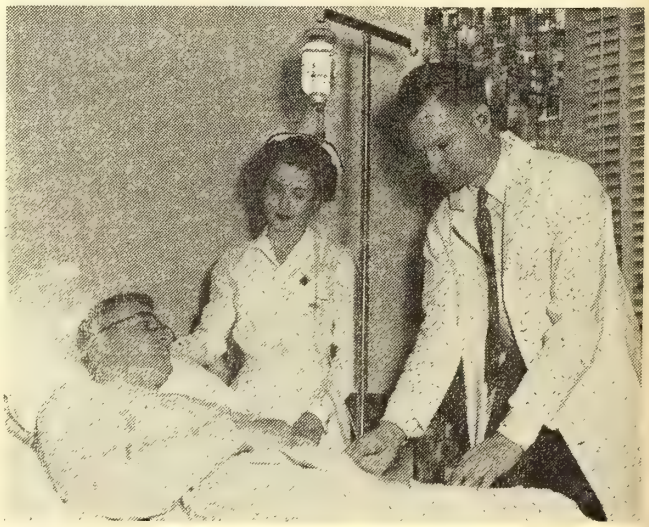
The Clinical Center, which consists of hospital facilities and laboratories, serves the various research programs of the National Institutes of Health

YOU ARE NEEDED FOR MEDICAL RESEARCH

FOR the past two years the Brethren Service Commission has arranged for volunteers to work in medical research in the Clinical Center of the National Institutes of Health, Bethesda, Md. Most of these have been young people, men and women, between the ages of eighteen and twenty-five. There is a need for additional people of older age brackets, especially between the ages of sixty and seventy, but anyone over the age of twenty-one and in good health may apply.

The National Institutes of Health is a medical research organization under the United States Public Health Service. Research is carried on primarily in seven areas: cancer, heart, infectious diseases, arthritis and metabolic diseases, mental health, dental research and neurological diseases. All of these programs need normal, well people who will volunteer to serve as controls in the research program. Such service is a definite contribution to the welfare of mankind.



In order to achieve better understanding of many diseases, the action of drugs and the functioning of various organs, scientists first need to know what happens in the normal person. These people do not need to be in perfect health, but they should be in good average health for their age.

The volunteer goes in the Clinical Center and strictly follows the doctor's orders. There are frequent blood samples taken, all body waste may be collected and analyzed in the laboratory, studies are made of the various organs of the body, diets are studied, and reactions to medicines are observed. No hazardous procedures are employed, but there may be occasional mild discomfort on some studies. The volunteer can spend most of his time reading, working with various crafts, taking trips to various parts of the city and spending time as he pleases. One hundred per cent co-operation is the main requirement for this service.

Living conditions at the Clinical Center are unusually fine. Two volunteers live in each room. Each room has a private bath. Food is brought to the room. Physicians, nurses, attendants and other staff members care for any needs the volunteer might have.

If you are interested in taking part in medical research as a volunteer, you should write to the General Brotherhood Board, Attention Brethren Service Commission, 22 S. State St., Elgin, Ill., indicating that you would like to have an application blank. On the application blank you should give a short medical history; indicate the time that you might be available and how long you can serve. No one should report directly to the Clinical Center or write there regarding interest in serving. After your application has been checked, you will be given notice of acceptance and the date to report.

All expenses, including transportation to and from the National Institutes of Health, will be furnished by Brethren Service, but you will not receive any remuneration other than the satisfaction of doing a good job for a worthy cause. The National Institutes of Health pays Brethren Service on a daily pro rata basis for each volunteer who goes into the program. This money is to cover the cost of the program to Brethren Service. Any excess will go into the Brethren Service Commission program. Write today if you would like to volunteer for medical research.

New York Times

Part of a group of 1,243 refugees arriving on July 12, on the USS General Langfitt, first of ten refugee transports scheduled to arrive this year

Refugee Resettlement Notes:

Statistics (August 1, 1955)

Region	Goal	Assurances Filed	Arrivals (Family Units)	Arrivals (Persons)
Central	350	130	10	23
Eastern	300	48	4	13
Pacific Coast	50	15	1	6
Southeastern	150	37	2	5
Western	150	6	1	5
Totals	1,000	236	18	52

THE NEW PLAN for filing assurances makes the Refugee Program much easier. To bring refugees to America, all that is now needed is an assurance stating:

1. that work will be found for the head of the family after the family arrives. (A specific job in advance is not necessary.)
2. that housing will be arranged in a certain locality. (No address is needed.)
3. that the refugee will not become a public charge.

It is now easier to help a refugee family immigrate to your community. Write to: Brethren Service Commission, Refugee Resettlement Office, New Windsor, Maryland.

1,243 Refugees Arrived on July 12 in New York aboard the transport General Langfitt: 651 came from Germany, 592 from Austria. This is the first refugee transport under the Refugee Relief Act. The 30,000th refugee, out of the 209,000 who will be admitted up to the end of 1956, was aboard this ship.

Most of the 1,243 men, women and children on the ship had waited years for their visas, and thousands more are still waiting. With the U. S. government stepping up refugee visas, nine more such transports are scheduled this year.

A total of seventeen refugee families (50 persons) have now arrived on Brethren assurances. Many more are expected to arrive in the next few months. Assurances total 223 out of the Brethren goal of 1,000. Time is important—and very important to the refugees still waiting in their barrack rooms for assurances from the churches in America. If you and your church congregation have not yet given an assurance for a refugee family —or if you can now give another one—write to the Refugee Resettlement Office, Brethren Service Center, New Windsor, Md.

IDEAS—PLANS—METHODS

GO Make Disciples of All

CHRISTIAN Education Week is observed annually by a majority of the Protestant denominations in order to do the following: to focus attention on Christian education; to lift up a special phase of Christian education for emphasis; to give a new impact to the Christian education program as it begins a new year's work.

Christian Education Week, Sept. 25 to Oct. 2, is an opportunity to recognize the fact that the Christian education program is the church's most effective means of evangelism and to make plans for reaching the unchurched families in the community.

The opening paragraphs of the handbook, Go Make Disciples, contain the following message:

"How many members are there in your church whose first contact with the church was through the church school? It is estimated that from sixty to seventy-five per cent of all who join the church on profession of faith come through the church school. Whatever the exact figure, the fact is that the church school plays a significant role in the decisions of a large number of persons to become church members.

"Not only are children brought into the church through their participation in the church school, but through this contact their parents are also brought in. There are children in every church whose parents are not church members. This is an evangelistic opportunity.

"The church school is a significant means of evangelism not only for the contact it has with unchurched persons. Its content and curriculum are at heart evangelistic. The goal of Christian education is that persons will acknowledge Jesus Christ as the Lord of their lives and serve him in the fellowship of his church. This, indeed, is evangelism."

Christian Education Week is an opportunity for the church school to face some of the challenges before the church. How can the church school program fulfill its responsibilities for reaching and teaching the persons for whom it is responsible? The purpose of Christian Education Week is to stimulate thought and action during the entire year on the evangelistic responsibilities of the Christian education program.

The entire church should be aware of the role and opportunity of Christian education. The education committee or commission should lay careful plans for special events during the week and for the entire year. Each church will need to make its own plans on the basis of its own needs. Some suggestions follow.

Rally Day

Each church will want to have some special occasion each year when special attention is called to the Christian education program. The first Sunday of Christian Education Week is a natural time for such observance, coming as it does at the beginning of a new church school year. Rally Day can be used as a time to invite parents to all the classes to explain the new year's curriculum. Special emphasis should be given to regular attendance of members of the church school. Each church should hold a dedication service for church school teachers during the morning worship service. It would be fitting to emphasize the evangelism of Christian teaching in the morning sermon.

Enlistment of Families

At the recent International Sunday School Convention held in Cleveland, Ohio, a strong emphasis was placed on the importance of reaching the whole family in the church's Christian education program. One of the greatest tasks of the church is to involve all the parents in the life of the congregation. When the parents are inactive the children tend to be irregular or drop out. A systematic program of home visitation will greatly help to build up and to strengthen the congregation. Parents of children can be enlisted to help teachers visit in the homes of all the children; active youth and adults can be organized to visit in all the homes of the inactive or nonchurch members.

Community Observances

There is a great opportunity during Christian Education Week for the churches of a community to work together to emphasize the role of Christian education in community life. Churches can help one another in sharing programs and creative ideas. Christian Education Week is a natural opportunity for the churches to join together in a united witness to the entire community on behalf of Christian education and its evangelistic concerns. There could be a community conference on Reaching Persons Not Now Reached by the Church. This could logically be followed by joint participation in a community religious census or the National Christian Teaching Mission. A family life clinic might be planned. Plans could be made for a community leadership training school where the workers of the various churches could receive instruction.

The attention of the entire community should be focused on Christian education. The contribution of the church school to community life can be stressed. Many resources are available to interpret Christian education to the public. Using whatever channels are open to them—radio, TV, newspapers, posters — the churches together can focus attention on the importance of the church school. News stories could be featured telling what the churches, both individually and co-operatively, are doing during Christian Education Week. There could be a radio panel discussion on the theme of Christian Education Week or a television show dramatizing persons' need for the church and the church's message.

Community posters stressing church school attendance at the "church of your choice" could be made and placed at strategic positions.

Quoting again from the handbook we get an answer to the question, "Who are the persons not reached by the churches in your community? They may be: a. Persons of a different social and economic level from members of churches, either higher or lower. b. Persons whose moral values differ from standards accepted by the churches. c. Particular age groups such as unmarried young adults and older adults. d. Persons who have never learned to look beyond physical and material things. e. Persons overlooked by the churches' ministry. Persons who move—one fifth of the American population moves each year, the handicapped and infirm."

Religious Census

A complete community religious census is the only way of finding the church affiliation of every person in a community. Because of the rapid shifting of population, it is urged that such a census be undertaken every five years. A census should be interdenominational for three reasons: the community impact a co-operative census makes; the more complete coverage that is possible; the better reception by persons outside the church. Only if a whole community census is impossible should a local church undertake one on its own. A census would be undertaken only where the churches are organized to follow up immediately on the information received.

Helps for Local Church Workers

Two small books are available from the Brethren Publishing House to help local churches plan an effective emphasis on Christian education during this special week and throughout the year. Go Make Disciples, the 1955 handbook for Christian Education Week, 30c; Increasing Attendance, 25c.

Purpose of Every-member Canvass

THERE will be over 250 churches of our denomination who will conduct every-member canvasses this fall. Some churches have experienced the rich rewards of this method.

But why bother with an every-member canvass? The chief purpose of the every-member canvass is to convert every member to SEEK FIRST HIS KINGDOM rather than idolize things and money.

The canvass is truly a missionary project. If you believe in foreign missions or home missions, you ought to believe in the every-member canvass. For Christ taught us to go out and compel them to become disciples. We all know that many of our church people do not give enough to Christ and his church to earn the title disciple.

"For where your treasure is, there will your heart be also." Many still subscribe to the old phrase, "One Lord, One Church and One Dollar." Most members, once they have grasped the meaning of seeking first his kingdom will herald it as a new conversion experience.

Christ hurt some persons' feelings when he drove the money changers out of the temple. Let us convert the financially unconverted members.—Gordon W. Bucher.

OLDSTER DAY

THREE years ago we had the first supper to honor the folks in our church who had entered into the golden years. The first two years the women's work was wholly responsible for this affair and this year they were greatly pleased to have the entire church enter into the service.

Each member who had attained the age of seventy years received a special invitation to attend the morning service and stay on for the noon meal. There are fifty-nine in this group. One member is ninety-one years of age and several are over eighty-five. Approximately forty attended the church service and thirty-three stayed for the noon meal.

The carnation, a gift from the church ushers, was given to each one as they entered the sanctuary. Bro. Carper preached a challenging sermon. He said we never get too old to have an interest in life. The golden years are the years of appreciation for all those things we did not have time for before. He encouraged them to use those free minutes for prayer. He reminded us of how our people are blessed. Old and young left the service with a greater desire to make the most of life. We took with us the words of Robert Browning, "Grow old along with me. The best is yet to be, the last of life, for which the first was made: our times are in His hand who saith, a whole I planned, youth shows but half; trust God: see all, nor be afraid."

Mrs. Harry Meyer, vice-president of women's work, had charge of arranging for the dinner. The teachers and officers of the primary department assisted her in cooking and serving a delicious Sunday dinner. Some of those old-fashioned delicacies such as smearcase and apple butter with home baked bread were served. Everyone enjoyed "dunking" the home baked sugar cookies. One man of eighty-seven told me he ate more than he would have in three days at home.

Youthful church leaders in Nigeria need an adequate grounding in Bible training if the church is to become truly indigenous

Robert A. Hess

Nigerian District Decides to Establish School

THE African district of the Church of the Brethren in Nigeria, West Africa met during the last week of June in a special meeting of church officers, pastors and missionaries. Chief among the business causing the district officers to call a special meeting was the need to make a final decision and lay plans for a school to provide Bible training for the young Christians of the growing district. After serious consideration it was decided to begin a training program at Garkida which will provide a two-year period of training for Christians who are approved by their local church boards.

The delegates were spurred to action by a conviction that the growth of the church here is being retarded greatly owing to the limited knowledge and understanding of the Christian Scriptures among the many who preach, teach, serve on church boards and fill the pews. A committee of three had been assigned the task of meeting with a three-man mission committee on evangelism to work out a plan for a Bible school.

As a result of these meetings an appeal for help was made both to the mission and directly to the Foreign Mission Commission for help. Chief among the needs was that for qualified instructors, but such things as classrooms, housing, food and travel also loomed large in their eyes.

The mission and the home board were aware of the tremendous need for more Bible training and were in deep sympathy with the difficulty of the Nigerian church to meet the need without assistance. But it was also important that in the establishment of any school strong effort be made by the Nigerian church in order that they think of it as their venture and value it as such. Thus the mission agreed to furnish the instructors, a building for classrooms and compounds in which the students will live. It was a recommendation based upon this offer which the committee brought to last week's meeting. They recommended that the school begin in January 1956 and that the church work out a way to provide food for students and a method of selecting those who will attend. Travel and clothing are to be left to those attending.

It was an easy decision to have each local church board examine applicants with the aid of a test to be supplied by the planning committee, but the matter of providing food for students proved difficult. The committee's recommendation that the church provide food marked a step in self-help for a church accustomed to having a foreign mission board provide for them in a fatherly way. What is more, it was in contrast to the policy of education under which the government operates. For those in training for teaching or technical jobs the government often provides all but clothing for only a very small tuition fee. True, the recommendation did not require the individual himself to pay. Everyone recognized that although the student should provide as much for himself as possible he needed help. Nevertheless, the recommendation did place the burden on the local group.

The delegates hesitated between a keen desire for a Bible school and a fear of its cost. This fear was very realistic indeed for it meant that a district budget of from four to five times the previous amount would be needed. Yet the threat of an increasingly rapid advance of Islam lay like a rain cloud over a building in the process of roofing a house. Several speakers spoke with authority on the dangers of the threat and urged the delegates to take a bold step of faith. Finally it was decided to have each congregation contribute at the rate of 28 cents a member to support the Bible school.

Twenty-eight cents seems like a small amount to an American accustomed to buying dime candy bars but to the average worker in this part of Nigeria it is a large sum. His income is fifty dollars or less a year. Even teachers make only about three hundred dollars yearly. When one takes into consideration that even with the colossal income of Americans they give only an average of one dollar and thirty cents per member the venture of their African brethren is commendable.

There exists some apprehension as to how well the local congregations will support the decision of the meeting. May God give them courage.

A total of 477,000 persons attended meetings addressed by Evangelist Billy Graham during his recent visit to 12 cities in 7 Western European countries. About 20,000 people made decisions for Christ at these rallies.

IN MEMORIAM

Elsie N. Shickel

Elsie Shickel was born on June 29, 1891 the youngest of Joseph and Nancy Shickel's nine children. When she was only two the family moved to Roanoke, Va., where Elsie received the benefits of a splendid school system. By eighteen she had graduated from high school and was a teacher in the public schools.

During the next decade Elsie alternated between going to school and teaching school. By 1918 she had acquired a master's degree in education and was serving as director of religious education for the General Sunday School Board.

In applying to the General Mission Board for service in India, Elsie wrote as follows: "At the age of eleven I accepted Christ as my personal Savior. This decision was made during a meeting held by Bro. I. S. Long, just a year before he went to India. It was then that my interest in India began. This may have been due merely to devotion to a child's idea. Nevertheless, the interest continued into my teens."

In the same letter Elsie wrote: "Soon after I entered the teaching profession again, Brother and Sister Long came home on furlough. His personal appeal to me in behalf of the foreign field impressed me very much, but I was not willing to forfeit all my plans for the future. So the struggle was on. It grew so tense that one night I asked God if it was his will for my life to serve him in a foreign land, that he send me a definite call through someone in authority, since I felt it would be rather presumptuous for me to volunteer for the field, knowing myself as I did. It seemed to me this was asking a thing practically impossible, but I satisfied my conscience at any rate.

"When Bro. Early returned from his visit to the mission fields, he came after me to go to India to teach the missionaries' children. This was such a definite answer to my prayer of a few years past that it almost swept me off my feet."

Concluding her letter Elsie wrote, "So here I am, if you can use me."

The mission board could certainly use such as Sister Elsie. By 1921 she was on the high seas sailing to India. For thirty-three years she gave herself unstintingly to the rewarding work of teaching and character building among the boys and girls of this land, especially in Anklesvar and Bulsar, for it was at these two stations that her years on the field were spent.

To Elsie goes the credit for founding the School of Practical Arts at Anklesvar. This school always remained small in numbers because it could not offer a job or a government certificate as its reward. But those who received the training are the ones who in later years realized the

The Piqua church as it appears today, following the recent remodeling and enlargement program

Piqua's Dream Comes True

ON JULY 10, 1955, the Church of the Brethren at Piqua, Ohio, realized a dream come true. It was a dream which began thirty years ago on July 12, 1925, when the first Sunday school was conducted at the church's present location. This lovely new church building with its additions and modernization has been realized at a cost of $60,000 with three thousand hours of donated labor by faithful workers.

The work was actually begun shortly after the Covington Church of the Brethren was built in 1915. A group of Piqua ladies who were members of the Covington church conceived the idea of organizing a ladies' aid society in Piqua, hoping some day to have a church in this city.

The first meeting place was a rented building owned by the Green Street and Grace M.E. churches. By January 1926, the Piqua branch of the Covington Church of the Brethren was organized and negotiations were begun toward the purchase of the rented building. This frame structure, which was approximately 50′ x 26′, without any basement, was purchased at a cost of $2,000. During the summer of 1926 Calvert N. Ellis, who was taking his work at Princeton University, became the student pastor of the congregation. He served again during the summer of 1927, and then arrangements were made for Bro. Charles Flory to become the pastor of the congregation.

During the year 1928 the church building was remodeled at a cost of a little less than $6,000. During the depression years it became necessary for Bro. Flory to serve the Troy church and the Piqua church jointly in order that the cost of his services could be underwritten.

Progress continued under the leadership of such men as Howard Eidemiller, Roy Honeyman, Harold Miller and Byron Flory. Bro. Samuel E. Keller became the pastor in 1935 and since that time plans have moved ahead rapidly and the present remodeling and enlargement program has taken shape.

The congregation itself has been surprised at its ability to carry out this splendid piece of work and to finance it. Across these thirty years the membership has grown to approximately 350 members.

It was appropriate that Bro. Calvert N. Ellis, president of Juniata College, who had been the summer pastor during the first two years of the church's beginning, should be the dedication day speaker.

If the same spirit of teamwork and dedication continues which has been manifested in this past period of years in the growth and development of the church, a rich and wonderful ministry can be enlarged and carried on for the kingdom of God.

The new church building is but a tool, albeit a necessary one, and tends to symbolize the spiritual structure which must be built as securely as this structure of brick and mortar, wood and stone.

In Memoriam

value of the instruction received. Here girls learned to be worthy homebuilders, to give helpful leadership in village groups, to teach classes and to use their hands and needles to make beautiful and useful articles and clothing.

In her personal life and in the work with her students nothing was ever wasted. She taught her classes to save all materials and to be economical in their use. In school the teachers were taught to use the simple things at hand rather than to depend on expensive supplies purchased in the stores.

Elsie was very thorough. She held the students to the best work of which they were capable. Careless work was never accepted. Both children and adults were given definite responsibilities and they were expected to live up to them.

Her life was characterized by deep loyalty to her convictions, faithfulness in her service and a firm faith in God and in the possibilities in the lives of those with whom and for whom she worked. Many hours were spent in counseling with her students.

Fellow workers learned something of the depth of her prayer life. When any difficult situation loomed in the offing she constantly took the matter to God. Decisions were made after much thought and prayer but once made were firmly adhered to.

Ever since a bout with influenza during her first furlough in the United States Sister Shickel's health has been rather poor. But the determination to serve her Master kept Elsie at work and in good cheer. By April 1955 she began her last battle for life. She entered the Christian Medical College hospital in Vellore, South India, where through the weeks of serious illness she made her last impact for the Christian Way. The attending physician wrote this about Elsie after her death: "I am sure she was glad to go. The Indian staff was particularly impressed with her lack of complaining. I hope I shall meet my end in as sweet a spirit." In the early morning hours of June 28, one day before her sixty-fourth birthday, Elsie Shickel left her adopted country of India for an eternal assignment. She died as she had lived, in peace and good faith. Her Lord has been sufficient to the end.

We Raised a Heifer

Mary Garber

From the pen of the author of Brethren Story Caravan comes this new heartwarming story of the experiences of one family in raising a heifer for relief. While this is a narrative of one family's experiences, it could be a composite of all those who provided heifers. Thousands of families throughout the United States co-operated in the Christian, humanitarian and far-reaching program that provided food —and hope—to so many needy families in other countries. This is indeed a story for entire family reading. Children will be delighted with it. Beautifully illustrated. Every church library should have a copy. 88 pages. Cloth. $1.75

Our choir, under the leadership of Mrs. Arthur Smith, presented The Holy City in our church and in the Brethren in Christ church. Bro. Hiram Gingrich of Lebanon held a week of evangelistic meetings at which time eleven united with the church. Prior to the meetings a number of teams visited in the homes of persons whose stated preference was for the Church of the Brethren. The women's work group meets monthly for sewing and various types of work. We are in the process of remodeling and redecorating the interior of our church. New classrooms were added, new pews and carpet purchased and the pulpit was changed. Bro. Albert Gray, professor at Elizabethtown College, gave two most helpful talks at our peace institute. Bro. Paul Robinson, president of Bethany Seminary, conducted the union pre-Lenten services in the Reformed church. Our pastor, David J. Markey, Jr., is president of the Carlisle Ministerium. Our pastor and Miss L. Anna Schwenk were delegates to Annual Conference.—Laura Parmer, Carlisle, Pa.

Western Pennsylvania

Pleasant Hill—Bro. Perry Huffaker conducted a week of musical evangelism meetings. He also assisted in the dedication of our newly constructed baptistry. At this time six new members were baptized. This was also the time for our annual home-coming with Bro. C. H. Gehman, former pastor of our church, speaking for both the morning and afternoon services. Bro. Stewart Kauffman led our organization in pre-Easter meetings. Five new members were baptized at the close of the meeting. Our spring communion was held on the evening of Holy Thursday. Our plans for the construction of an educational unit to our church have been approved and the work is to begin in the near future. In view of these plans we had a special cash rally on the first Sunday of June. We went far over our goal at this time. We are rapidly outgrowing our Sunday-school space. Our pastor, Bro. William L. Gould, holds a wedding bell reunion each June. At this time all couples that he married are invited to attend. The entire service is centered around homebuilding, and wedding music is used throughout the service. A picnic and afternoon of fellowship is held at our adjoining recreation center as a closing event of the day.—Mrs. Harold Speicher, Johnstown, Pa.

Westmont—We have received nine members by letter since our last report. Communion was observed on Palm Sunday. During Holy Week Brethren Edward Cauffiel of Locust Grove, Bro. Louis Bloom of Nanty Glo and Bro. Heckman of Waterford were guest speakers. The young people served breakfast on Easter morning and also had charge of the service following the breakfast. All mothers were presented small gold crosses on Mother's Day. Brother and Sister Earl Kaylor presented Bibles to the high school graduates and in the evening Mrs. George Wright of Fort Lauderdale, Fla., was speaker for the young people's program. On Juniata day Bro. Tobias Henry was our speaker. Bible school was held May 31—June 10. The children's program was on June 12. Bro. Kaylor represented our church at Annual Conference. During his absence one of our preministerial students at Juniata College, Richard Livingston, brought the message. Many projects are being planned to help raise money for our new church building. Our men have erected several church directional signs.—Mrs. Clifford Alwine, Johnstown, Pa.

Florida and Georgia

Orlando, Highland Community—Bro. Floyd Biddix left for his new church in Topeka, Kansas, in April. Bro. Floyd Irvin preached for us on Sunday mornings and Bro. Leroy Preston brought our evening messages. Our new pastor, Bro. David Webster, began his pastoral duties the first Sunday of July. The parsonage is completed and furnished. We have added some new classrooms to the church. The dedication of the new parsonage and the classrooms was held on July 10. On the same day installation service was held for Bro. Webster. Sister Goldie Swartz was with us the first of May. Six from our group attended the regional round table at Bridgewater. The junior choir gave a musical program on children's day and the men's choir gave a special program on Father's Day. We have been having good attendance at our midweek prayer meetings.—Mrs. Viola Preston, Orlando, Fla.

Mardela

Green Hill—As a result of Hurricane Hazel, April 26 and 27 were clean-up work days at Camp Mardela. Some of our men helped cut logs for the craft house and to sell them to help defray costs of other materials used in the craft house. On Mother's Day our church consolidated children's day and Mother's Day programs in the morning followed by a basket lunch. The young adult class sponsored an evening of fellowship in the church basement. On July 5 Brother and Sister Clarence Heckman, missionaries home on furlough from Africa, were with us. The women's work group furnished refreshments during our two-week vacation Bible school.—Mrs. Salome C. Hartman, Westover, Md.

Bethany—Since our last report the following laymen have been speakers at our services: Alton L. McDaniel, newspaper editor; Fay Grassmyer, science teacher; S. A. McDaniel, telephone engineer; Ray and June Tritt, workers recently returned from work in Kassel Germany; and Alex Glassmire, high school principal. Family night was observed with a covered dish supper and Roy Judy, Jr., as toastmaster. The annual district men's banquet was held May 20 with Nevin Zuck of Elizabethtown, Pa., as speaker. Three deacons, Billy Farlow, Alton McDaniel and Wilbur Root, were elected in April. Our pastor, William McDaniel, presented the Easter meditation at the sunrise service on the Greenwood school lawn. Bro. McDaniel was recently ordained to the eldership. Three of our young people attended the Wissahickon Memorial service in Philadelphia. In the evening they attended a love feast in the Germantown church. Our pastor has prepared the following pageants to be given on the lawn of our Bethel mission: The Life of Moses; The Life of Daniel; The Life of Peter; and The Life of Paul. —Mrs. A. Fay Grassmyer, Greenwood, Del.

Western Maryland

Fairview—Since our last letter, thirteen members have been baptized into our church. Upon the resignation of our pastor, Ross Speicher, our church council elected Bro. Eugene Mathews. Bro. Speicher will continue to serve as our moderator. The Underwood church gave an Easter play at our church. On Easter evening, our CBYF group presented a play at the district CBYF meeting. Carol Ikenberry gave a talk concerning her experiences as an exchange student in Germany. Our church sent an offering to the Bethany Hospital nursing home. Our women's work group sponsored the buying and putting down of new carpet in our church. A contribution of money was also sent to Bridgewater College.—Mrs. Homer Knotts, Gormania, W. Va.

Western Port—The films, Unto These My Brethren and Day Break, were used at our One Great Hour of Sharing service. The ladies' aid made sheets, pillowcases and comforters for relief. Eleven of our members attended the teacher's training course at Keyser. Harl Russell met with our building committee to help organize a building fund campaign.. Bro. Norman Harsh held a series of pre-Easter services in our church. Seventeen of our young people attended the district CBYF banquet. On pulpit exchange Sunday Bro. Jesse W. Whitacre was our guest speaker. On May 3 our church instituted a community church night with each church in the community invited to participate in the program. Most of the churches accepted the invitation and presented some form of worship or musical numbers. The home life committee sponsored a family night fellowship supper. The district workshop was held in our church with Mrs. Paul Halladay as main speaker. Bro. Halladay was also with us and was in charge of the Sunday morning worship service. At the evening service on May 8, we had a Mother's Day program. Several from our church attended the four-in-one conference at Petersburg, W. Va. Ingehurg Kretschmer, a German exchange student who recently graduated from our local high school, gave a talk relating to her experiences and comparing life in America with life in Germany. A loyalty dinner was held to begin a canvass in the congregation to raise money for the new church. We now have the plans and are ready to begin work on our new building. At an evening service we used the stewardship film, Through the Looking Glass. Thirteen from our church attended Annual Conference. During the absence of our pastor, Sister Pearl Boor brought the evening message on June 12, and on June 19 the children's day program was presented at the morning worship hour. At the evening service, the choir presented a special Father's Day musical program. Daily vacation Bible school was held June 22—July 1.—Mrs. John Smallwood, Western Port, Md.

Tennessee

Easley—Since our last report, three persons have been received into our fellowship by baptism. Guest speakers during the year have included Rev. Tamkin, minister of the Brethren Church and teacher of South Eastern Bible College, Birmingham, Ala., and two student ministers from Howard College, Birmingham. We held our birthday banquet in the church basement. Our church observed One Great Hour of Sharing with a message concerning the sharing program of the church. On Easter evening, the Sunday-school departments presented a program. Bro. Rhett Petcher, district fieldman, has been in our church several times during the year. On Sunday, May 1, Bro. Harl Russell, Brotherhood Fund Secretary, talked at both the morning and evening services. Our annual memorial service and home-coming was held at the church the first Sunday in June with Rev. Smallwood, pastor of a Baptist church, as guest speaker. Dinner was served at the noon hour, followed by a hymn sing in the afternoon. Our aid group continues with a weekly day of work.—Mrs. Edward M. Culler, Cleveland, Ala.

Blue Ridge—World Day of Prayer services were held in our church with the Baptist and Lutheran churches of our community participating. One Great Hour of Sharing was observed in our church in March. Pre-Easter services were conducted by our pastor, Bro. Earl D. Rowland. Family night is held on the third Sunday night of each month. The father and son banquet was held in April with the pastor of the Lutheran church as guest speaker. The women's group sent a quantity of relief goods and has reorganized for the coming year. The CBYF group meets twice each month. Vacation Bible school was held June 26—July 1 with classes for all age groups. Sister Earl D. Rowland was delegate to Annual Conference.—Hallie M. Foster, Blue Ridge, Va.

Oak Grove—Our young people have a Lord's Acre project this year and they also helped to put Camp Bethel in order for the camping program. A number of the men from our church attended the district men's banquet at the Poages Mill church. Our adult Bible class had a dinner in the basement of the church following a morning service. This class has the largest enrollment in our Sunday school. Three members of this class are past the age of eighty years. Bro. L. C. Coffman of Daleville was the guest speaker for the occasion. The ladies' aid has been quilting for relief. Our delegates to Annual Conference were Pastor John Sayre and H. C. Spangler. Ula Underwood, Gladys Eller and C. D. Spangler will serve as district meeting delegates. We held a vacation Bible school. The district men's choir recently gave a program in our church.—W. K. Coffman, Roanoke, Va.

Northern Virginia

Linville Creek—Our building committee has secured the service of R. W. Jenkins of Harrisonburg as architect for our new church. Bro. Earl Mitchell was evangelist for our spring revival. Thirty-two persons were added to our membership by letter and baptism. Membership training classes were taught for seven Sundays by our pastor and junior teachers. Bro. Merle Crouse of New Windsor, Md., brought the morning message on April 24. Spring love feast services were held at the Cedar Run house. Since we do not have a church house this summer, our boys and girls will attend vacation Bible school in our neighboring churches. Bro. Melvin Fitzwater and his family represented our church at Annual Conference. On May 8 fourteen children and their parents took part in a consecration service. A similar service was held at Cedar Run on May 29 with six children and parents participating. The church presented Bibles to the children who recently became a part of our membership. New officers have been elected for the women's work group. Brother and Sister I. S. Long were with us on May 22. The mother and daughter banquet was held at the Broadway fire house with Mrs. Lawrence Hoover as guest speaker.—Mrs. Roy Kline, Broadway, Va.

Second Virginia

Arbor Hill—We had our father and son banquet in March. For the southern end of our congregation we have purchased a bus. We have also bought new chairs for the Sunday-school classes. In April we had a family fellowship meal. Bro. William W. Longenecker held our revival service. Twenty-six were baptized and ten received by letter into our church fellowship. We held our mother and daughter banquet May 17 with Mrs. Eva Bowman as speaker. Our pastor and his wife served as delegates to Annual Conference.—Mrs. Bobby L. Cale, Staunton, Va.

COME UP HIGHER

THE mountain climber has a high calling. He must be willing to say, "One thing I do; forgetting what lies behind and straining forward to what lies ahead, I press on." Yet these words from Philippians refer to another calling—the upward call of God. And Paul has another goal in mind—the crown of righteousness that is laid up for him. Like any other climber, the disciple of Christ must keep looking up to the summit he strives for. But he is never satisfied with any single achievement, however strenuously he seeks it. Similarly in the church we set goals and strive for achievement—may God bless our efforts this year to reach the goals already marked—but it is the upward call of God, not merely the prospect of reaching a new summit, that should determine our calling. And God continues to call to us, "Come up higher."

Danger of Relativism

I appreciate the main purpose of Bro. Kissinger's article, "The Church of the Brethren—a Member of The Church" (July 9 G. M.) which is to eliminate the false sense of pride we often have about ourselves and to correct the error we make when we regard our denomination as the only true church. Yet I feel that he goes too far and is guilty of the relativism which is so crippling to positive dynamic faith today. Especially is this true in his statement, "But even this way of nonresistance is not the only way that Christians can take. There will be some Christians equally as conscientious as the conscientious objectors who take a different position."

To demonstrate where this line of reasoning leads to, we could say likewise, "But even this way of total abstinence is not the only way that Christians can take. There will be some Christians equally as conscientious as those who believe in temperance who will take a different position and believe that drinking is not at all incompatible with Christianity." It would be easy to give many other examples of this relativism which regards the other person's beliefs as being just as good as ours if he is sincere in them. But as Christians we believe that there is a right way and a wrong way, and that we know the right way in the example and teachings of Jesus. It is true that we interpret this way differently and that when we differ we should do so in the spirit of love. But at the same time if we do not have any feeling of certainty and assurance concerning our interpretation then we lose the sense of urgency of wanting to evangelize others to the way. And we lose the conviction of the rightness of the way of nonresistance, the way of clean living, the way of simplicity—the good life —the way of Jesus.—Dale Brown, Des Moines, Iowa.

Decided Optimism

At the United Nations' commemorative meetings in San Francisco in June a number of prominent personalities spoke "off the record."

As an observer both at official UN sessions and seminar discussions with UN leaders, I gained conviction that Christian men and women ought to support UN in its efforts toward peaceful settlement of disputes and world disarmament.

Here are some of the reasons for stronger hope, as I learned them in off-the-record conferences with delegates and unofficial observers at UN.

Disarmament, a phantom issue until a year ago, is now a real possibility.

The atoms for peace conference also illustrates the new spirit.

Four prominent men in the UN and some experienced nongovernmental representatives, in off-the-record talks, all agreed the UN is to stay.

Three were asked about veto power and they agreed it could not be abolished. The fact is every one of the big five wants veto power. The solution they see is a recognition of the relation of national power and international responsibility. The people must gain a realization they have interests that transcend national interests.

Charter revision, they all felt, was not possible to any great extent. While the UN charter is not perfect, it already embodies about all the power the great nations are willing to give it.

Lester Pearson, Canada's secretary of state for external affairs, told representatives of nongovernmental organizations that in the next ten years Western civilization may have its last chance to revise its relation with other cultures.

There are about 300 nongovernmental organizations accredited at UN. Their activities are most evident in two fields: human rights and the whole set of operating programs: UN international children's fund, refugees, technical assistance, food and agricultural organization, international labor organization, world health organization and educational, scientific and cultural organization.

The role of the NGO is generally a quiet one—and often important. The effective NGO's work with their membership back home and then with the UN delegates. They are one of the more potent channels for rallying popular support back home.

The Christian's job, then, on the UN front, is to encourage support in his own community for those UN resolutions and programs that will bring Christian practice into international relations: feeding the hungry orphans, caring for the sick, seeking through God the reconciliation of all men, proclaiming and observing the dignity of all men.—Don Elton Smith, Watsonville, Calif.

Chairman, General Brotherhood Board

The Upward Call of God

THE spirit of God seeks to lift the human spirit toward the full possibilities of the divine life. He invites us to adventure along trails of continuous spiritual growth, by planting discontent in our hearts and by challenging us with the thrill of the unattained. God spells out the goal in the living Christ. And we should respond personally as Paul did: "I press on toward the goal for the prize of the upward call of God in Christ Jesus" (Phil. 3:14).

Obviously God desires a personal response to his call. But we can help God present "the upward call" to one another. Our purpose here shall be to examine some of the avenues of our Brotherhood program which bring God's call to local congregations and individual members. For this is the underlying objective of all our activity on the Brotherhood level. Indeed, it is the task of the whole church, the General Brotherhood Board, the headquarters staff and every member everywhere to help God present his upward call in Christ to the world of our day.

Make Christ Relevant

It is our Christian faith that God's way for us was spelled out in the life of Christ. He continues to be God's upward call to us.

The church, however, has a continuous job to translate the motives, the ideals, and the techniques of Jesus into daily patterns of personal living. It is not enough to leave Jesus in Galilee, within the pages of the New Testament or back in the days of the Reformation. He must be in the thick of life today. He must make a difference in what we do, as well as how we do it. His light, his truth, and his love must be related directly to our current problems and plans as individuals, communities, churches and nations. If this does not happen, Jesus is not a lively reality to us.

By numerous channels of education—
By constant spiritual stimulation—
By vigorous, purposeful promotion—

We seek, on the Brotherhood level, to challenge congregations to relate the power of Christ to life today.

By providing a wide range of materials,
By sharing new leadership techniques,
By upholding expanding life goals,
we seek to encourage congregations to be more effective servants of Christ.

By pin-pointing human needs,
By lifting up world issues,
By insisting upon the priority of spiritual values
we seek to call our congregations to demonstrate clearly and creatively that Christ is the answer to our personal needs and our world problems.

Yes, as your Brotherhood Board and your headquarters staff, we seek to help God present his "upward call in Christ" with relevance and force for life today.

Keep Outreach Channels Open

On the Brotherhood level, we seek to help God present his upward call by offering channels for extending the outreach of the church. This is our response to the Great Commission—"Go . . . make disciples of all nations . . . teaching them to observe all that I have commanded you. . ."

In our Brotherhood program, we seek to maintain a wholesome balance between world missions, Brethren service, home missions and Christian nurture. As we grow in numbers and in Christian consecration, these programs should be expanded to keep the tension of God's upward call upon us. Also, as we participate in the Brotherhood Fund, we should know that we are helping: to build new churches, to witness to Christ's love, to serve our brothers in need, to promote the fellowship of teaching in many places, among many people, where we may never make a personal appearance.

World conditions call for a new strategy in the church's mission fields. But this does not mean there is less of the Christian witness. On the contrary, our mission enterprise around the world requires a new degree of zeal and a new determination to get Christ to the people. The world is hesitating, grasping and yearning for a new lease on life—it is our task to present the upward call of God in Christ with clarity, vitality and universality.

Right at home the opportunities for outreach also outrun our present resources. There are many unchurched folk in our constantly shifting, rapidly growing communities. It is estimated that we need to establish ten to twenty new congregations each year to hold our own in the current upsurge of population. The last few years we have been assisting three to five new churches yearly from the Brotherhood Fund.

It seems to some of us that a new strategy must be found so that we can greatly accelerate our present home mission development. Each member is a part of the answer to this challenge; you need to share your best thinking with the Brotherhood Board; you need to look for new opportunities in your district; you need to re-examine your degree of stewardship. Are you satisfied with your part in helping the church grasp its outreach opportunities in the present world?

Likewise, service and nurture present limitless outreach possibilities. In a world of revolution, in a world where two thirds of the people of Asia are hungry, in a world faced with hard-hitting materialistic philosophies, the church needs to move out boldly in a program of service to our brothers and to lift up clearly the superiority of the Christian way. These open doors of our Brotherhood program present God's upward call to you.

Deeper Life Commitment

Again from the Brotherhood level, we seek to present "God's upward call" by inviting our congregations and members to deeper commitment of life.

God never lets us rest where we are. The Christian life is one of continuous growth—moving, though often unevenly, toward the goal God marked out in Christ. We climb toward this maturity as we invite others to adopt Christ as their goal.

Always this means a call—to greater devotion, to larger horizons,
to wider services,
to nobler aspirations,
to deeper commitment of life!
When a new program feature is added,
When a new staff member is employed,
When a new type of service is offered,
When a new mission station is opened,
When a new church is started,
When a larger budget is proposed—there is no disposition on the part of the brotherhood board or staff to gain selfish power or to exercise control over the church! Rather, it is the combined, considerate response of these folk to the upward urge of the spirit in these times..

As we seek to fulfill the Brotherhood program through the achievement offering—we have a marvelous opportunity to help God present "His upward call in Christ" to many people in America, Puerto Rico, Ecuador, Europe, India, Africa, and Japan. How clear and strong do you wish to make the call?

What Do We Yet Lack?

Guest Editorial by Paul M. Robinson, Moderator of Annual Conference

A YOUNG man once came to Jesus to ask the secret of eternal life. When the Master reminded him of all the demands for goodness in the commandments of God, he could declare what most of us would find it quite difficult to say, "All these have I kept since my youth. What do I yet lack?" Jesus loved him for his character and for the honesty of his search for the good life. "One thing you lack," said Jesus. "Go, sell what you have, and come and follow me. Then you will have treasures in heaven."

If the church today is to be faithful in her mission, we must come to the Master with the same question, "What do we yet lack?" We rejoice in all in the church's program that is right and good. Christ himself must surely smile his approval upon every endeavor to enlarge the borders of his kingdom, upon the growth of the younger churches in mission lands and the growing world fellowship of the followers of Christ and their increasing oneness in him; upon our concern for the disinherited of the earth and our extensive ministries to their needs of both body and soul; upon new churches established in the homeland and the increasing desire to bring more souls to their Savior; upon our deepened understanding of the relevance of the Christian gospel to everyday life and our efforts to awaken the conscience of the world to the sinfulness of war, and the need for brotherhood. All this we have done. These commandments we have kept.

But, somehow, we know that even all of this is not enough. What do we yet lack? Can it be that, in spite of the good things we have done, like the rich young man of old we have failed to make the basic commitment of our lives to Christ and have allowed the things we own to keep us from completely following Jesus? When we think of all the good the Church of the Brethren has been able to do, we must think immediately of all that we could do more than this, if every member had completely committed his life and his money to the way of Christ.

The good may always become an enemy to the best. The real problem in our churches is not doing something for Christ. Every church, if it is worthy of that name, does something good, The real question is, "Are we doing enough?" Have we become so satisfied with what we have accomplished that we have closed our eyes to what we might be doing for our Lord?

On Sunday, September 18, we shall be called upon to give generously in our annual Achievement Offering for the Brotherhood Fund. Some will undoubtedly feel that they have already done their share. Some churches will say, "We have equalled our contribution of last year. That is enough." Others may say, "We have already reached our quota or met our budget. What more can be expected of us?" But Christ does expect more. He expects us to give all that we can, when once we have given ourselves. Our debt to him knows no quotas or budgets. We dare not measure our obligation to Christ by what we did last year or even by what any one else is doing. We have not done enough until we have laid our very lives upon the altar of his service. Then all we have becomes his and we shall withhold none of our possessions.

When we prepare our Achievement offering, let us first ask ourselves in all honesty, "What do I yet lack?" Then out of the inspiration of a renewed dedication, let us give freely of what we have too long withheld. The giving of our dollars because we have given our lives will not only assure the complete support of the program of the church around the world, but will open to the church new doors to genuine spiritual achievement.

The Driver Has Moral Responsibility

ACCORDING to Ned H. Dearborn, president of the National Safety Council, safe driving is a "modern application of practical religion." He adds that "the man behind the wheel must now be his brother's keeper."

Many of the traffic accidents we read about in each day's newspaper can only be described as needless slaughter. A few of them are the results of mechanical failures or freakish circumstances that cannot be avoided. But the great majority of deaths on the highway are unnecessary. They are caused by recklessness, violations of safety measures, rank discourtesy toward other drivers or, more often than the statistics reveal, by driving while under the influence of alcohol.

Better enforcement of traffic laws will help, but we cannot expect much improvement until drivers realize their own responsibility as stewards of human life, as persons accountable to God for their brother's safety as well as their own. —K.M.

True to Our Heritage

Desmond W. Bittinger

AS we examined the Annual Conference resolutions which we as a church would make, there developed some interesting discussion concerning our heritage. The ideas expressed were different but not divergent; they are all encompassed within Paul's magnificent statement in Phil. 3:12-16.

In these ways we can be true to our heritage:

1. We must hold true to what we have attained (v. 16). And these attainments are not insignificant. Among other things they are: A continuing purposeful study of the Bible; unwavering dedication to the teaching and example of Jesus, our Lord and Master; patience, forgiveness, and continuing nonviolence, even under persecution; the good life, including honesty and straightforwardness in all of our dealings, simplicity and wholesomeness in our manner of living; good neighborliness, of the kind Jesus taught, to be applied without restriction or barrier both near at hand and far away.

2. We must "count not that we have already attained" (v. 12). Paul had a good heritage too, but he did not quit the race or rest on his laurels because of that. We Brethren could rest on the achievements of the past. Perhaps some of us do. But this is to deny our heritage rather than to be true to it.

3. We must press on "to the prize of the upward call of God" (v. 14). The only way to do this is to keep on doing what we have done. But we must continuously keep doing it better and going beyond it. The following are some challenging needs.

There are mission areas yet untouched.

Two thirds of the world is still underprivileged; one third is continuously hungry; many are starving; some will die today.

Millions are being trained for destructiveness and war; only dozens, or at best scores, are being actively trained for peace.

There are vast new residential areas developing in our own land where churches are not being built.

There are hungry, dispossessed and neglected among our Indians, our Negroes and other minority groups in America, even in our own communities.

How can we be true to our heritage? Only by expanding our work; thus we forget not our heritage, we fulfill it!

Through Hearts Like These

Mrs. Dan West

THE great gray sky above and around me is giving of its fullness. The gift is needed and is given in the most appropriate fashion, droplets that neither crush nor kill, but the tender touch that encourages to greater growth.

This gift of rain fills me with a sense of gratitude. I need but lift my eyes to see - - - the rolling green hills, made greener by the rain, the swelling buds of vegetation, a promise of God,

the clean washed earth and its fragrant freshness;

or to turn my head to hear - - - joyful hearts expressing thanks and gratitude, open minds searching for the hidden truth, willing hands, turning to lift the load of work.

One gift of rain, so freely given with such love and thoughtfulness,

Unbinds our souls and we leap to new heights of Christian growth.

That is the real gift.

So too - - our gifts to the church, to God or to any of his other children must come from fullness - not budgeted, not levied,

not figured by mathematics,
not taxed,
not assessed,
not coaxed, but because our hearts are full of the love of God. Then we give as yonder myrtle showers into fragrance into space, as yonder apple tree drops its fruit for hungry mouths, as yonder spring flows to all or any who chose.

Those who give thus will be the believers in life and the fullness of life. These hearts will never be empty even though they overflow and empty out, to God and his children. Through hearts such as these, God speaks, and from their lives the earth is blest, and from their eyes God smiles upon His creation.

An Unchanging Christ

Hamilton Satvedi

THIS is the witness of an Indian Brethren, now in your midst; a fruit of your selfless Christian love, zeal and effort; one of the 10,000 you have saved physically and spiritually. Aren't you glad that the dollars you contribute go towards winning souls for God's kingdom?

A new challenge faces you today. God has stretched his empty hand for more funds for the entire church program. What have you to say? Malachi says, "Will a man rob God? Bring the ful tithe . . . put me to the test . . . if I will not pour down for you an overflowing blessing." Isn't that a wonderful promise! But wait, first bring in your tithes and offering.

Remember the hungry, the naked and the godless people throughout the world. Remember your own churches which require spiritual strengthening too. Are they not our brethren?

Remember, beloved, we are going to take with us after death not what we have, but what we are. Fill the coffers of the Brotherhood Board to overflowing for the service of the church to glorify the unchanging Christ in the changing world.

A Charge to Keep

Rufus P. Bucher

PAUL states in Eph. 5:6 that we should redeem the time for the days are evil. The German translation says we shall adapt ourselves to the times which we can do without violating any gospel principle.

We have a wonderful heritage as we look back and study the lives of those who served the generations before us. Their sincerity, devotion, honesty, family life, etc., built up the church. We give all due respect to those who served the age before us, but let us not spend to much time looking back, but let us look forward and press toward the mark for "the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus" (Phil. 3:14).

We must have a forward look and serve the present age. He that plows and looks back is not fit for the kingdom of heaven. When things looked dark for the Children of Israel Moses said, "Stand still and see the salvation of the Lord," but God said to the Children of Israel, "Go forward."

For the Glory of God

Dave Hunn

YOUTH have heard the "upward call of God" to share and have answered with the National Youth Project to support the Brotherhood program for nine days, or $32,054. We have heard the upward call —we have answered in words— we must answer his call with deeds. We are working toward more young people tithing each week. We set one day aside to work for the Lord and give "my day's wage." We have special offerings and projects in camp and at conferences, and some local groups have projects as "a sundae a week for God."

Youth are trying to pioneer in the Church of the Brethren by giving to the entire church program and not just one phase. We are striving to educate ourselves to give from the heart and let the church use it as it sees fit. This is why we have picked as our National Youth Project the support of the entire Brotherhood program and not one phase of it. We would like to help by giving, with love in our hearts, to the Achievement Offering. We want to answer the "upward call of God."

Increasingly Brethren are finding a new joy in giving. Through the practice of Christian stewardship, life is oriented as a whole, with all of one's time, talent and material possessions committed to God's use.

Through the Brotherhood Fund our gifts are transformed into meals for Austrian refugees, medicine for Nigerian lepers, Christian teaching for Navaho Indians, seminary training for a young minister. To thousands of others the church fellowship is extended, Kingdom values are taught and Christian beliefs are exemplified in the name of Christ.

Our ministry through the Brotherhood program has broadened steadily in recent years. Currently, however, the church is facing an impending obstacle as Brotherhood Fund receipts to August 20 lagged $18,000 behind the necessary increase of giving over last year.

Brethren are concerned that our outreach be expanded. At the recent Annual Conference spontaneous but united action called for a doubling of the Brotherhood Fund program in the next three years. By sharing sacrificially and joyously in the Achievement Offering September 18, each of us can assist in the fulfillment of this year's work and move on toward objectives for the Kingdom.—Howard E. Royer, Assistant Brotherhood Fund Secretary

Another parable he put before them, saying, "The kingdom of heaven may be compared to a man who sowed good seed in his field; but while men were sleeping his enemy came and sowed weeds among the wheat, and went away. So when the plants came up and bore grain, then the weeds appeared also. And the servants of the householder came and said to him, 'Sir, did you not sow good seed in your field? How then has it weeds?' He said to them, 'An enemy has done this.' The servants said to him, 'Then do you want us to go and gather them?' But he said, 'No; lest in gathering the weeds you root up the wheat along with them. Let both grow together until the harvest; and at harvest time I will tell the reapers, Gather the weeds first and bind them in bundles to be burned, but gather the wheat into my barn.'"

Matt. 13: 24-30 (R.S.V.)

The Consummation of the Kingdom

M. R. Wolfe

CONSUMMATION can be a cheering word. It speaks of something completed. The victory is won and the struggle over. It also suggests that the tangled threads of life straighten out and the pieces of life's jigsaw puzzle fit together and it all has meaning.

What would we do in this life if we did not have hope that that which ought to be will be? It is this hope of a better day that enables us to go on even if the way is dark and the tasks are hard. A recent writer says, "Whenever a living faith in a righteous, loving and holy God is brought up hard against the facts of human experience, some sort of eschatology must emerge if men are not to deny either their faith or the facts of their experience." It is here that the New Testament has a message to meet man's need. There is no way of escaping the fact that the teachings of Jesus and the great church leaders emphasize the vital relationship between the present difficult life with the future victorious life.

The kingdom dream began in the dim past. It was only a faint gleam but it told of the future and that God some day would do a great thing for his people. The prophets saw with more light. Their pictures are glowing and are filled with hopes for peace, harmony and social equality. They pictured the hope in terms that had meaning for their day. It would be a restored Davidic kingdom. This dream of a restored kingdom meant much to the Jewish people under slavery and persecution. It was in these hard days of the intertestamental times that the fanciful speculations of Jewish apocalyptism thrived. In spite of the extremes of some teachers this hope of a Messiah kept faith alive.

One day a carpenter from Nazareth proclaimed a new word to the people of Judea. "The kingdom of God is at hand." When one thinks of the many who were looking for such an event, it is a great surprise to see the response to this announcement. Only a few responded and they were the sinful, the outcast and the poor. Was this lack of response because there were no great demonstrations? Was it because there was no show of force? Were their hearts so filled with hate toward their enemies that only a Messiah of force would have suited them?

Jesus, however, was not confused. The kingdom was here and men were invited to accept it. He saw clearly that this was no sudden thing that would happen at once. He worked and taught ever in the light of a future that would complete the present. He lived and died in this hope, and this hope that God would in the end bring victory over sin gave the Christians of those early centuries the courage to be martyrs for him.

Our Scriptures have something to say about this consummation. The parables of the tares and the dragnet seem to have a common message, one to farmers and one to fishermen. These parables may be an answer to questions arising in the minds of some hearers. The kingdom of God at hand! Look at the evil in the world. The Roman heel is still on our necks. How can you say the kingdom has come in a world like this?

Echoes of questions like these can be heard today. Since evil is so prevalent the kingdom is not surely here. What is Jesus teaching here? There is evil in the world and it complicates the work of the good, but it is so intermingled with the good that you do not save the harvest by roughly pulling out the tares. Let both grow until harvest; then a separation can be made. We would like to know the why of evil. Why do we need tares? Why must some fish be bad fish? It will be good for us to realize that we know too little of either good or evil to grasp the meaning of either. Good wheat grows and ripens and is gathered into the granary. Tares grow but they do not defeat the wheat. A vital point here is that this sorting and harvesting is done by God who sets the harvest time and rewards the results. God is not asleep. He sees evil as we never can, and yet he allows it to have its time. There will be an end to evil and certainly in the spirit of Jesus we must believe that it will be conquered by good.

The judgment picture in Matt. 25 is a familiar one. Here it is sheep and goats that are separated. Here all mankind falls into two classes and here is given the basis for the sorting: simple goodness without pretense, unselfish service from a heart that cared, religion that went out to help the needy and to cheer the faint. This had been so much a part of them that they had not thought of it as religious service. What does this mean? It means simply that the kingdom begins in those who accept Christ as their Savior and by the grace of God they overcome sin in their own lives and grow more like their Master until one day they are judged worthy to enter the kingdom fulfilled. What did the goats do to be cast out? If we put other teachings of Jesus here they made a great ado, prophesied in his name, did wonderful works in his name, cried Lord, Lord, many times. But mostly they forgot the simple things of service to fellow men and selfishly forgot to give themselves that others might have some good things.

It may be said that the ethical life is held up too high here and that religion is more than ethics. It may seem that it is all too simple. But how does one grow a good life? Those who received the good reward had not neglected the devotional side of religion. No one achieves such a record without faith, prayer, self-denial and all the aids available that help one grow spiritually. Out of the stern conflict with evil within and without, these by God's grace have grown in character like their Master. This struggle

Ministry and Home Mission Staff Changes

Norman J. Baugher

SEVERAL months ago, Edward K. Ziegler resigned as director of evangelism effective September 1 and has now returned to pastoral work at the Williamson Road church in Roanoke, Virginia. As a pastor he is able to spend time with his family needed because of the health of Mrs. Ziegler. Bro. Ziegler gave great impetus to the work of evangelism during his four years of service on the staff.

Following the resignation of Bro. Ziegler, the General Brotherhood Board and its Ministry and Home Mission Commission studied the responsibilities of the staff. Because of the growing program in home missions, the work load of the executive secretary of the commission was exceedingly heavy. For this reason and in the faith that work in evangelism could now be shared to a greater degree by local and district leaders, the board decided to employ a successor to Bro. Ziegler who would also carry the ministerial aspects of the work in this commission. Bro. Charles E. Zunkel will continue as executive secretary of the commission with special responsibility in the areas of home missions, rural and urban life and ministry to nonresidents. Bro. I. D. Leatherman will continue to serve as Brotherhood evangelist. Other staff assignments will continue as at present.

The board is fortunate in securing the services of Stewart B. Kauffman as director of ministry and evangelism beginning September 1, 1955. Bro. Kauffman has proved himself a strong churchman, an able administrator and one who understands and appreciates the pastoral ministry. He has held pastorates in the Shade Creek church in Western Pennsylvania and the Everett church in Middle Pennsylvania. For the past two years he has served as executive secretary for the Eastern Region.

In addition to his pastoral and regional work, Bro. Kauffman has directed and worked in summer youth camps, served as district youth counselor, conducted many evangelistic meetings in the Eastern, Central and Southeastern Regions and served as member of district boards, district moderator, member of Standing Committee and member of the board of directors of the Pennsylvania State Council of Churches.

Bro. Kauffman was born in Reading, Pennsylvania, and attended the public schools of that city. He is a graduate of Elizabethtown College and of Bethany Biblical Seminary and has done graduate work at the University of Pittsburgh.

Stewart Kauffman is the son of Brother and Sister Melvin Kauffman of Reading, Pennsylvania. His wife is the former Helen Markey, daughter of Brother and Sister David H. Markey. They have two children, Sara Alice, ten, and S. Bruce, eight years old.

Realignments in Christian Education Staff

WITH the resignation of Ruth M. Shriver as director of women's work and home and family life, the General Brotherhood Board considered needs and possibilities of realignments in the program. As a result and in consultation with the National Council of Women's Work, the board decided to employ a director of women's work on a full-time basis and to add to her duties a number of program building responsibilities formerly carried by members of the National Council. The board also looks toward the enlargement of the home and family life program. For a two-year period, however, the board has asked that James Renz, who has been serving as director of temperance education, also carry responsibility for the home and family life program on a half-time basis.

Sister Shriver has completed a long period of significant service to the church, first as director of children's work for almost twenty years and as director of women's work and home and family life for nine years. Her creative leadership has left a strong imprint upon the areas of the work which she has served. The appreciation of the board and the best wishes of her co-workers go with her as she enters work which will permit her to remain at home with her aged mother.

Miss Anna Warstler of Goshen, Indiana, has been appointed by the board to the directorship of women's work beginning September 1. Sister Warstler brings to this position a deep devotion to Christ and the church and a commitment to serve wherever God calls her.

Anna Warstler

Anna Warstler has served the church as a missionary in India since 1931. Her effective work there included teaching in the girls' schools, directing religious education in the schools, training teachers, organizing and fostering women's groups and teaching in the Bible School at Bulsar.

Sister Warstler is a graduate of Manchester College and received her Masters' degree in religious education from Bethany Seminary. Before going to India and during furlough periods she has been active in many phases of church life.

Anna Warstler is the daughter of the late Charles and Nancy Warstler of Goshen Indiana. She will live at 173 North Worth Avenue in Elgin, Illinois.

This appointment to the directorship of women's work has been made for a two-year term to allow for the possibility of Sister Warstler's return to India following that period if it seems advisable at that time.

The Family Counselor

Naomi Will H. K. Zeller, Jr. Jesse Ziegler

The Family Counselor welcomes letters of inquiry. They may be addressed: Family Life Department, General Brotherhood Board, 22 S. State St., Elgin, Ill.

Dear Counselor,

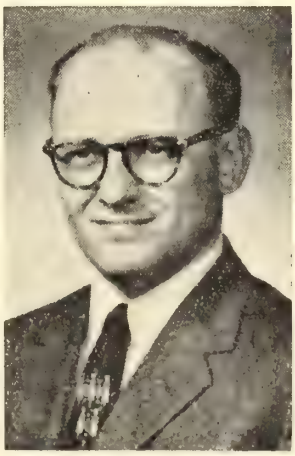
I have a problem concerning a deep friendship. My friend is a married man. He and his whole family have been my good friends for several years. I have spent some time in their home and they are all very dear to me. He and I have often enjoyed long talks with each other, but recently it has been hard to find time for this. He says he loves me. I know that love is fine and good because he has never been anything but respectful toward me. Both of us want to do what is right. We don't see how we can go on living if we can't see each other. But recently his wife has begun to object to our friendship. She says that I should be finding someone of my own age to love instead of being so wrapped up in her family. She says I may come to visit in their home whenever I can find time, but that isn't the same. Must we give up these talks, or should we just keep them secret, since they worry her? We don't do anything wrong. Please say it is alright to keep on seeing him.

Troubled.

Dear Friend,

I wish I could be sure that this letter would be of some effect in saving you from having a serious hurt and causing a serious hurt. I have some fear that you just want someone to put his stamp of approval on the course that you want to follow. It must be clear that all I can do is to help you face the issues involved and that you must make the decision. But please do have your eyes open to the issues involved.

You are involved (innocently, I believe, up to this point) in the first steps of breaking up the family of another woman and man. From your letter I believe that what you are doing is done in naivete rather than with the intention of pulling the loyalty of a married man from his wife. But you must see that any woman in her late teens or later who arranges repeatedly to see clandestinely a married man threatens her own reputation and the structure of the marriage of the man. You are no longer a little girl and these private meetings cannot be interpreted as "just talk." Almost inevitably they will, if continued, lead to increasing intimacies which will be a betrayal of the loyalty and responsibility which your married friend should have toward his marriage and which you as a single woman should have for any marriage—especially that of a professed friend.

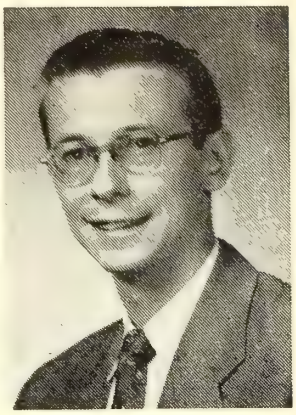


Your letter, in truth, sounds as though you have gone further than the point of an easy handling of the problem. I wish I could say to you that it would be all right for you to continue to go to this home. I very seriously doubt the wisdom of even that. I suspect that the only way for you to be fair to the family that have been your friends is for you to cut off completely the relationship with this man. Only so can you spare yourself and this family the greater hurt that will almost inevitably come if you contine the relationship.

The wife is right, you know. Your real satisfaction should be found in cultivating relationships with eligible men of your approximate age. There is something unhealthy about either a man or woman cultivating a relationship in which by the very nature of the case there is no future.

God makes marriage for one man and one woman to live together and love each other so long as they both shall live. For anyone to continue deliberately to threaten the fulfillment of God's intent is sin.

Would it be the part of wisdom to tell this man to give his attention to his family and that you will find someone who is not already committed—thus save yourself and his family the terrible hurt for which you are all headed?



Jesse H. Ziegler.

Howard E. Royer Assumes Staff Position

HOWARD E. ROYER began service on the staff of the General Brotherhood Board August 10, 1955, the date marking the completion of his two-year period of alternative service. He assumes the position of assistant secretary of the Brotherhood Fund and director of publicity. This position was created by the Board in order that Harl Russell, secretary of the Brotherhood Fund and stewardship education, could be released to give more assistance to the churches in stewardship education and local church finance. Bro. Royer has already given very valuable help as office assistant in this department during his term of alternative service. The major share of his time in the future will be given to promotion of the Brotherhood Fund and the balance to work in publicity.

Howard E. Royer

Bro. Royer is an active layman in the church. His activities have included Sunday-school teaching and assisting in and directing financial campaigns and every-member canvasses. He is a graduate of Manchester College, where he was editor of the college paper, copy editor for the yearbook and, during his senior year, director of publicity. He taught for one year in the public schools in Ohio.

Howard is the son of Brother and Sister Forrest M. Royer of Arcanum, Ohio. His home church is Greenville, Southern Ohio.

A. Stauffer Curry Becomes Church School Editor

THE General Brotherhood Board is happy to announce that A. Stauffer Curry began his service as church school editor for the Church of the Brethren on September 1. In this capacity he serves as the administrative head of the department of church school publications and gives major attention to curriculum materials for adults.

Bro. Curry is well known in the Church of the Brethren, having served most recently as Conference moderator. He brings to his new position a wide experience in church life including local church, camp and district responsibilities in the Eastern and Southeastern Regions. He served for five years as executive secretary for the Southeastern Region and for three years as secretary of field program for the Brethren Service commission and the General Brotherhood Board.

A. Stauffer Curry

Bro. Curry has had teaching experience in high school and taught religion and philosophy at Bridgewater College for two years. Since 1949 he has been executive secretary of the National Service Board for Religious Objectors with his office in Washington, D. C.

Brother Curry was born in Hershey and attended grade and high schools in Palmyra, Pennsylvania. He is a graduate of Elizabethtown College and received his S.T.B. degree from Westminster Theological Seminary, Maryland, his M.A. in psychology and sociology from Catholic University of America and his Ph. D. in psychology and religious education from New York University.

Bro. Curry is married and has two children. The family will live at 390 McClure Avenue, Elgin, Illinois.

Consummation

made the sheep genuinely good while the goats became genuinely evil.

These scriptures teach that evil is here and it will affect our lives. The way may be hard and difficult, but there is an end. A time will come when evil is conquered and righteousness will reign. That future can be realized by entering the kingdom here and using its power and help to grow spiritually until by God's grace we are enough like our Master to be given the privilege to dwell with him eternally. This is our hope.

There are many questions about how this end will be. Here is a world for speculation but it is the part of wisdom for us to leave that in the hands of God. He will do all things well. We may not know the mechanics of the consummation but we can know the Father who brings it to pass.

"Wealth" and "Virtue"

Luther A. Weigle

THE word wealth was used in the sixteenth century not only to denote riches, but also in the sense of weal, well-being, or welfare. Unless we remember this, Paul's counsel in 1 Cor. 10:24 looks like encouragement to theft: "Let no man seek his own, but every man another's wealth." The present translation is: "Let no one seek his own good, but the good of his neighbor."

In the King James Version of the Old Testament, the word wealth is used three times as a translation for the Hebrew tob, which means "good," either as an adjective or as a noun. The passages are Ezra's recital (9:12) of the commandment not to intermarry with the people of the land, "nor seek their peace or their wealth"; the praise of Mordecai (Esther 10:3) as "seeking the wealth of his people"; and Job's description of the prosperity of the wicked who "spend their days in wealth." The Revised Standard Version uses "prosperity" in the passages from Ezra and Job, and "welfare in the passage concerning Mordecai—"he sought the welfare of his people."

Both King James and Revised Standard Version use welfare as the translation for tob in Neh. 2:10, which tells how Sanballat and Tobiah were greatly displeased that Nehemiah had come "to seek the welfare of the children of Israel."

Another word which may be misleading in two contexts of the New Testament is virtue. It does not refer to moral character in the statement made by Jesus when a woman touched him in the hope of being healed: "Somebody hath touched me, for I perceive that virtue is gone out of me" (Luke 8:46; compare Mark 5:30). Virtue here, and in Luke 6:19, means nothing more than "power," and "power" is the proper translation of dynamis, the Greek term which is used in these passages.

The Church Is Necessary

Ivan Fetterman

THE most important institution in any community is the Christian church. It is basic to all other institutions, both local and national, and is dedicated to the building of a nobler life, a stronger nation and a better world.

The primary task of the church in the community is to win the individual for Christ. Only as Christ is able to change the individual shall we see changes in economic life, in education, in government. One good Christian man on a township council is worth a dozen resolutions from a church council. If we really want Christian government we must put capable Christian men and women into office. But first of all, the mission of the church is to change the individual. Then shall we have safer banks, better schools, less industrial strife and happier communities.

The church must also help to expose open and secret evils which hinder the building of finer community relationships for boys and girls, for schools and churches. We must not only expose, but fight against the liquor industry, the gambling places, the dope peddlers and the houses of public immorality. With Christ, we must also condemn the inequalities in wealth and possessions when these hinder the growth of the individual. Christ came, not just to bring life, but to bring it more abundantly to every man. Material wealth is important, but it is never the chief end of man.

Likewise it is necessary for the church to expose the unbrotherly distribution of food. At times we hear of good food being burnt or buried or literally wasted when people are hungry and starving. There is nothing right about that, especially when God has given us adequate resources and a great responsibility to help every man to keep body and soul together.

And surely today, as never before, the church is necessary to emphasize the world scope of the Christian family. Eventually it must become one great family of nations under the Fatherhood of God. The kingdom of God to come in one place must come in every place. No nation can live unto itself, but we rise or fall together. We can rise only as we come to realize that all men, all races, all classes, all nations are sons of God.

ORA W. GARBER

Do not grieve that the day which is past
Has sped swiftly away,
For the longest of them fades too fast,
Not created to stay.

Do not fret that not all has been done
You had hoped you could do.
Opportunities rise with the sun
When tomorrow is new.

Thank your God for the blessings he's sent
And in confidence pray
That your efforts may wisely be spent
As you greet the new day.

R. E. Mohler Honored by Men's Work

A citation for Robert E. Mohler, who served as executive secretary for the Council of Men's Work since 1931 and who has announced his retirement, was read at the Men's Work meeting at Grand Rapids. At that time Brother Mohler was presented with a gift and an additional sum of money was given to Bethany Seminary to be used as a scholarship for some worthy seminary student. The scholarship was presented in the name of Secretary Mohler.

Only one change was made in the Men's Work council for next year. Attorney Robert Stover of McPherson, Kansas, was appointed to fill the place formerly held by Harry Lehman of Abilene, Kansas. Officers for the coming year are: president, Ronald Rowland, Hanover, Pa.; 1st vice-president, Bruce Tharrington, Caldwell, Idaho; 2nd vice-president, Mark Roller, Toms Brook, Va.; 3rd vice-president, Willard Powers, Mt. Morris, Ill.; recording secretary, Martin Stine, Adel, Iowa; and treasurer, Robert Greiner, Elgin, Ill.

Four projects were chosen by the men for the coming year. One or more of these projects will be promoted by local, district and regional groups. The projects are: first, the distribution and sale of road signs and decals that may be used to direct travelers to the location of Brethren churches; second, the $10 Club; third, daily Bible reading; and fourth, support of Brethren colleges.

Church Membership in U. S. at All-Time High

More Americans belong to churches of all faiths than ever before in history—a total of 97,482,611, or slightly better than six out of every ten persons in the Continental United States. Exactly 60.3 per cent of all Americans are church members—a gain of 2.8 per cent over the previous year. The population's rise in the same period was 1.7 per cent.

The greatest numerical gains in 1954 were shown among Protestants —up 1,286,817 for a new total of 57,-124,142. Percentage increases for the three major faiths over the year were: Protestants, 2.3; Roman Catholics, 2.9; Jewish, 10.

Local congregations number 300,-056, representing an increase of 1.9 per cent over 1953. The average number of members per local church stands today at 325. New church construction last year cost $588,000,-000.

The new total of enrollments in Sunday or Sabbath schools is 37,-623,530, representing an increase of 6.3 per cent over last year. All but seven per cent of the grand total are Protestants.

At least 213,167 clergymen are in active charge of local churches. The total number of ordained persons is 341,422, including ministers who have retired or changed to other occupations.

Contributions by churchgoers in Protestant and Eastern Orthodox churches amounted last year to $1,537,132,309, for a per capita average of $45.36. The year's percentage increase was 8.5. These are the highlights of church statistics compiled by the Yearbook of American Churches published by the National Council of Churches.

Russian Elected Baptist Alliance Vice-President

Some 8,500 delegates from 60 countries attended the golden jubilee congress of the Baptist World Alliance in London. The assembly marked the fiftieth anniversary of the Alliance's founding. According to Dr. Arnold T. Ohrn, secretary of the Alliance, Baptist membership throughout the world has increased from six million in 1905 to nearly twenty-one million today.

Dr. Theodore F. Adams, pastor of the First Baptist church in Richmond, Va., and a speaker at the Brethren Annual Conference held at Richmond in 1952, was elected president of the Baptist World Alliance. Dr. Adams is one of the three United States Baptist clergymen who visited Russia during August.

Russian Baptists were represented at the meeting by nine delegates. Jacob Zhidkov of Moscow, who was elected a vice-president of the Alliance, said that Baptist churches in Russia baptize from 10,000 to 12,000 persons each year. Today, there are 500,000 Baptists in some 5,000 churches. Another Russian Baptist churchman, Alexander Karev, said that people today worship Christ as a teacher of ethics but not enough as the Savior.

In their resolutions the Baptists reaffirmed their basic principles of religious freedom, stressed their deep desire for peace among all men everywhere and urged greater cooperation of Baptists with Christians of other denominations. Evangelist Billy Graham addressed the closing session of the jubilee meetings, speaking to nearly 50,000 persons. He said that during the next five years the world "might pass through its most triumphant hour or its most tragic."

Big Four Leaders Told of Church Members' "Prayerful Concern"

Leaders of the big four nations who attended the conference at Geneva were told that church members throughout the world followed their summit conference with prayerful concern. Letters conveying that message were sent to conference participants by the Commission of the Churches on International Affairs. This commission is a joint agency of the World Council of Churches and the International Missionary Council. The letter to President Eisenhower, leader of the U. S. delegation, made some special references not included in those to the other statesmen. It reminded the President of his address to the World Council's Second Assembly last August in which he suggested the designation of a World Day of Prayer for Peace.

Churchmen Ask Long-range Government Policy on Indians

A long-range bi-partisan government policy on American Indian affairs was urged in resolutions adopted by the National Fellowship of Indian Workers meeting at Estes Park, Colo. The delegates also endorsed a statement by the National Council of Churches that was highly critical of the speed with which the government is seeking to move Indians off reservations.

The Fellowship is made up of missionaries and educators of twenty-three Protestant denominations who work with the Indian tribes. In their resolutions, the delegates called upon President Eisenhower to appoint a nonpartisan commission, including Indian members, to conduct a study, "from the viewpoint of Indian welfare," to be used in formulating a national policy.

Religious Agencies Sponsor First Shipload of Refugees

Religious agencies sponsored nearly all the 1,243 persons who arrived in New York on the transport General Langfitt, the first full shipload of Europeans admitted to this country under the 1953 Refugee Relief Act. The new arrivals included 245 children under the age of 12.

The 1953 Act permitted the admission of 209,000 persons above normal quotas until the end of 1956. But up to June 17 only about 6,000 refugees had reached this country. Church groups have been critical of delays in the operation of the Act. Recently the U.S. government has stepped up the issuance of refugee visas.

Christians in India Total More Than Eight Million

Christians in India now number 8,166,255 out of a total population of almost 362,000,000, according to figures published by the National Christian Council of India. The greatest concentration of Christians is in the southern state of Travancore-Cochin, where there are 2,968,000.

About forty-six per cent of the country's Christians are Roman Catholics. India's largest non-Catholic churches are the Orthodox Syrian church of Malabar, reporting 350,000 communicants, and the Church of South India with 331,000. Foreign personnel of non-Catholic churches, including missionaries' wives, total 4,877, an increase of 500 since the last National Christian Council handbook came out four years ago.

The handbook also listed 266 hospitals, 49 leprosariums, 43 colleges, 37 theological schools and 2,107 other non-Catholic institutions. Tabulated were 234 Christian periodicals edited in 20 Indian languages. The Scriptures were listed as available, wholly or partly, in 102 of the 145 languages and dialects of India and Pakistan.

Church Council Sponsors Interracial Vacations

Thirty children of Negro and Indian families in Minneapolis and St. Paul were guests for ten days at farms in twelve Minnesota communities. This is the eighth consecutive year that the Minnesota Council of Churches has sponsored the interracial visits which send children, aged nine to twelve, into the country for vacations on farms of white families. The children were guests of families belonging to Presbyterian, Methodist, Brethren, Evangelical United Brethren and Protestant Episcopal churches.

British Clergymen Amazed at American Church Activity

Five British clergymen who spent the summer in this country as exchange preachers said that they were amazed at the tremendous activity of American churchgoers. The Rev. Henry C. Snate, Anglican vicar of Whalley, Blackburn, Lancashire, said the British group had been impressed by "the great number of people who go to church, the distances they will travel and the lengths they will go to attend church, and the great amount of activity laymen undertake in the church."

Quotes in the News

Sidney Lovett, chaplain at Yale University: "Though no mass revival of religious enthusiasm on the college campus is in the offing, the truculent disdain for spiritual values, earlier nourished by the jaundiced philosophy of Theodore Dreiser and Henry L. Mencken, is largely vanished as the spirit of inquiry has succeeded negation. The prevalent mood in our colleges today with respect to religion is one of honest, intelligent inquiry."

Ralph W. Sockman: "In this age of specialization it is the duty of religion to help men see life steadily and see it whole. Our day calls for a whole gospel for the whole man. We should preach the gospel of salvation and not merely the gospel of security."

The Central Committee of the World Council of Churches held its annual meeting the first part of August in this small town of Davos, in the midst of the Swiss Alps. The ninety-member group carries on the work of the council between its general assemblies, which are held every six years. M. R. Zigler of the Church of the Brethren is a member of this committee

The question has arisen as to how conscientious objectors will be affected under the new UMT-Reserve bill recently passed by Congress. Since Congress rejected the Pentagon's proposal to make the reserve training program compulsory, there is nothing in the measure as it now stands that directly affects conscientious objectors. All registrants who do not volunteer and enter the reserve training program become eligible for service under the regular draft law. Under this law the provisions of civilian alternative service remain the same for conscientious objectors.

Bro. J. E. Rolston died at his home near Sheldon, Iowa, on August 22 following a long illness.

Lorraine Leiter of Smithsburg, Md., a member of the Rouzerville congregation in Southern Pennsylvania, has taken a position in the Brotherhood offices as secretary to the treasurer of the General Brotherhood board.

The name of Ruth Baldwin was inadvertently omitted as the author of the brief article "Oldster Day" which appeared in the last week's Gospel Messenger. The article referred to an activity in the Palmyra, Pa., church.

Betty Debels, a member of the Oakland church in Ohio and a former displaced person from Latvia, was honored recently at the conclusion of a sacred music conference held at Winona Lake, Ind. The silver plaque given to Miss Debels at the close of the conference was the first in the thirty-three years of its history. The plaque was presented by Homer Rodeheaver, well-known song leader.

Martin Luther, the widely-heralded motion picture which tells the story of the Reformation, will be available this fall in 16-mm. form for churches, schools, libraries and organizations. The picture, which has been seen by an estimated 20,000,000 Americans, was originally intended solely for use by churches and religious schools. However, film experts reported that it possessed the excellence of quality and dramatic appeal to make it a box-office success in theaters.

Young adult groups at the Green Hill church, Mardela district, and Highland Avenue church, Elgin, Northern Illinois-Wisconsin district, each contributed an hour's support of the Brotherhood Fund program. The cost per hour is $148.40. Their all-inclusive sharing follows the pattern of young people who are working toward sustaining the Brotherhood program for nine days as their national project.

Once in a Lifetime

Leland A. Nelson

The United Nations Headquarters in New York City

LITTLE did I realize that the envelope which the hotel clerk handed me as I asked for the key to my room was to open a door to a new and unique experience in my life. The envelope contained a personal invitation from Secretary of State John Foster Dulles to attend the reception given by the United States government for the delegations of the other fifty-nine member nations attending the tenth anniversary meeting in San Francisco. This invitation led to an evening of unequalled opportunity to chat informally with many of the leading statesmen of today's world.

The three hours literally whizzed by as I visited with men like John Foster Dulles, Henry Cabot Lodge, Jr., Dag Hammarskjold, Eelco van Kleffens, Prince Waithayakon, Dr. Yeh, V. M. Molotov, the Prince of Yemen, Momolu Dukuly, and many, many others. During the evening and at other times during the week it was my privilege to visit with the heads of the delegations from twenty-seven of the sixty member nations of the UN.

To one unaccustomed to mingling in such circles, it was both revealing and refreshing to observe the warm, friendly spirit which characterized many of these world leaders. It seems almost inevitable that the spirit of men like Charles Malik, Leslie Munro, Dag Hammarskjold and Andrew Cordier will eventually "leaven the entire loaf." The deep insight and the keen analysis of the world situation possessed by leaders like Charles Malik of Lebanon, Abdollah Entezan of Iraq, Mahamoud Fawzi of Egypt and Moussa Al-Shabandar of Iran were very impressive. They brought into sharp focus the real issues facing the UN and the world today.

Mr. Molotov was most cordial and friendly and willingly conversed through his interpreter about his views concerning the future of the UN. In response to a question as to how optimistic he was about the future of the UN, Mr. Molotov replied: "It all depends on how much the nations present at this tenth anniversary session really mean what they have been saying in their speeches."

One of the delegates from Egypt told of an organization recently developed between the Christians and Moslems in Egypt. He spoke optimistically about the closer co-operation which this Christian-Moslem fellowship was certain to bring about. As he shared his dream of the future, he stated that he believed we would live to see the day, at least in his country, when Jews, Moslems and Christians would no longer be known by their respective religious faiths, but as the members of a common fellowship, the children of God.

Mr. Hammarskjold, when asked if he felt we could achieve world peace apart from a spiritual and intellectual revival, replied emphatically, "Absolutely not."

Charles Malik seemed to sum up all that these and the other world leaders said. I was deeply moved and impressed with the spiritual depth, the keen insight and the absolute sincerity of this great leader as we visited together for more than thirty minutes. Mr. Malik indicated during our conversation that the real threat to world peace is not communism, as some would have us to believe, but materialism and secularism. He pointed out that communism and westernism are but the symptoms which indicate the presence of the real disease. When asked if he were optimistic about the chances for achieving the goals of the UN, which would include a just and lasting peace, Mr. Malik replied, "I'd like to be." He prefers to be very frank and realistic; one might describe him as cautiously optimistic. He definitely feels that it is possible for us to achieve the cherished goals of brotherhood, co-operation and peace, but he insists that they cannot be legislated or achieved by proclamation or resolution. He feels these goals can be achieved only if we fulfill the moral and spiritual requirement upon which their existence depends. He indicated that the philosophy of materialism and secularism is rapidly engulfing the entire world and that this philosophy is completely separated from the moral and spiritual laws which are so essential to the attaining of the goals of the UN charter. He pointed out that our selfishness, greed, lust for power, our hate and fear grow out of our materialistic way of living. These, he declared, make the achieving of peace impossible. He emphasized the absolute necessity of a spiritual and intellectual revival if we are to stem the tide of materialism and to achieve the goal and objectives of the United Nations. Without this, he asserted, we have no basis for the achieving of a lasting peace.

To be sure, he recognized that there are hopeful signs of such a revival, which is certain to come as our programs of technical aid and assistance increase the material prosperity of the world. With the rising standard of living which we can expect within the next decade, there are going to be a great many material benefits which may cause the peoples of the world to ignore and forget moral and spiritual values. If this happens, then, as has been true in the past history of the world, materialism will succeed in destroying the spiritual and intellectual life of the people and they will experience the eventual decay and disintegration of their culture. Mr. Malik feels there are only two agencies which can prevent materialism from taking over in our world. He indicated that the church and the university alone can provide the basis for this needed spiritual and intellectual revival.

During our conversation, upon learning that I am a minister in the Church of the Brethren (incidentally, the only minister present in this body of 600) he was enthusiastic in his praise of the work which the Brethren and other related groups have been doing. His conversation gave evidence that he was acquainted with our Brethren Service work.

One could sense his genuineness and absolute sincerity when he replied, "You go back and tell the people in your church and in your local community that they have a bigger job—a far bigger job—than those of us who are working here at the top in the UN." He then emphasized the statement by saying, "I really mean it—it is down at the grass roots where the battle is going to be won or lost between materialism and spiritual values, the battle for men's hearts and men's minds. Tell your people that what they do will have much to do in determining whether we achieve the goals in United Nations or not."

Indeed it does cause one to have a warm feeling deep inside when such men remind us that the ideals of the Church of the Brethren are the same ideals for which the United Nations strives and exists. It reminds us that we have a tremendous responsibility to demonstrate in our daily life the ideals and the way of life which we have proclaimed for the last 248 years.

As Mr. Molotov indicated in his conversation, it will take more than nice talk and good intentions to achieve the goals and the ideals of the United Nations. Likewise, it will require more than this if we are to succeed in bringing about the spiritual revival in our own lives that will root out the selfishness and greed that now exist. We must, through disciplined effort, develop lives that are characterized by their unselfishness, sharing, sacrifice and equal love for all people. Within the Church of the Brethren the responsibility rests with us as to whether we will rise up as men of God and have done with lesser things, making it possible for us to experience a genuine spiritual revival, or whether we become the victims of materialism and secularism that already seek to sweep across our church and the world. You hold the key to the future; as Mr. Molotov said, "it depends on how much you really mean what you profess to believe."

Youth Discover New Curriculum Resource

Vernard Eller
Youth Editor

THE youth of the Church of the Brethren with the full permission and blessing of Annual Conference are embarking on a rather startling innovation in the realm of Bible study. They propose to go directly to the Bible.

Up until this time they—along with the adults—have tended to lean upon a short text reprinted in the quarterly as the Scripture resource for the Sunday-school lesson. Now, beginning with the study of Luke (the Uniform Lessons for October through Easter), the lesson will be prepared and taught directly from Bibles; the quarterly will continue to carry the usual helps and comments, though it must now be used as a "Bible guide" rather than a self-contained textbook. In place of the reprinted Scripture passage, there will be references to be looked up in the Bible itself.

The change is being made in order to achieve at least four values:

(1) Youth will learn to look directly to the Bible as their source for Bible study, learn to use and depend upon it rather than upon any reprinted portion.

(2) Youth will get the idea that the Bible is a book that has its practical uses in connection with the church school—and there is some logic and precedent in the suggestion that Bibles be brought to and used in church.

(3) Any given lesson will be able to draw upon any and all appropriate Scripture material rather than being confined to a ten- or twelve-verse text. The broader context of the lesson can be explored; supplementary references can be consulted; the different Gospel accounts can be compared; the unit can become a continuous study rather than random samplings.

(4) Since under the old format, up to forty per cent of the quarterly was used in reprinting Scripture (and that in two versions), the changeover will allow for expanded comments and lesson helps.

A New Format

Perhaps a word regarding the new format of the quarterly and its use would be in order.

At the beginning of each lesson, set forth in a prominent place, will be three Scripture citations. The first is the lesson text. This is the passage which would be reprinted under the old system and which will still be found in the Adult Quarterly, the Bible Study Monthly and the Lesson Leaflets. This reference lifts up the heart of the lesson, but is rarely an adequate basis for the most thorough sort of study. In Sunday schools where the text is read in unison as part of the opening exercises, the young people will look up this reference and read directly from their Bibles.

The second Scripture citation is the background material. This is a longer passage, which includes the lesson text. Very definitely, it is from this background material that both the teacher and students should make their preclass preparation, and though this passage is often too long to be read in class in toto, it is the material which should be covered in one way or another during the session.

The third citation is the memory selection, which is reprinted in full. It is recommended for memory work and as a means of lifting up the key idea of the lesson.

In addition to these three formal citations, the lesson write-up is sprinkled with numerous specific references which are to be looked up and studied at appropriate spots in the lesson development.

This change in lesson format and approach brings with it new responsibilities—some of them immediate and imperative.

(1) To superintendents, boards of Christian education and all those charged with administrative responsibility for the church school. Bibles must be available for use in youth classes beginning Sunday, Oct. 2. It would be the next thing to disastrous if this failed to happen. The matter can be approached in either one of two ways: (a) make certain that the youth will bring their own Bibles, with a few extra being in the classroom to make up any deficit; (b) have the church provide Bibles for classroom use. The first plan has the advantage of teaching the young person to depend upon and use his own Bible and allows him the privilege of making notes in it. The second plan, of course, gives much greater certainty that the Bibles will actually be on hand.

(2) To teachers. The success or failure of this new approach to Bible study depends almost wholly upon the teacher. The responsibility for using the Bible in class is his. It is he who must sell the idea to the class and who must make the advantages of the plan come into reality. He should start introducing the idea to the class immediately so they are not hit in the face with it on Oct. 2. And for that lesson and those immediately following, the teacher should make extra preparation and take special pains to get things off to a good start.

(3) To the students. This new emphasis on the Bible is an opportunity for a fresh concept of what Sunday school can be—a serious, intensive, yet thrilling and highly practical meeting with God's Word to man. Used rightly, this change in a Sunday-school quarterly could spark a new and vital discovery of the tradition of Bible study that first gave rise to the Brethren movement. The spark is struck. Whether it will blaze into fire or merely smolder along depends on the condition of the tinder—the receptivity and dedication of the young people themselves.

Dear Co-workers in the Sunday School

Perhaps you will be surprised to know that you are one of about forty-three different people who are on the "team" that will carry on the work of our Sunday school during the coming year. This includes the teachers, assistant teachers and officers of the Sunday school. I hope that each of you will do your very best to make this team a success in the coming year. The challenge of the work to be done is truly amazing!

It would really be a thrilling experience if each one of you could be at church this coming Sunday morning to take part in the installation service for the officers and teachers. I hope that you are already planning to be there; if not, I trust that you will make every possible effort to be present this Sunday so we can have almost 100 per cent attendance of teachers and officers. Please do your best to make this possible.

I am enclosing, in advance, the second page of our church directory for the coming year. On it you will find listed the other officers and teachers with whom you will be working. I am also enclosing a copy of the Service of Installation which we will use Sunday morning. I hope you will read it over, meditate upon it and think seriously about the importance of the various tasks you will be assuming. For the installation service, I will have you stand where you are and then we will use this responsive service of installation.

I hope and pray that we will have a great year in the work of the Sunday school. Let us always remember that we are working for a great goal: that men, women, boys and girls may come to know Jesus Christ and his way of life and that they may find therein the joy and peace which comes through serving him.

Very sincerely,
Fred M. Bowman
Pastor, Keyser, W. Va.

SERVICE OF INSTALLATION

Minister: To the glory of God the Father, God the Son, and God the Holy Spirit;
Officers and Teachers: We, the officers and teachers of the Keyser Church of the Brethren for the coming year, humbly and reverently present ourselves.

Minister: For the building of God's kingdom on earth, that all mankind may come to know his love, mercy and forgiveness,
Officers and Teachers: We dedicate the first fruits of our time, our talents and our abilities.

Minister: That the way of life revealed by Christ may become a reality in the lives of those in our Sunday school,
Officers and Teachers: We resolve to strive that it may become an even greater reality in our own lives.

Minister: Through regular attendance at divine worship; through the strengthening of our own devotional lives; through diligent study and preparation; and through constant regularity and faithfulness to our tasks,
Officers and Teachers: We will strive to present ourselves to God as "workmen who need not be ashamed, rightly handling the word of truth."

Minister: May the Lord, who is able to bless beyond our greatest expectations, guide you in the fulfillment of your task. May his spirit lead you, his strength sustain you, now and throughout the days to come.
The Congregation: Having received your promise that with God's help you will fulfill, to the best of your abilities, these tasks to which you have been called, we, the members of the Keyser Church of the Brethren, gratefully accept you as the officers and teachers in our Sunday school for the coming year.

Minister: That you may be able to effectively carry on these tasks,
The Congregation: We pledge to you our continued co-operation and support.

Minister: That together we may grow in the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ, into the fullness of his stature,
The Congregation: We resolve to hold you up in the fellowship of prayer, asking that together we may be willing for his will to be done in our lives.

Minister: That your work with us may be used for the glory of God,
The Congregation: We, too, will strive to be regular in attendance, diligent in study and unceasing in our efforts to be followers of Jesus Christ, our Lord.

Minister: That the Holy Spirit may guide us in our lives, that Jesus Christ may be proclaimed through our lives, that God, our Father, may be glorified in our lives,
All: We, the officers, teachers, and members of the Keyser Church of the Brethren, reverently rededicate our lives.

Minister: That his kingdom may come and his will be done,
All: We present our lives a living sacrifice on the altar of service for our Lord. To him be glory and honor, dominion and power, now and forever more. Amen.

People Who Sit in Darkness -- and Dirt

Ira H. Frantz
North Manchester, Indiana

ALTHOUGH our trip to Ecuador was made primarily to visit our daughter, Mrs. Benton Rhoades, and her family and the Rolland Florys, both of whom we had known as students in Manchester College, we yet feel an obligation to share with the church at home some of our observations and experiences. I am taking some pictures which I shall show as opportunity offers but, to reach a wider audience, I shall try to prepare several short sketches for the Messenger.

I had not expected to find the population in the highlands as dense as it is. From the bay window of Ruby's living room I can count seventeen homes on an area of certainly less than 100 acres. Farther down the valley the homes are still closer together. The mountainsides are farmed clear to the top. They make a pretty picture with the patchwork effect of the fields—until you reflect on the human need and the bitter struggle for existence that drives the people to these steep hills. Some of their little fields are so steep that I would actually be afraid to venture onto them. Wealthy Spaniards have taken the good land and crowded the Indians up into the highlands.

The ignorance and superstition of the people suggested to me the Bible phrase which heads this article. To this phrase I have added "dirt." The darkness is mental and spiritual; the dirt is material. I think they would rather sit in dust than on grass. Their homes have dirt floors. Their clothing is dirty. Babies are brought to the clinic wrapped in clothes so dirty that you wonder, not that they are sick or that the infant mortality rate is high, but that any of them at all survive. Having known only poverty and ignorance all their lives their lack of cleanliness is understandable. They can survive a lack of sanitation which would be the death of most of us, but even at that they suffer much illness that simple sanitation would avoid.

Considerably less than one fourth of the people in the rural areas are literate. Ignorance provides a fruitful field for superstition and for exploitation by the unscrupulous priest and witch doctor. When our folks first came here nine years ago someone asked them whether it were true that the white man could take a picture of a person, stick a pin through its heart and thus kill the person. Probably none of the people around here really believes this anymore and yet many of them, especially the older people, are camera shy.

The other day my granddaughters were playing down in the quebrada and brought home a little doll which they had found. They knew the meaning of it. A witch doctor had rubbed it over the body of a sick person to transfer the evil spirit to the doll. Then when the doll was placed down in the gully the spirit would have to stay there. The natives are afraid to touch one of these little dolls. I am going to put the thing in the oven to take care of the evil spirits and then bring it home with me. I have no idea what the "doctor" charged for the treatment but worse than his charge for worthless treatment is the fact that the sick person was kept from seeing a physician.

Centuries of injustice at the hands of the white man have taught the Indian to lie, cheat and steal. Stealing from the white man is considered a virtue among them. The children are taught to do it. Why not get back if they can some of that of which they have been robbed? This forenoon Rolland had a group of people helping him gather a field of corn. When they husk corn he has to walk along between the people who are husking and their relatives who follow behind gleaning to see that the huskers do not purposely leave corn for the gleaners. When he started home in the truck several people were riding behind on the load of corn. Through the rear view mirror he saw them throwing off ears of corn for their relatives to pick up. Much as he hated to do it he had to stop and have them put the corn back on the truck. To do otherwise would be to let them think he was an easy mark and encourage them to steal. He wants to get his relations with them on a basis of fairness and honesty. The people suffer from malnutrition but they are not hungry for corn. It is a matter of wanting to get ahead of the white man.

These are the people whom our missionaries have come to help—poor, dishonest, superstitious, uncouth, drunken. What business is it of ours? I think as I observe them, "What a smart boy I was to get myself born into the United States instead of into an Ecuadorian Indian home!" But I know better than this. "There, but for the grace of God, goes Ira Frantz!" But for the mercy of God I was that Indian baby drawing nourishment from an unwashed breast beneath a filthy blouse and dependent for care and upbringing upon that ignorant Indian mother. For one who is willing to think this is something to think about.

A Letter From China

Hazel Rothrock

SINCE I last saw Jung Yu Ch'in in Hong Kong in the summer of 1949 we have exchanged letters about once each year.

Both Yu Ch'in's parents were nurses in the Ping Ting hospital for many years and among the staunch Christians of the Church of the Brethren. When ready for high school Yu Ch'in went by train the 400 miles to Peiping, where she graduated at the Bridgeman Academy of the Congregational American Board. Her ambition was to become a medical doctor. About 1943 or 1944 Yu Ch'in trekked to West China, along with her brother and thousands of other students who wanted to escape the Japanese occupation of their country. She took the entrance examinations at a well-known medical school but failed. This she accepted as indication of divine guidance to a field other than medicine. She decided to become an evangelist and was able, doubtless through much hardship, to make her way down the Yangtze River to Shanghai. Here she entered Bethel Bible School, which has had a glorious record of sending out student bands far and wide to spread revival fires in China. One such band visited our Shansi mission in the old days and brought great joy and blessing. Possibly this visit planted seeds of interest in the heart of Yu Ch'in, then only a young girl.

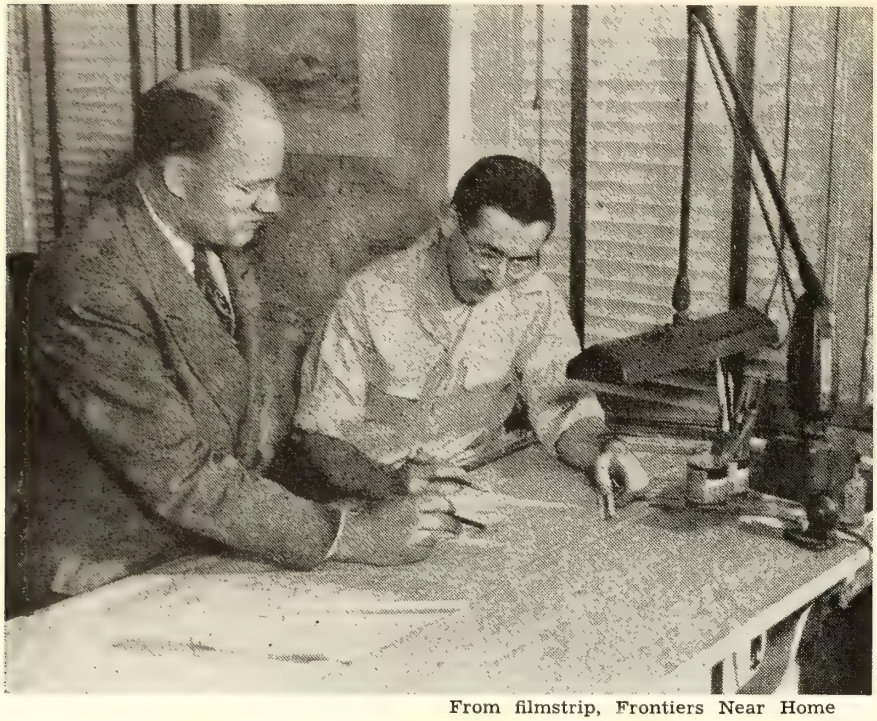
In January of 1947, Martha Parker and I visited Yu Ch'in in Shanghai. She welcomed us warmly. With the advance of communism in the North, not long after this the school moved to Hong Kong. Here she graduated in 1949. For a long time she worked in a Chinese church in the city. Then she was asked to serve as faculty member and dean of an indigenous Chinese Bible School. It is worthy of mention that a year or so ago Miss Jung was invited by Andrew Gih, a Chinese Christian leader known well in America and in his homeland, to go to Formosa to join the staff of a Bible school which is staffed partially by Canadian and American Presbyteran missionaries. But she did not see God's green light and remained in Hong Kong.

It is so easy to forget those of whom we hear little or nothing. May the following letter spur us to more faithful intercession for all the Christians in China, particularly for those who were led to Christ through the Church of the Brethren mission in Shansi and for Jung Yu Ch'in and her husband in their labors in Hong Kong. As Yu Ch'in says in her letter, "God has not evacuated from China."

Dear Miss Rothrock:

Your Christmas letter arrived last December. From that letter I know that you have returned from Nigeria to your homeland. Thank you very much for your prayers for me.

My work continues much as usual. I teach the Bible class sixteen hours each week. I am in better health since I got married. Nathan and I are a new family and both feel the Lord's grace is abundant to us.



Nathan is very zealous to make his witness for Christ. His preaching has made the people raise their hands to receive Jesus Christ. The door of salvation is widely opening here. People

Our Church Building Counseling Service

DURING the past six or eight years the demands of the churches of our Brotherhood for counseling and aid in their church building programs have rolled up in snowball fashion. Despite the best efforts we have been able to make to meet the demand for services we have been unable to do so. Our inability to meet demands has arisen from several sources. First, we have been in an unprecedented period of church remodeling and building. For each of several years we have been spending from one and one-half to two million dollars in this work. Hence, the demands for services have rocketed. Second, because of the military draft and other reasons it has been impossible to keep some of the draftsmen in our employ whom we needed to meet the increasing demands. Third, increasing pressures for construction drawings and supervision during construction greatly increased the time load on the department.

The Ministry and Home Mission Commission of the General Brotherhood Board has given much study and thought to the problems involved. A thorough study has been made of: (1) the demands on the office for services; (2) the present backlog of requests for services; and (3) possible solutions to the problems.

Present thinking indicates that we will need to major in the future in the following areas of service:

(1) Personal counseling with churches in the field, as they attempt to face and think through their needs.

(2) Preparation of sketches (in the field, at the time of the visit) to give needed guidance and direction for the building program.

(3) Counseling by means of correspondence, for those who can be given guidance in this way.

(4) Mailing out guidance materials to assist committees and churches in their studies of need.

(5) Preparation of sketches and quick preliminary drawings in the office.

(6) Preparation of educational materials regarding organization for building, planning for building needs, building finance, effective use of architect's services.

(7) Recommendation of qualified church architects in various areas of the nation.

(8) Arrangements for Brotherhood counselor's consultative relationship to the local architect.

(9) Checking and approval of plans by local architects before blueprints are made. (This is needed where Brotherhood loans or grants are involved. In addition, our values can be gotten into the building being planned.)

(10) Preparation of preliminary drawings insofar as time permits.

(11) Preparation of construction drawings (accompanied by required inspection trips) for churches receiving Brotherhood or district support. Other churches than these may be given such service as time permits.

Efforts are being made to plan as effectively as possible for the above services to our churches. It will require time to get the present backlog of work cared for, but every effort will be made to serve our congregations as well as we are able.

It is our conviction that counseling is the most important service we can give to our congregations; satisfactory architectural services can often be found locally if adequate counseling is given and the churches are aided in contacting a dependable and capable church architect. It is our hope that our churches will be patient and understanding with us as we seek to serve them.

love to hear the gospel. It seems to be the time for Hong Kong people to be saved. Especially the refugee districts—they need the gospel very much.

We know not how long the free time will last in Hong Kong. We must work hard. Nathan will finish his Bible study course this coming summer. He wishes to have a higher theological education but he must do practical work first in the near future. May God lead us in his way. Please remember us in your prayer. May God use us to glorify him each day.

My mother is keeping well in her medical work at home (in China). They always meet together at our home to have worship meetings and prayer. Now that the membership has grown they rent a special house for their meetings. It shows that God has not evacuated from China. He is the same yesterday, today and forever. Thank God.

Lovingly yours,
Yu Ch'in

Southern California and Arizona

Long Beach—Delegates representing our church at Annual Conference were Frank D. Howell and Herbert and Stella Vaniman. In the absence of both our pastor and assistant pastor, Dr. Harold F. Humbert of La Verne was guest speaker. Recent guest speakers at the various organized groups have been Edith Curl, Latin American worker who spoke at the women's missionary meeting; Mrs. Lee Whipple of Whittier, at the mother and daughter banquet; Coy Sanders, who is connected with Y.M.C.A. work and past director of guidance for the Juvenile Bureau of Long Beach, and who spoke at a joint meeting of the women's missionary society and the men's brotherhood; Louis Zamperini, who gave a talk at the father and son banquet; Dwayne Brubaker, who showed pictures of Camp La Verne in the fellowship hall during a Sunday-school hour. One Sunday evening the La Verne College chapel choir gave a concert. At another evening service the film, The First Step, was shown. Nine babies were consecrated at the worship service on Mother's Day. Vacation Bible school was held July 12-22.—Mrs. Homer E. Fike, Long Beach, Calif.

Washington

Tacoma—Bro. Jesse Barnett of Bremerton, Wash., has been retained as our elder and pastor for another year. The undersigned and Mrs. Neher were delegates to district conference. They also attended the regional conference. Having sold the old church property our church has purchased a new site for a church at 84th and East D Streets with a dwelling on it which will be used for a parsonage. We have rented a hall at 8222 S. Park Ave. and temporarily are holding Sunday school and church services there. The women serve at the Council of Churches servicemen's center two days each month. The men and women cleaned up the new church property and renovated and painted the parsonage inside and outside. On May 28 Brother and Sister Walter Blough arrived from Bethany Seminary to begin their pastoral duties for the summer. Our Sunday-school and church attendance is increasing. Two have been received into our church by letter. Anyone having friends or relatives living in or near our vicinity, we invite your correspondence regarding your interest in their welfare and we will contact them.—Melvin O. Neher, Tacoma, Wash.

Lititz—Brother and Sister E. Floyd McDowell and their daughter began their pastoral duties in our church the first of April. Prior to that time, Bro. G. Wayne Glick of Lancaster, served as pastor for two months. On Palm Sunday, Bro. Ralph Schlosser of Elizabethtown began a week of pre-Easter evangelistic services. Installation services for the McDowells were held in the evening by Bro. Nevin H. Zuck and Bro. Frank S. Carper. As a result of the meetings, eighteen were baptized, five received by letter and two rebaptized. At the mother and daughter banquet Mrs. J. A. Robinson of Ephrata was guest speaker. We held our spring love feast with Bro. McDowell preaching the self-examination sermon in the morning and Elder Norman K. Musser officiating at the evening service. Nine babies were dedicated at the service on May 8. In the afternoon Brother and Sister McDowell held open house at the parsonage. At the spring council meeting, four members were received into our church by letter. On June 5 Jacob T. Dick, a former pastor of our church, and his family spent the day with us. In the morning Bro. Dick preached and in the evening he gave an illustrated message describing Brethren Service in Europe. Children's day was also observed on June 5. On June 19 Bro. G. Wayne Glick preached for us in the absence of Pastor McDowell, who with Henry B. Gibbel and Mrs. John Hevener served as delegates to Annual Conference. Our church will join with the other churches of the town in vesper services during July and August.—Mrs. Florence B. Gibbel, Lititz, Pa.

Mechanic Grove—Bro. Carl Zeigler of Lebanon, Pa., representing the district ministerial board, met with us for the purpose of ordaining Charles Hevener to the full ministry and to help in the installing of Cabet Wenger, Rufus Good and Charles Schreiber, Jr., as deacons. Consecration services followed for these men and their wives. Our missionary committee reported that our church as a whole or by groups supports a missionary in Africa, one in India and two missionary children in Africa. The mother and daughter banquet was held with Mrs. Leah Zuck as speaker. Delegates to Annual Conference were Bro. Clyde Kreider and Bro. Caleb Wenger. Baby consecration services were held on Mother's Day. Bro. Guy West of York, Pa., conducted our evangelistic services at which time ten persons were received into our fellowship. The project for our daily vacation Bible school was gift bags for Africa which contained many useful articles. Many of our young people are attending camp this summer. —Anna Schreiber, New Providence, Pa.

Leamersville—Prior to our communion services, we held meetings four evenings. One night the young people were in charge of these meetings with Elsie Peterson of Denmark as speaker. At another meeting at which the women's work group was in charge, Mrs. Roy Forney of Martinsburg was speaker. The men's work had as their speaker Bro. John Eichelberger and then on the closing night Bro. G. Q. Showalter, our elder, brought the message. Since our last report there have been eight received by baptism and one by letter into our fellowship. Our young people brought a special worship service at the Sunday evening service on Mother's Day. Our missionary and his family, Bro. James Bowman of Africa, were with us on June 5. Bro. Bowman brought the morning message and in the evening he showed slides of their work in Africa. Sister Bowman gave a talk to the young people. Bro. Earnest Peterson, pastor of the U. B. church and Ordo Pletcher of our church were in charge of the Bible school. Our pastor represented our church at Annual Conference. The first of July the Piney Wood singers were at our church.—Mrs. Rachel Claar, East Freedom, Pa.

Southern Pennsylvania

Greencastle—A few days prior to sailing for India, Emma Ziegler was a guest speaker in our church. On Race Relations Sunday, a local Negro, Miss Harris, was with us for the evening service. A men's chorus from the Shippensburg area under the direction of Charles Rowland presented a service of music during Brotherhood Week. John L. Fisher was licensed to the ministry at our spring council meeting with installation services being held at a Sunday morning service. At the same time Mrs. William Kinsey was installed as an elder's wife. A number of our women attended the spring luncheon meeting of the women of the district at the Black Rock church. Bro. Harvey S. Kline of Uniontown conducted a preaching mission in our church. One Sunday evening following Easter, the Welty church choir presented the cantata, Portals Everlasting, at our church. Visiting ministers have been Bro. John E. Rowland, Bro. William Kinsey of Greencastle, Bro. Cecil L. Hartman of Broadway, Va., and John C. Myers of Bridgewater, Va. Several children were consecrated on Mother's Day. For the children's day program the children's choir under the direction of Mrs. Merle B. Snyder rendered special numbers in music. Our church co-operated with the local town churches in Week of Prayer, Good Friday, World Day of Prayer and baccalaureate services. Our Conference delegate, Bro. Samuel D. Lindsay, gave an interesting report concerning the business. John L. Fisher reported on young people's work as he found it at Grand Rapids and Thelma Rowland told of the women's program at Conference. —Margaret E. Oellig, Greencastle, Pa.

Huntsdale—Four churches of our community joined with us during the Week of Prayer services at which time Dr. Wilmer Kensinger of Tyrone brought the message each evening. A number of our people attended the pre-Lenten services in Carlisle with Bro. Paul Robinson as guest speaker. One evening Brother and Sister Paul Petcher and their family showed pictures and told of their work in Africa. Our community churches joined in the World Day of Prayer services, as well as Holy Week services, at which time pastors exchanged pulpits. Bro. Wayne Tritt showed the pictures of the work in Austria in which his sister, Marie, had participated. Bro. Myrl Weyant was with us in a two-week revival service. As a result of these meetings, nine were baptized into our fellowship. Twelve other persons have also been received into our fellowship by baptism since our last report. One afternoon and evening our church was host to the district Sunday-school convention. At the morning service of the same day, Bro. Jack Kugle, student minister from the Gettysburg Seminary, was our speaker. During the past several months a community covered dish supper, father and son banquet and mother and daughter banquet were held in our church. On June 5 eleven babies were brought by their parents for a consecration service. Several of our young people attended Camp Swatara. Bro. Kenneth Franklin represented our local church and our pastor, Bro. Hassinger, served on the Standing Committee from our district at Annual Conference. Our church basement has been remodeled and chairs have been purchased for use in it. We are now in process of having our sanctuary renovated.—Mrs. Esther Cohick, Carlisle, Pa.

Pleasant Hill—We recently closed our vacation Bible school which was held jointly with the Mt. Bethel United Brethren church. The sessions were held for a two-hour period in the evenings at Pleasant Hill. The Bible school offering was used to send little booklets entitled Jesus, Friend of Children Everywhere, to boys and girls in foreign lands. The theme of our school was Choosing God's Ways. The school was closed on Friday night with a program for the public at the church.—Mrs. Leon Rankin, Crimora, Va.

Southern Virginia

Antioch, Fairview—The women of our church have organized a ladies' aid which meets once each month. Several members of our church attended the youth meeting in Danville. They also attended the spring banquet in Bassett, Va. The men of our church and community have completed the improvements on the church. They built a vestibule, refinished the church inside and outside and put in colored windows. Two deacons were elected; they are Bro. Marvin Beeghley and Bro. Garland Jones.—Billie Hodges, Rocky Mount, Va.

Boones Mill—Since our last report visiting speakers have been Bro. Albert Schue of Baltimore, Md., and Bro. Wilmer Crummet of Bassett, Va. Bro. D. D. Fleishman, pastor of the Bethlehem church, was speaker in our church on pulpit exchange Sunday. Four of our young people attended the regional youth roundtable at Bridgewater College. In observance of Family Week, we held a fellowship supper at which Bro. Wilmer Crummett was guest speaker. The young adults were in charge of the Mother's Day program. On June 12 the children were in charge of the program with Miss Julia Laprade as guest speaker. Bible school was held the week of June 20. At the worship hour on Sunday morning, the children presented a program. The offering from the school was sent to the Ernest Ikenberrys for their work at the Navajo Indian mission. At our church council on July 3, church officers were elected for the coming year. The men's work will be in charge of the Gospel Messenger subscriptions this year. Delegates to district meeting are Mrs. Lois Halterman, Mrs. Ruth Ikenberry, Lacy Argubright and Donald Abshire.—Mrs. Owen Ikenberry, Rocky Mount, Va.

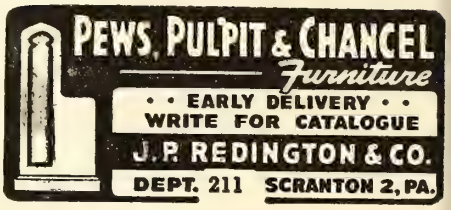
district meeting which was held at the Stonewall church. A group also attended the vacation church school workshop for the districts of First and Southern Virginia at Roanoke, Va. The men of our church have organized and meet each fourth Friday of the month. The Lord's Acre project is being sponsored again for the year 1955. The women's group meets each second Monday evening. Several youth from our congregation attended the district youth banquet at the Bassett church. For a few Sunday evenings our pastor conducted discussions on the history of the Church of the Brethren. Sister Clara Harper, returned missionary to Africa, gave a talk in our church on May 8. A banquet was given in honor of the mothers and daughters on May 9. Recently two persons were baptized. A children's day program was given on Sunday evening, June 12. A father and son banquet was held in the fellowship room on June 24. A deputation team from Bridgewater College presented a morning program at our church recently. Bible school was held at our church in July.—Mrs. Leeta H. Weddle, Floyd, Va.

Pleasant Valley—Since our last report, different groups have attended several district affairs. Eight junior high persons and three leaders attended the meeting at Christiansburg. The children's workers conference at the Coulson church was attended by four of our members. At the men's and women's meeting, the men's group from our church conducted the devotional service. Four couples from our church were present for the young adult banquet at the Brick church. The women's group collected clothing for relief. The men of our church are sponsoring the excavation and construction of a basement under our church building. Bro. Archie Naff conducted a revival at the Duncan Chapel church. Five were received into the church by baptism. Bro. Arnold Naff conducted evangelistic services at the Pleasant Valley church in August. Bro. Guy Gardner, our elder, served as delegate to Annual Conference and gave a report of the Conference at our quarterly council. Delegates to district conference are Bro. Fred Pugh, Sisters Alma Lester and Ella Poff.—Mrs. Ray L. Mitchell, Floyd, Va.

First West Virginia



Beaver Run—A successful Bible school was held in our church. Our church is progressing under the leadership of our summer pastor, Bro. Delbert Kettering. He conducted our evangelistic services July 20-31. During the summer months, Bro. Kettering has scheduled Bible study and prayer meeting for each Wednesday night. Our elder, Bro. Amos Holsinger, and Roy Ludwick went to Washington, D. C., with some men from our district to talk with the representatives concerning UMT. The women's work organization has done some relief sewing and made several comforters for relief. The women also made comforters for a family whose home was destroyed by fire. Our church recently enjoyed a family night service which was sponsored by the women. Our CBYF meets the first and third Sunday evenings of the month. The young people recently dedicated two cases of food that was sent for Brethren Service workers in Europe. Once each month they have a fellowship night. Our annual home-coming will be held the Sunday before Labor Day.—Mrs. Roy Ludwick, Burlington, W. Va.

Knobley—Bro. B. M. Rollins conducted our evangelistic meetings May 22—June 1. Fourteen new members were received into the church and four persons were rebaptized. Our youth fellowship purchased new Brethren Hymnals for the church. The young people also held a social for the benefit of our building fund. The women's work group sent used clothing and soap grease to New Windsor, Md., for relief. The women are now working on a comforter. We are making plans to build a new church in the near future. Bro. Owen Stultz represented our church at Annual Conference. Mrs. Effie L. Whittaker, Antioch, W. Va.

Sandy Creek, Canaan—At present our ladies' work group is using the mission study book, Under the Three Flags. The women have quilted, made comforters and completed baby layettes for relief work. Our church joined with many other churches in the World Day of Prayer service. Pastor George H. Jeffery delivered our Easter sunrise message. We also had special music by the young people's choir and recitations by the children. During family week our church had a family night supper followed by a program of historical facts of our community, readings, recitations and music. Our building program has been completed. We recently painted and varnished the main interior of the church. From June 6 to June 12 a week of evangelical services were held by Bro. David Emerson of Rock Hill Furnace, Pa. The final program of our daily vacation Bible school was held on June 26, demonstrating the work of the children. Two members were added to our church by letter. Our pastor, George H. Jeffrey, has resigned and will be leaving the last of August.—Ina Seese, Gibbon Glade, Pa.

LIKE CHAFF

PERHAPS the psalmist, so many centuries ago, stood one day and watched a Palestinian farmer separate his grain from the chaff by throwing the threshed wheat into the air just as this Arab farmer still does in northern Lebanon. Seeking for a simile that would point up the futility of the wicked way, the psalmist observed how the wind drove away the chaff. In contrast, a righteous man was like a tree planted by the river—living, fruitful and prosperous. So apt were these figures of speech, so clear-cut was the distinction between the way of the wicked and the way of the righteous, that the psalmist's little poem was chosen as a prologue to the hymnbook of the Hebrews. It may as well be a prologue to righteous living today, cautioning us against walking, standing or sitting in the way of the wicked, urging us to take our delight in the law of the Lord.

READERS WRITE . . . to the editor

The Gospel Messenger welcomes letters commenting on editorials, articles and news. Letters should be brief and brotherly.

Three D's

God deliver us from "pet peeves," especially us who are older. But laying aside the joker about childless "parents" and grandpas who know how to bring up children, why did God ever allow some of us to grow old if not to give more time for observations and to draw conclusions from seeing results over longer periods of time?

For that matter, anyone who reads the columns of the Messenger or any good magazine and observes should be able to know about causes and results and thus not need anyone to advise. But evidently there are (according to Edgar Hoover of the FBI) thousands, yes millions of parents of delinquent children (themselves the real delinquents) who, though they naturally don't want "advice," should observe better than they do "cause and result."

Therefore I quote from Bishop Fulton J. Sheen, who also has seen what, with one eye closed, others of us have seen all too often, as he writes in Reader's Digest of June 1955 about the "Three Dangerous D's." He speaks of the "drinking parents," the "discordant parents" and the "doting parents." He might have added—these three and the greatest (in number) are the "doting parents."

So I quote from the bishop: "They give the child everything he wants in the way he wants it, when he wants it. Discipline, correction, punishment are ruled out on the false assumption that self-expression is always right. Doting parents are often totally indifferent to what the child does, says or thinks and allow him to do as he pleases.

"They argue [and I quote again] that just as the wild flowers grow without any frustrations so their dear sweet child must never be crossed in his desires and instincts. Such a child [he says] becomes a self-centered egotist . . . refuses to eat what is good for him; screams or sulks when hurt"; and I might add from observation, holds his breath in some cases almost to the point of death or lays himself down and kicks in a tantrum literally or, later, figuratively, if he cannot have his way.

"Such a child," the bishop says, "is predisposed to delinquency" because his parents, goodhearted though they are, are themselves delinquent in that which God and the whole universe calls for: "discipline."

Any parent, or pastor desiring one or a dozen or a hundred copies of that article can get them by addressing: Reprint Editor, Reader's Digest, Pleasantville, New York (10 copies, 25 cents). And by reading all of the reprint, you can see not only what "old-time preachers" observe but what FBI men and psychologists observe, and a "hint to the wise" might be helpful.—E. F. Sherfy, Roanoke, Va.

Iron Curtains Here?

I appreciate Catherine Marshall's story recently in Horizons, presenting the problems of the colored student in a race conscious society. I feel that our church literature should treat this issue frequently and courageously.

In this area of Michigan, high school senior classes like to visit Washington, D. C., by school bus. The high school at Brethren contained fifteen white and two colored seniors. The class valedictorian was a colored girl. Because of color barriers in Washington the class chose to spend a week sightseeing in Milwaukee. Visiting Milwaukee's breweries is a sad substitute for seeing Washington.

Can the Church of the Brethren devise lodging arrangements for classes of two races who would like to visit Washington but cannot cope with iron curtain hotel rulings?

Manistee high school graduates about fifty seniors. The senior sponsor, Bro. Hegler, asked Washington Travel Bureau if the city could entertain a class of two races. The colored senior in the Manistee class was an honor student. The Bureau answered, "We can entertain your white students, but not your colored." The barred senior urged her class to go on to Washington without her. Finally the class decided to go to Washington. This girl came to school to see the buses bound for Washington leave. The girls kissed her goodby and cried in each others' arms till Bro. Hegler said, "It was like a funeral."

We live in an iron curtain country and are afraid to pull the curtain aside and take it down. When Kermit Eby writes, "We should take initiative out of the Communist hands," his words should urge us to do whatever is necessary to let high school seniors who have learned to live above color consciousness, take the iron curtain away.—Galen Barkdoll, Copemish, Mich.

Beauty and immorality were characteristic of the Corinth in which Paul lived for eighteen months, preaching the gospel and emphasizing self-control, decency, righteousness and absolute moral and ethical standards. All that remains of ancient Corinth are the ruins shown here

John C. Middlekauff

THE SCENT OF CHRIST

OF ALL the cities in the ancient world where Paul preached the gospel of Jesus Christ—Jerusalem, Damascus, Rome, Ephesus, Athens, to mention but a few—none is more closely associated with the great apostle than the city of Corinth. Here with Aquila and his wife, Priscilla, Paul lived for a year and six months, working at his trade as a tentmaker and preaching the gospel of Jesus Christ. Here he established a church and to its members he addressed two letters—1 and 2 Corinthians. And while in Corinth, he wrote the letter to the Christians in Rome and the two letters to the church in Thessalonica.

Today, Corinth lies in ruins, although nearby, there is a small Greek village. But when Paul was there, it was one of the great cities of the world, ranking with Rome, Athens and Alexandria in importance. To a very large extent, the importance of Corinth was due to its location. The first thing that strikes you about Corinth is its breath-taking beauty. Located on a plateau, it overlooks the sky-blue waters of the Corinthian Gulf and the rugged mountains on the distant shores. Behind the city and towering over it, is the great rocky Acrocorinth—the Corinthian Acropolis with its temples and shrines.

But the importance of Corinth was not in the beauty of its location but in its strategic geographical situation—for Corinth dominated the neck of land four miles wide that joined the southern part of the Greek peninsula with the mainland. All the trade of the Roman Empire, to save the perilous journey around the rugged Greek coast, was carried overland from sea to sea and then on to Athens and the other ports of the Aegean. Since Corinth controlled all the traffic between the east and the west, the Corinthians not only were in a position to tax the merchandise but they also had unlimited opportunity to dispose of their own products in exchange for foreign goods. All these factors tended to enrich the city and to attract the most ambitious and enterprising people from the whole empire.

But the fame of Corinth was due not only to its commerce and its wealth but also its "entertainment"—a word that gives its activities infinitely more dignity than I intend. For in an age of unbridled immorality and licentiousness, Corinth was a cesspool of lust, lewdness and lechery. The most conspicuous temple on the Acrocorinth was dedicated to Aprodite (goddess of beauty and love). In her service were a thousand female slaves or prostitutes whose presence gave Corinth its reputation for immorality.

Pastor of the Stone church, Huntingdon, Pennsylvania; contributing editor of the Gospel Messenger

In the name of religion, these temple prostitutes plied their trade openly and with such success that, according to the Greek geographer, Strabo, the city owed its prosperity to the attraction of these entertainers. This situation lay back of Paul's stern warnings: "Do you not know that the unrighteous will not inherit the kingdom of God? Do not be deceived; neither the immoral, nor idolaters, nor adulterers, nor homosexuals, nor thieves, nor the greedy, nor drunkards, nor revilers, nor robbers will inherit the kingdom of God. And such were some of you. But you were washed, you were consecrated, you were justified in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ and in the Spirit of our God. . . . The body is not meant for immorality, but for the Lord, and the Lord for the body. . . . Do you not know that your bodies are members of Christ? Shall I therefore take the members of Christ and make them members of a prostitute? Never! Do you not know that he who joins himself to a prostitute becomes one body with her? . . . . Shun immorality. . . . Do you not know that your body is a temple of the Holy Spirit within you, which you have from God? You are not your own; you were bought with a price. So glorify God in your body" (1 Cor. 6:9-20). "I fear that when I come again my God may humble me before you, and I may have to mourn over many of those who sinned before and have not repented of the impurity, immorality, and licentiousness which they have practiced" (2 Cor. 12:21).

Into this rotten, filthy, stinking city came Paul with his passion for purity, holiness, Christly living and in Corinth, of all places, he began to preach a gospel that lays emphasis upon self-control, decency, righteousness, absolute moral and ethical standards. It took a lot of courage—and faith—for Paul to attempt to establish a church in Corinth but he believed in his message and its power to transform even the most profligate. He believed that even in Corinth, men could live the "way" of Christ.

So he went to work—and within the space of eighteen months, won a number of men and women for Christ and his way of life. These converts to Christianity were not made perfect overnight and, to the end of his life the church in Corinth was Paul's number one problem church. But he never gave them up and he constantly held up before them the possibilities of growth in Christian living as an attainable goal in the midst of the corruption of Corinth.

In his second letter to this little Christian church in Corinth, he says to them: "We are the aroma of Christ" or, as Phillips translates it, "We Christians have the unmistakable 'scent' of Christ." Paul was saying to them that in the midst of the stench and corruption of Corinth, the Christians were the one sweet fragrance.

The basic mission of the Christians in Corinth or in your community is to be an influence for good—to give off the aroma of Christ, the unmistakable "scent" of Christ. Jesus used the figures of salt and light when referring to the influence of his followers in the world. But while we are to be the fragrance of the world, we know that it is so easy to be a part of the stench of the community where we live. Our greatest danger lies in conforming to the society of which we are a part—participating in its low morals, its evil ways, its pettiness, its practical atheism. We are afraid to be different, to stand apart from the crowd, and so we conform—and in conforming, we blend in with our surroundings and thus imagine that we are safe. The truth of the matter is this: to conform is dangerous and to stand apart is safety.

Ernie Pyle, the great correspondent of World War II, described in one of his dispatches a trip which he made on a hospital ship from the Italian battle zone to Naples. He said that the thing that stood out in greatest contrast to his ordinary war experiences was the fact that the ship, unlike every other means of transportation that he had been using, made no effort to conceal its presence. Instead of being camouflaged, it bore a huge, brilliant red cross. Instead of being blacked-out, it sailed with all its lights on. Instead of being evasive, it tried to be conspicuous. A powerful floodlight illuminated the emblem of mercy which it bore.

The Out-stretched Hand

HAROLD ROWLEY

At the end of life is a vast abyss—
A chasm both deep and wide;
And no man is able to span that gulf
And stand on the other side.

But Jesus stands by the vast abyss
And offers an outstretched hand
To the traveler who wishes to go across
To live in that other land.

And would you believe it? Some people choose
The abyss to the helping hand,
For no one has told them they cannot go
Alone to that other land!

For no one has told them they cannot find
Their way through the Stygian night,
That their moral life will not avail
As a pass to the City of Light.

At the end of life is a vast abyss—
A chasm both deep and wide;
But those that you tell of the outstretched hand,
You may meet on the other side!

The Bomb That Did Not Fall on America

WHAT did you do on August 6? Was it just another summer Saturday? Or did you recall that it was an important day on somebody's calendar? Perhaps your mind went back to the same day ten years ago, when the newspaper headlines shouted to you that a new kind of bomb had been dropped on a Japanese city and the war would soon be over. Maybe it was the happy thought that peace had come at last or the noisy celebrations of V-J day or the news that gasoline rationing was over that kept you from realizing then that, as an American poet said soon after, "the bomb that fell on Hiroshima fell on America too."

But the poet's observation may have been misleading. It is true we were disturbed by the implications of this suddenly new atomic age. But 200,000 people killed by one explosion were not 200,000 men, women and children whom we knew —they were mostly statistics, facts to be faced, not personalities to be prayed for, not bodies to be healed, not grim reminders that lay about, burned, marred and cruelly suffering because of something we did, because of an action of our government.

Appeal to Humanity

At first the atomic scientists themselves tried to tell us that even more disastrous weapons could be made, that we must rethink all our concepts of war and peace. But we scarcely listened. Many of them took other jobs, but some went on to make hydrogen bombs, and we were not too disturbed when the tests in Nevada or in the Pacific almost got out of hand. The bomb that fell on Hiroshima had not yet fallen where we live.

Now ten years have passed. Again some scientists are trying to get our attention. Bertrand Russell, philosopher and mathematician, recently prepared an appeal to mankind to find ways of avoiding war. A few days before his death Albert Einstein endorsed the appeal. Several other scientists have signed it. They point up the prospect that the use of H-bombs will mean "universal death." They say, "We appeal as human beings to human beings: remember your humanity." But the best solution they can offer is to call a conference of scientists and political leaders to find peaceful means of settling disputes.

Call to Repentance

The appeal to humanity, however, is hardly enough. For this reason, we take even more seriously another appeal, sponsored by the Fellowship of Reconciliation and signed by forty Christian and Jewish leaders. This is a "call to confession and repentance." It reminds us that Americans—not the German nazis, the Italian fascists, the Japanese militarists or the Russian communists—but Americans alone were responsible for Hiroshima. What we did there and at Nagasaki was not only horribly cruel and barbarous, but it was unnecessary. It cannot be excused or explained away. It was an action to be repented of. Yet these leaders remind us, "Our attitude is still one of self-righteousness and smugness." We have continued to make greater, more destructive bombs; we have bragged of their size and lethal power; we have tested them where they have endangered lives of simple fishermen. We cannot seem to see how monstrous, in the sight of God and man, is our reckless toying with a power we have no moral right to so employ.

On August 6 a book was published by the University of North Carolina Press. It is the diary of a Japanese doctor who lived through the bombing of Hiroshima. Every American should read his factual reporting of what happened to men, women, children; how they suffered in agony; how they lost homes, churches, hospitals, friends; how they buried their dead; how they wondered not only what had happened but why it happened. Excerpts from this disturbing book appeared in the August 9 issue of Look Magazine.

If We Confess Our Sins

If you cannot read the Hiroshima doctor's account, remember the 25 Hiroshima maidens who came to this country for surgical aid and remember their Japanese pastor, a Christian minister who lived through the bombing of his church and home and has given his life to restoring hope and faith to the 100,000 survivors of the first atomic blast.

Must we wait until such man-made destruction explodes in our cities, destroying our homes, disfiguring and maiming our children, dividing our families and leveling our churches before we fall on our knees to ask God's forgiveness for our part in Hiroshima? Now is the time to insist on a national policy that begins with repentance. Now is the time for the church to affirm its faith in a power greater than any bomb. Now is the time for Christians to demonstrate that their vocation is to accept suffering for their faith rather than to impose it on some "enemy" overseas.

If we can confess our own sins, repent of them and learn from them, the bomb that fell on Hiroshima—or its more horrible successors—may never need to fall on America.—K. M.

We Saw Need

and we saw it relieved in the name of Christ

Two words, poverty and beauty, sum up Harper and Naomi Will's impressions of Puerto Rico after a month's stay on the island

WE EXPECTED to see need, but we saw more than we expected. We had read books that told of the poverty, the overpopulation and the many seemingly insurmountable problems that make up Puerto Rican life. Our surprise and what we did not expect to see was so much beauty. The mountains, the flowers, the village plazas, the friendliness of the people were a constant delight to us. Our experience of Castañer and Puerto Rico can almost be reduced to two words: poverty and beauty.

We were crossing the plaza of San Sabastian, a small inland town, on the island. We like the way the Spanish built their towns—the plaza, a spot of beauty at the center with a church usually at one end—then surrounding the plaza their homes and shops and banks and schools. On this particular day Mrs. Homer Burke was our guide and interpreter. A Puerto Rican lad followed us with his small box of shoe shining equipment. We generally shine our own shoes, but his insistent look won. He went over them several times, giving them the best shine they had ever had. While he proceeded with his task a half-dozen other boys gathered about. When he finished we inquired as to the price. Speaking through Mrs. Burke he left that to us, and though the usual price was ten cents, we gave him a quarter, commending him for his good work and adding that whatever we do we should do well. He was visibly pleased as he said his "Gracias", and then after a prolonged silence another lad spoke reflectively, "But he has good shoes." We looked around to see the shoes the boys wore. Half of them had no shoes, and those the others wore were hardly recognizable as shoes. We saw that day on the plaza of San Sebastian one of the deep chasms that divide us. Some of us have good shoes that will take a good shine, while others—many of them Puerto Ricans—have none at all.

A few days later we helped Dwayne Schweppe distribute an ambulance load of shoes. Yes, the ambulance serves a variety of uses. A crowd of men, women and children gathered and it was a joyous experience to see their delight in getting a decent pair of shoes for a dime or quarter. As we emptied some of the sacks, however, we wished that our entire Brotherhood might look in on the scene. Some of the shoes were not worth an ocean voyage. We all need constantly the deep, silent guidance of the Spirit in our sharing. Sharing can hardly be in the name of Christ if it is too low in quality.

Shoes are an urgent need of the Puerto Rican people. The cycle runs like this: poverty — no shoes — hookworm — emaciation—other diseases—mental and spiritual inertia—deeper poverty. We watched the emaciated children pass through the "worm clinic" and listened to their howls as Nurse Wilma Stern poured the bitter medicines down their throats, and we rejoiced that at last the vicious cycle was being broken.

The hospital and clinic offices located in Casa Grande are situated on a small knoll a dozen rods off the main highway that winds through Castañer. As we watched the stream of humanity pouring up the hill, day after day, morning until night, the lame and the halt, waiting on the porch for their turn to see the doctor, dentist or nurses, we thought of the crowds in all their need finding their way to Jesus as he moved from village to village in ancient Galilee. The day after we arrived was baby clinic day and eighty-two babies passed through the clinic.

Charity is not the answer to the world's need and the gift of a pair of shoes or a bottle of capsules never adequately meet a man's need. People need training in self-help and self-discipline. It is a high art to assist people without at the same time pauperizing them. We found a self-help program in operation everywhere in the project. The girls under the direction of a Puerto Rican leader were making dresses the afternoon we looked in on their club. At the barn we saw calves, pigs, goats and chicks, and Walter Keiser explained to us how they are being made available to those of the community who can care for them. The garden and farm are being used to teach better methods of production.

On the hillside across the narrow valley from the hospital stood the school—the only rural high school on the island—where the people also met for worship and Sunday-school. As we visited the school and observed the eager quest for knowledge and as we sat in worship with the people, we became aware once again of the primacy of the church and school, and that "man does not live by bread alone." The mind and the heart must be reached too, and it was apparent enough to see that those making the most progress were the enrolled students and the worshiping Christians. A church building fund is being accumulated and plans for a new school are being laid that worship and education at Castañer may not be further handicapped by inadequate facilities.

It was a thrilling thing to be for one month a part of a team of forty Puerto Ricans and twenty-five "Continentals" who were organized to minister in the name of Christ and the Iglesia des Hermanos to the total need of a people oppressed with poverty and disease and fatalism. While there, we wrote to W. Harold Row, executive secretary of Brethren Service, "The Brethren ought to have a score of projects like Castañer in strategic areas around the world, and there should be hundreds like it scattered over the earth." The Mennonites, Friends, Presbyterians and Congregationalists have established projects along similar lines in Puerto Rico, but Puerto Rico is only one small spot on the surface of the earth.

"This is the greatest thing I have ever had my hands in," is the way the present administrator, Eugene G. Carper, spoke of it. We feel somewhat the same way when we think of what we saw and the dreams ahead for a community council which will plan for the total improvement of the area and minister in the name of Christ to meet every need. We shall be enjoying our brief visit to Puerto Rica for the next ten years.

Adoniram Judson--"Apostle to Burma"

Elgin S. Moyer

THE story of Adoniram Judson and the three Mrs. Judsons makes one of the most fascinating narratives of modern missionary history. Judson shares with Carey in being one of the noble missionary pioneers to South Asia in the early nineteenth century. While Carey was one of the founders and a pioneer missionary of the Baptist Missionary Society of Great Britain, Judson was instrumental in bringing into being two missionary societies.

When William Carey went to India in 1793, Adoniram Judson was a lad of only five. At the age of sixteen Adoniram entered the sophomore class at Brown University, finishing there in three years at the head of his class. Although by graduation time he had not become a Christian, the following three years witnessed not only his becoming an ardent Christian, but also his becoming a dynamic and determined advocate and candidate for foreign missionary service.

In 1810 he and a group of fellow Congregational students at Andover Theological Seminary publicly expressed their desire to become missionaries to foreign lands, and asked the General Association of Massachusetts for counsel. The Association thereupon organized a missionary society which in 1812 was incorporated as the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions. This became the missionary society for the American Congregationalists as the London Missionary Society, organized in 1795, was the missionary society for the English Congregationalists, under which Robert Morrison later went to China.

Librarian of Moody Bible Institute, Chicago, Illinois

In 1812 Adoniram Judson, Luther Rice, Samuel Nott, Samuel Newell and Gordon Hall were appointed to India, and in a short time were en route to that land. In order to be able to answer the possible arguments of William Carey and his Baptist associates in India, these young Congregational missionaries on their way across the ocean entered into a careful study of the doctrine of baptism. This study led Mr. and Mrs. Judson and Mr. Rice to change their views and to accept adult baptism as the true, scriptural teaching concerning the rite. Upon landing at Calcutta, they were baptized by William Ward, one of the Serampore Trio. This new development necessitated a change in basic relationships. It was planned that Luther Rice should return to America to stir up missionary interest among the Baptists. Mr. Judson said, "Should there be formed a Baptist society for the support of a missionary in these parts, I should be ready to consider myself their missionary." Consequently, in 1814 the Baptist Society for Propagating the Gospel in India and Other Foreign Parts was organized, and Mr. and Mrs. Judson became the first American Baptist missionaries in foreign lands.

Being excluded from India by the unfriendly East India Company and hoping to escape deportation to Great Britain, the Judsons went to Rangoon, Burma, in 1813, where they found a home in the English Baptist mission house with Felix Carey, son of the veteran missionary of Serampore. Judson devoted himself to the study of the difficult Burmese language and, after exactly three years in Burma, he completed a well-written grammar. Six years after his going to Rangoon, he ventured to preach his first sermon in the Burmese tongue and about the same time baptized his first convert.

For a long time the Judsons hoped and endeavored to gain an entrance to Ava. Finally the Burmese king invited them to come to live in the capital, and granted them a plot of ground on which to build a mission house. In 1823, leaving the little church of eighteen converts and four missionaries at Rangoon, with dark gathering clouds on the horizon, the Judsons moved to Ava. Then the Anglo-Burmese War broke out. The two years, 1824-1826, were terrible years for the missionaries. Because Judson was a foreigner, though an American, he was suspected and thrown into prison, where he underwent almost incredible suffering. The prison conditions were unspeakably bad; the prison was crowded, foul, filled with disease, never cleaned—in short, all but unbearable. During his seventeen months of imprisonment Judson suffered from fever, excruciating heat, hunger, heavy chains, repeated disappointments and the severe cruelty of the keeper. David S. Schaff says that his sufferings at that time "forms one of the most thrilling narratives in the annals of modern missionary trial."

During all that time his devoted wife, Mrs. Ann Hasseltine Judson, suffered scarcely less than did her husband. She endured many hardships and privations and much suffering in order to do everything possible to relieve his torture and suffering. She was a woman whose health never was robust. Her body had been weakened by fever, anxiety and privation. The preservation of her life was a miracle of God's grace and mercy to this devout missionary family. There are few women who have shown themselves more brave and heroic in a combined love for husband and Christ. Who has not heard of

God Never Abdicates

Glen Weimer

GOD NEVER ABDICATES His throne—never yields his place to man—never sacrifices his integrity to human demands.
God remains God!
God keeps the controls of the universe in his hands.
God faithfully uses the tragic history of man to unveil his will for man.
God writes his word across the ruins of human orders of life.
Man can have a new birth of freedom, a new springtime of life, whenever he reads the message of God and lives in terms of it.
Life is never found, save as men lose themselves in God, in the love, wonder and praise of God.
When men turn from God, they soon find themselves in a howling wilderness.
When men lose the vision of God, they lose the concept of life's worth, meaning and high destiny.
Always when men lose God they lose themselves.
Disloyalty to God in small or great things plunders life of living hope.
The terrible and disastrous sin of humanity is that of raising itself to the place of God. Such idolatry brings ruin. Such towers tumble and carry their builders to destruction.

O God, master me with thy unspeakable, unthinkable greatness—until in the spirit of thy beloved Son, I bow penitently, trustingly, and obediently at thy feet. Amen.

UNations from Monkmeyer

One of the major accomplishments of the United Nations that we hear little about is the campaign against disease in many countries of the world. A rural nurse trained under experts of the World Health Organization explains the value of anti-TB treatment to a midwife THRILLED with the spirit of the occasion and inspired by the message of the President of the United States I emerged hopeful and optimistic from the first session of the United Nations tenth anniversary meeting in San Francisco. I was eager to obtain a newspaper early the next morning and read the report of this opening session. That proved to be a genuine disappointment.

The next morning's paper said little about the spirit of friendliness and optimism which prevailed in the Opera House. In fact, the headlines were dabbing Russia. A reporter submitted a front page story which had been built upon a single inference made in the President's speech. Throughout the week my disappointment continued as I searched in vain for the many fine, sincere statements which the speakers made, calling attention to the achievements and the progressive developments of this indispensable world organization. It occurred to this novice reporter that the papers were interested only in pointing up the weaknesses and differences that exist within the UN. They seemed to be totally oblivious to its splendid record of achievement and growth.

I have before me the clippings from the four San Francisco newspapers covering the UN meetings. The great majority of this news emphasizes the differences, the weaknesses, and the problems of the UN. Many of the headlines and captions were flavored with an anti-Russian or anti-satellite point of view. Only the small portion of these clippings deal with the constructive aspects of the reports given by the sixty member nations. Often this constructive information was buried deep within an article pointing out deficiencies and discrepancies.

One glaring illustration is the newspaper coverage of the second day of these tenth-anniversary sessions. On that day the president of the Assembly, Mr. von Kleffens, found it necessary to call the Cuban delegate to order because of the accusation being made in his speech against a member nation of the UN. Mr. Romulo of the Philippines rose to challenge the ruling of the chair and to defend the right of the Cuban delegate to make these pointed remarks. The entire incident consumed about two minutes' time. That night one of the papers devoted an eight-column spread to discussing this incident, yet the same paper gave less than two columns to summarizing all of the other fourteen speeches made during the day, many of which praised the UN and emphasized its indispensability. The following items are some of the newsworthy portions of the tenth anniversary session that scarcely made the news.

Agreement instead of disagreement was the dominant note echoed again and again by the speakers. Closer co-operation, better understanding, growing friendship, rather than increasing division and tension were emphasized throughout the meeting. While the limitations and problems of the world organization were pointed out, frankly, never was there an attempt to convince the audience that this was indicative of a condition of hopelessness or despair. Speakers admitted that problems must be faced realistically but then argued that the resources are more than adequate with which to meet them.

Many actual accomplishments and achievements were pointed out by the sixty speakers of the member nations, including the establishment of a DDT plant in Pakistan which promises relief and eventual freedom from disease-carrying flies and mosquitoes. Also the establishment of a vital radio center in Pakistan which will be the means of future telephone, telegraph, radio and TV developments as well as providing an important relay station for the transmission of information between the Far East and Europe. In Yeman tremendous advances have been made in agriculture and mining. In many countries the production of agricultural goods has been increased many fold. Improvements in laboring and manufacturing conditions have resulted in Burma, Formosa, India, Costa Rica, Iraq, Uraguay and elsewhere. In Jamaica three hydroelectric projects on three major rivers have made it possible to supply electricity for domestic and industrial use on an unprecedented scale.

While the press did indicate that the issues of unification and universality were frequently mentioned it was often reported in a negative way. During the entire week I do not recall one speaker who did not refer to these issues in a very positive manner. They were presented as issues which confronted the UN and which would be dealt with satisfactorily.

Frequently a speaker would indicate that the mistrust and suspicion that had handicapped the UN during the previous years were disappearing and that there were growing appreciation, understanding and trust among the nations of the world. Strong appeals were presented to forget and to forgive the past and to face the future with confidence and hope. Unfortunately, these pleas very seldom found their way into print.

Happily the spirit of the UN sessions was not affected by the kind of press coverage which the meetings received. One speaker jokingly referred to what tomorrow's headlines would be because of some statement in his message that could be interpreted two ways. Another speaker indicated that he was trying a controlled experiment with the press to see if someone would imply that a portion of his speech was directed against another member nation, which he himself indicated specifically it was not. His diagnosis proved correct for someone reported him taking a dab at that nation.

Another glaring omission from the news was the story of what went on behind the scenes. Who were the men responsible for the arrangements for these sessions? Who had the foresight and insight to plan and arrange these historic sessions? Andrew Cordier, the deputy secretary general, is the man behind the scene who does most to keep this international body running smoothly. In addition to carrying the responsibility for planning and implementing the tenth anniversary sessions, Mr. Cordier is responsible for the operation of the entire United Nations organization with its world-wide outreach and its 5,000 employees.

We do not mean to be overly critical of the reporters. Theirs is an extremely difficult job at the best. It is much more so when they are limited in their reporting by a controlled press. For years the press has been attempting to build up resistance, suspicion and distrust of Russia and pro-Russian countries. No doubt these reporters were honestly frustrated as they saw this wall which the press has been erecting begin to crumble and disintegrate before their very eyes.

Fortunately, what the press reported as being another false front put on by the Russians and their satellites appears to be genuine. We are happy to note a change in attitude on the part of the press and the State Department in the days since the close of the San Francisco meeting which was not in evidence during these memorable sessions. We believe that we are honestly witnessing a lessening of the tensions and divisions which have separated the Communist and non-Communist nations during the past several years. Let us rejoice at this trend and pray that all of the nations of the world shall by their actions as well as their words hasten the day when through friendship and co-operation we shall solve the problems of the world.

Russians are visiting other countries as many from other nations are visiting Russia. Here the Rev. Jacob I. Zhidkov, chairman of the All-Soviet Union of Evangelical Christians (left) talks with a fellow Baptist at the Congress of the Baptist World Alliance in London

The world has heard much about the iron curtain during the past decade. We in America have heard about it almost daily. It seems evident that the iron curtain is at least being lifted. This summer a large number of people are being granted visas to visit Russia. The visitors include men and women of high and low estate. Senators, businessmen, reporters, farmers and several citizens from the ordinary walks of life will be spending the summer in Russia.

In light of this privilege for Americans to tour Russia a proposal was made that a number of Soviet University editors be permitted to spend the summer in America. For reasons unknown to this writer the State Department has completely rejected the idea, and these editors are being denied entrance into the United States. It appears that while the Russian iron curtain may be parting there is another curtain, maybe a rubber curtain, which is remaining tightly closed. This writer fails to see what the U.S. has to lose in permitting Russians to visit us. It occurs to us that we have far more to show and to share than the Russians. We would like to have them visit us.

If it is true that world tensions are lessening and that the possibilities are increasing for removing the barriers which have separated Russia and the United States and other nations, then we should each pray and work diligently to use the present opportunity to bring about closer co-operation, understanding and friendship among all of the nations of the world.

The Scent of Christ

And enemy planes, ships and submarines respected it for what it was.

Here is a truth for Christians. Instead of being as inconspicuous as possible — camouflaging our faith and hiding our conviction— we should "have the unmistakable 'scent' of Christ" —and even in the midst of a putrid, decaying, stinking world, men will smell the fragrance of our lives and respect us for the courage of our faith.

One of the unpublicized tasks of a minister is to fill out recommendations for persons who are seeking jobs, entering schools or enlisting in the armed services. I fill out dozens every year. And to the best of my knowledge, I have never been asked about the beliefs of a person, whether they are orthodox or liberal, whether a person is a regular attender at Sunday school and church, whether the person holds an office in the church, is a liberal contributor to the church and consistently reads the Bible, prays and attends communion. But they do ask questions like these: "Is he honest? dependable? trustworthy?" "Can he be trusted with money?" "Is he sober?" "Can he get along with other people?"

You see, the world is not particularly interested in what you believe but it wants to know if you can be trusted with the reputation of another, if women are safe when they are with you, if you can withstand temptation, if you master your appetites or are mastered by them, if you will do your best even when you are not watched, if the possessions of others are safe when in your hands.

I am not inferring that beliefs are not important—for they are. And one of the great heresies of our day, heard on every side, is to be found in the expression: "It doesn't make any difference what you believe." It makes a world of difference what you believe—World War II and the current tensions of our world should prove that. But the reality of our faith is tested by the lives we live. The man who believes in equality, brotherhood and the fatherhood of God but who practices discrimination against the man who is of another race, in reality does not believe what he says he believes. Jesus had a name for people who say they believe but who do not practice. Matthew quotes him as saying: "You hypocrites! Well did Isaiah prophesy of you, when he said: 'This people honors me with their lips, but their heart is far from me. . .'" (15:7-8).

I would make a third observation on this text—an observation in the form of a question: "Does our scent attract people to Christ?" I would suppose that in giving flowers scent that God was interested in making the world a fragrant place for man, to add to man's pleasures. But the biologists assure us that the primary purpose of the scent of a flower is to attract the bees which in turn fertilize the flower and make it fruitful.

If we are the aroma, the scent of Christ, it is for the purpose of drawing men to him and not to glorify ourselves. Our primary purpose in life is not to attract attention to ourselves but to the one who has made us what we are and who longs to remake all men in the image of God. Jesus said it this way: "Let your light so shine before men, that they may see your good works and give glory to your father who is in heaven" (Matt. 5:16).

Adoniram Judson

Ann of Ava? "Hers is one of the immortal names in missionary biography."

In the latter part of 1826, after thirteen years as a missionary with her husband in Burma, Mrs. Judson completed her missionary labors and went to be with her Lord. Her homegoing took place while her husband was many miles from home looking for a new mission site. A little later his two-year-old Maria followed her mother to the glory land. These trials, coming so soon after his release from prison, was an unusually severe blow to him. But he pressed on, resolving to throw himself into the work more vigorously than ever.

In 1830 he began preaching to the Karens, the wild tribes of interior Burma, among whom a few years later there was to be such an abundant harvest. He was beginning to see some rich rewards for his decades of hard labor and many disappointments.

Within a few years he completed the revision of both the Old Testament and the New in the Burmese language. In 1845 and 1846, after more than thirty years in Burma, he took his first and only furlough to his native land; and this he did because of the failing health of his wife, Sarah Hall Boardman, whom he had married in 1834. She was the widow of the gifted and saintly missionary, George Dada Boardman, who had done such magnificent work among the Karens but was called home in the prime of life. When Mrs. Boardman went to the field, English friends at Calcutta pronounced her to be the most finished and faultless speciman of an American woman they had ever known. Dr. Judson's marriage to her was one of unusual happiness, as his marriage to Ann Hasseltine had been. On the voyage home she died.

Judson remained in America more than a year. When he was asked while here whether the prospects were bright for the conversion of the world, he immediately replied, "As bright, sir, as the promises of God." Before returning to Burma, he met and married Emily Chubbuck, an author of promise, with whom he spent almost four years of domestic bliss and attentive affection before he closed his earthly career.

Back in Burma, he spent much of the time of his few remaining years in revising the English-Burmese dictionary. This completed, he started in the Burmese-English section, but failing health overtook him. In the hope of recovering his health, he undertook a sea voyage, but died on the trip and was buried at sea.

At the time of his death, as a result of his thirty-seven years of ministry in Burma, there were over seven thousand baptized native Christians in his adopted land.

The Family Counselor

Naomi Will H. K. Zeller, Jr. Jesse Ziegler

The Family Counselor welcomes letters of inquiry. They may be addressed: Family Life Department, General Brotherhood Board, 22 S. State St., Elgin, Ill.

Dear Counselor,

Last summer two of our children—a boy nine and his sister eleven—went to camp. While there they made their own beds, hung their clothes up, and had to keep everything in their cabin ship-shape for daily inspection! They told this with pride when they came home. But it did not last! The same disorderly ways continue; before they go to camp this time I'd like to figure out how to get some carry-over. Is it my fault in not demanding more of them? I try, but I hate to nag.

Mother of Campers.

Dear Friend,

I think you do not need to blame yourself too much for this situation. In fact, it is a rather common observation of parents. How they wish all the good things learned at camp would carry over immediately into home life!

The pressure of the group at camp along with the rewards or demerits brings about remarkably good results for the duration which are often relaxed with a sigh of relief upon returning to the familiar faces and places of home. The boys and girls have tried to be on their best behavior while at camp and at home once more they feel they can "be themselves" again. And this attitude is not necessarily to be deplored. In fact, it is wholesome for a child to feel relaxed at home, to feel that here he is not regimented.

Why do your children want to be neat at camp and enjoy it? Is it not because they like the praise and respect they receive from their leaders and camping pals?

I believe these same incentives will bring results at home. If we parents will watch for the times when the bed is made or the clothes are neatly put away and will mention it joyfully and sincerely in the family circle along with observations on their growth toward neatness, I am convinced there will be more stretching in the right direction. Praise is a much more effective method than blame.

Very often we notice and mention sadly only the unmade bed and the clothes on the floor.

It usually helps greatly too if there is adequate and reachable closet space for clothes, and cupboards and drawers for keeping things easily accessible but out of sight.

Gracious living can be made the "line of least resistance" and the source of much satisfaction. We need to remember it takes time for well-rounded growth in many areas.

Church and Educational Leaders Hold Conference at Manchester College

Manchester College was host to a conference of church and educational leaders on Aug. 8-11. The conference brought together sixty-one persons including twenty-six members of the administrative and teaching staff of Brethren colleges, six members of the Bethany faculty, fourteen members of the Elgin staff, eleven pastors, three regional and district secretaries and one minister engaged in interdenominational work.

At the beginning of the conference session, Dr. C. Ernest Davis, secretary of the Christian Education Commission of the Brotherhood Board, called attention to previous conferences of educational leaders held in 1943, 1947 and 1951. The present conference was called to give special attention to the nature and mission of the church with regard especially to its need for trained leadership.

T. Wayne Rieman, director of religious activities at Manchester, brought the opening address on the subject "How to Discover the Mind of Christ."

The study conference proceeded with introductions to each of its four major themes. Introducing the discussion and study of the nature and the mission of the church, Chalmer E. Faw suggested a number of observations concerning the essential character of the church that were helpful to the study group that gave the subject more careful attention. In a similar manner Vernard Eller presented a paper on the uniqueness and doctrinal bases of the Church of the Brethren.

To introduce the discussion of "Our Place in the Ecumenical Movement," a panel composed of Raymond R. Peters, chairman, Jesse Ziegler, Lucile Strayer, and J. H. Mathis offered varied views concerning the role of the Church of the Brethren in interdenominational activities. Two papers concerning the place of the church college were presented by Dr. V. F. Schwalm, president of Manchester, and by Robert Sherfy, pastor of the Harrisonburg church.

Among the suggestions for action that grew out of the study groups were the following: The conference favored a more thorough discussion of the doctrine of the church in its conferences and meetings. It called for more emphasis on Biblical theology and specifically for courses of study for all age groups, especially adults on the nature and mission of the church.

With regard to the peculiar mission of the Church of the Brethren, the conference urged a revival of Bible study with an emphasis upon the New Testament and improved methods of study. The importance of maintaining a non-conformist witness to a secular world was emphasized. Also the extending of the strength of the Brotherhood into all aspects of life.

While the conference was concerned that Brethren continue to teach their distinctive beliefs, the participants were eager also that churches would cooperate with other denominational groups at the community level. Special attention was given to home mission and community churches. All churches should seek to serve better the needs of their own communities.

A number of specific suggestions were made concerning our church colleges. The need for more adequate salaries for college teachers was frequently emphasized. Although colleges were urged to expand where necessary to serve a larger constituency, it was recommended that the special needs of a Brethren constituency be recognized first of all. How to make Christianity real on the campus and the use of democratic methods in college administration were also discussed. The conference felt that the church should find some ways to meet the educational needs of young people who are not able to go to college.

The findings of the conference, including the excellent material prepared for papers and addresses as well as the conclusions of study groups and recommendations for considerations by other church agencies, will likely be made available in the near future.

New Era Begins at Summit Conference

M. R. Zigler

Summit is an old word with a new connotation. Four men with the destiny of the world in their hands dropped dramatically out of the sky to meet together at Geneva, Switzerland to try to heal the wounds inflicted by war.

Ten years have passed since the cessation of mass killing. These years have been filled with enormous suffering, and millions of people had to die too soon. These four men represented the most powerful nations on the earth. They came with the authority of their governments. There could be no higher tribunal; therefore it was a dangerous decision to meet. To achieve peace would be well; but to fail would place all responsibility for future unrest and wars directly on these heads of government.

Fifteen hundred reporters and photographers from all over the world assembled at the "House for the Press." Reports from governmental meetings were presented by the four powers simultaneously and therefore all reporters and press agencies were treated alike. These men waiting for news stood hours talking with one another and listening. It was clear that all hoped for peace but there were many who believed that it could not be achieved without force.

The deep religious undergirding of this conference should be considered as one factor that brought a new spirit among the conferees. Before he left the United States President Eisenhower presented his belief that through intercessory prayer, peace, the hope of all men, would come. He seemed to emphasize especially the fact that he would depend upon divine guidance. Churches all over the world set aside time for special prayers. Families and individuals prayed. On Sunday morning before the conference the President and many of his aides attended the American church. No doubt the representatives of the other governments reflected in their way concerning their spiritual preparation.

On Sunday afternoon, the day before the opening of the summit conference the churchmen of Geneva and surrounding areas of Switzerland and France called an open air meeting for prayer under the leadership of Billy Graham. Twenty thousand people assembled on a day when usually people go to the mountain or the lake. For two hours they sat and stood in a hot sun with very little restlessness. Then on Monday, at the moment when men were assembling to represent their governments at the United Nations Building, the people of Geneva met in the Cathedral for prayer under the direction of Dr. W. Visser t'Hooft, General Secretary of the World Council of Churches.

The true summit was reached when people prayed and statesmen worked harmoniously together. The men of God were conscious of their responsibility and the men of state knew that prayers had to be answered. Together these two great streams of strength came together. The whole world waited for results. Hard work and much praying will yet have to be done. We are at the beginning of a new era. The Brethren have a forceful message for peace based on the life and teachings of Christ. This message has an entree now as never before. It can be delivered.

THE BISHOP'S COMPANY, a troupe of ten professional actors, was organized under the auspices of Methodist Bishop Gerald H. Kennedy of Los Angeles. The actors, who have done much to return good drama to the sanctuary, are on their second nation-wide tour, performing in churches of all denominations. They will give a number of plays in 250 cities in 22 states before returning to Hollywood early next year. Directing the team is Hal Bokar, film and TV actor and director

Plainview's Awakening, the Brotherhood filmstrip of the year, is now in the hands of the production laboratory. Watch for an announcement of its release.

Merlyn W. Bowman of R. 2, Astoria, Ill., would like to obtain a copy of Two Sticks, by M. M. Eshelman. If any one has a copy he wants to dispose of, please write Bro. Bowman at the address above.

Janet Niessner, a member of the Walnut Grove church in Johnstown, Pa., began work as an office secretary in the financial promotion department of our Brotherhood offices on Sept. 1. Lorraine Leiter, who is now working in the treasurer's office, is a member of the Welty congregation and not of Rouzerville, as was given in the Sept. 10 issue of the Gospel Messenger.

What Protestants should expect public schools to do in dealing with religion will be discussed by some two hundred persons named by denominational boards of education and councils of churches and convened by the Committee on Religion and Public Education of the National Council of Churches. Held in St. Louis, Mo., Nov. 6-8, this conference on religion and public education will also study what religious concern for the welfare of children means in the way of support for public schools.

Petre will also speak at a missionary program sponsored by the men's work on Saturday evening, Sept. 24, at 7:30.

The devastating floods in eastern United States have challenged us to share with those who have suffered. Brethren Service investigation in Pennsylvania reveals that the greatest need is for workers to restore a disaster area. The forty-four young people who began their B.V.S. training on Sept. 1 are at work in Stroudsburg, Pa., one of the hardest hit of the flood area towns. Some funds will be needed for equipment and maintenance for this and other projects. Any amounts up to a total of $2,000 received by the treasurer of the General Brotherhood Board for this purpose will be given Brotherhood Fund credit and used in work projects in the flood area. Funds received above the $2,000 allocation will be used elsewhere in the Brethren Service program. Our eastern churches will be contacted if busloads of other volunter labor can be used.

Look About You

Jacob T. Dick

IN St. Paul's Cathedral in London there is an inscription by the grave of Sir Christopher Wren, the designer of the Cathedral, which reads: "Sir Christopher Wren. If you would see his monument, look about you."

If you would see what the alive Church of Jesus Christ is doing, if you are interested in seeing her true monument, take time to look about you. On every front the Church of the Brethren is taking on new life through deeper faith and surrender to the Master. The world has tried a lot of other ways to salvation, but many have found that the struggle becomes increasingly futile with their backs turned on the Church and her program. President Eisenhower said at Trinity College on October 20, 1954, that "our institutions of learning and our churches have become the true mobilization centers of those forces which may save civilization."

In looking around at the program of the church we see many thrilling advances. Our summer camps are more active than ever, our church schools are alive with active life-situation discussions, our worship experiences are rich with the spirit of Christ. The same thing is true of our colleges—every one is in a vital advance and development program; our seminary is taking an increasingly important place in training our leadership. Mission work both at home and abroad is presenting the church with a new call at high noon. The work of the Brethren Service Commission is finding in this day not only that people are opening their hands to receive what we have to give physically, but that the world's fearfilled and confused are opening their hearts to receive the message of peace which the New Testament proclaims. Let's take a closer look at just one phase of the work of Brethren Service, the international work camp program.

In any one summer Brethren Service has in her camping program over 200 youth and they come from at least 20 different nations. One thing we ought to understand about our camps in Europe is that they are not only "international," but they are also "inter-racial," "inter-faith," "inter-cultural" and "inter-lingual." By the aid of skilled, spirit-filled leaders these camps are building a fellowship which transcends all the differences which have until now divided peoples. Through these camps in the summer months, and through a contact which is cultivated the year around, the Brethren Service Commission is trying to build a peer group which is strong enough to set forth abiding values, basic ideals and stimulating brotherhood. One Egyptian told me as we stood in the shadow of the pyramids, "Brethren Service has changed my life, literally."

At Annual Conference at Grand Rapids the delegates made great decisions about our need for stewardship education and they looked forward to the time when congregations would give at least as much to the outreach of the church through the Brotherhood Fund as they keep for the local program. And yet we find ourselves to date behind even our attainments for last year. It is very dangerous for the spiritual health of a local congregation or an individual Christian to make fine resolutions for advance for Christ, and then to proceed to live and give in the same way as we have done before. What a glow our Christianity takes on when we make great decisions for the Galilean, and then back up those decisions by more earnest prayer, helpful living and sacrificial giving!

Prof. H. A. Overstreet tells of stopping in Arizona on a trip, to see stones and minerals which were on display in Tucson. He was taken into a small room where the rocks were laid out on shelves and, indeed, they looked like ordinary rocks which he had seen on many hillsides. The shopkeeper closed the door so that the room was in total darkness; then he turned on an ultraviolet lamp. Instantly these ordinary rocks leaped into a kind of great glory. Brilliant colors shone forth, beyond words to describe. A tremendous thing happened—a power was snapped on and a hidden world leaped into life.

When a new power is snapped on, your life will change. That power is the Holy Spirit. When that power is released in your life God makes you see things you never saw before and he makes you want to share with him forever the "burden of the world's divine regret." I believe every person can leap into new life; new responses will be given and a new glow will flood our faces because we have heeded "The Upward Call of God" to make this world a place where Christians can live as brothers.

"Cushion Age" Comforts and the Call of the Lord

Merle Crouse

EVERYDAY new tufts of "cushion age" comforts and diversions are placed on our eyes and stuffed in our ears, making the high callings of the Lord always more difficult for modern-day Christians to heed. For families the problem may be to get the TV shut off gracefully before the kids are too tired to get meaning from evening worship. For others, Jackie Robinson's batting average, how fast Cousin Bill's new Hudson will go, summer heat, and the price of eggs can be matters of intense concern, leaving "religion" in a secondary position.

Nero fiddled while Rome burned. Lots of Brethren tithes shrink to 3 or 5 per cent while German refugee camps plead for enthusiastic 1-W's to direct programs of profound importance in developing ideals in young refugee minds; while new mission areas that have opend in Nigeria lie untouched by Christian hearts; while small, un-pastored mountain churches shed last flakes of aged paint as front doors are nailed shut—all because material support didn't come through. Homeless Europeans nurture tender, weakening faiths in gloomy refugee situations while the challenge of providing a "Brethren assurance" remains unaccepted by too many Brethren hearts.

The measure of sacrifice that these things ask of us is small when we consider Christ's cross and the blessings of Christian love that we enjoy here in our country.

Christian–American–Brethren

Don Snider

YOU are a Christian—is that right?—at least, you declare yourself one. You are an American. Born one. Probably proud of it. You're a Brethren. Free will choice to be one. That's tough. Because as a Christian you are a world citizen—bound to any of God's children in need. Try to free yourself as you do, you can't. You are your brother's keeper—of despised families in the corner of your country, of Korean war orphans, of Navaho Indians, and camp-frozen refugees.

You're an American. Again, that's tough. Why? Because you are thrice blessed, rich—even though you think you are poor. You compare with other Americans rather than all God's children. And it's tough to enter the Kingdom rich. You give a little and you think you are in. You send a coat or $5 worth of food for a work camp in Schwarzenau and you think you have done your magnanimous share. It may look trifling in God's eyes; if only you could see your fabulous way of life compared with all of Europe, let alone the masses of Asia, Africa, South America. (And there are 10,000,000 in America in families with income under $2,000 yearly.)

You are a Brethren. Likewise, this is tough. You tell others how we share—we Brethren, how we started the Heifer Project. Yes, but have you given a heifer, or a tail of one? You are a Brethren. You helped give a heifer once and you rest. Heifers have just been started into needy Austria. Does that move you? You've been taught and reared on the philosophy that Christianity must go into action or it smells bad. Has yours really acted through your pocketbook, on into your special talents? Or are most of your skills and money for yourself and perhaps your family? You are a Brethren. That is tough—because you have no excuse like some who say, "we have no ambassadors out there meeting the need in the name of Christ, in the name also of peace and goodwill."

We Brethren can't say that—we've got 'em, significantly scattered, carefully selected and trained, giving a double message as they share seeds and sermons—a message of (1) love of Christ and (2) love of all men toward each other. All Christians, all missionaries out in the lonely spots don't carry this double emphasis.

Those youth in Baltimore gloriously fighting for the hard-pressed Negro families, our 1-W's on the mission fields, our boys and girls along the Iron Curtain in Germany, Austria and Greece, our Volunteers in prisons, on university campuses, our Brethren in Turkey, Iraq, Indo-China, Lebanon, Egypt. It would be dreadful to let them down.

It's tough to be a Christian, an American, a Brethren—because it means sharing our resources—but it's deeply rewarding once you catch the spirit of helpfulness to the point of genuine sacrifice—whether it's in one day's decision to an offering, or a clothing pick-up or whether, better still, the daily personal decisions to "give, and give and give again, What God hath given thee."

Material Aid Project—Sewing Supplies

REPORT FROM GERMANY . . . "The Mattenberg Camp has been overjoyed at the possibilities available since the sewing machines have come. These mothers are ever so grateful for any amount of new stuff they can get. The German women are beginning to wear "Purina" on their petticoats, bed sheets and pillowcases. They are very proud. The sewing machines are really being gratefully received."

REPORT FROM AUSTRIA . . . "The sewing course at camp 115, Ebelsberg, was completed towards the end of the month. Two weeks before the closing of the course each woman received from three to four square yards of cloth from the Brethren Service Commission. Because of continual and additional interest, another course will begin in Camp 115."

The sewing machines and sewing material projects are explained on pages six and seven of the "Material Aid Handbook." For a copy of this handbook or additional information, write to Material Aid Office, Brethren Service Center, New Windsor, Maryland.

Getting Set for a New Church Year

THIS Sunday our attention is called to the great Achievement Offering for the total Brotherhood program. The term achievement signifies that some goal is nearly completed, either successfully or falling short of expectations.

In a way this is true with another church year. Stop and analyze the achievements your church has made this year. Were all of your goals satisfactorily met or did you fail in some? Whatever the score is on the 1954-55 church year, it is not too late to set new goals, and perhaps even higher goals, for the 1955-56 year.

Throughout the International Sunday School Convention at Cleveland in July, the fact was emphasized that the church and home must work together more if the church is truly to fulfill its mission. How can the cooperation between church and home be strengthened and enlarged? At Cleveland this statement was made, "A child can best learn God's love through love in the family, and can best learn faith through the faith the family reposes in God. When this is missing, the Sunday school must make up for the lack, showing the child an adult who loves him and trusts God."

Today the church and Sunday school must contribute to the stability of family life. Parents' classes in the church will be geared so that parents can develop a stronger faith themselves and will be ready in turn to transmit a living and vital faith to their children. Church social activities from time to time will be planned to include the total family units.

Churches alert to their responsibilities will plan to include various training opportunities during the year. There may be training classes for teachers or the training school could be so organized that all adults of the church could feel welcome to enroll. The Standard Leadership Training courses include Bible study courses and Christian family courses as well as units on the techniques of teaching and administration. See the wide variety of courses listed in the Leadership Education Handbook (available from the Brethren Publishing House for 65c).

Monthly or quarterly workers' conferences should be planned to meet the individual needs of a church. Some of these might be in the form of parent-teacher sessions. See the Brethren Bible Study Monthly for suggestions.

At the beginning of a new church year, the church library committee should take an evaluative look at the supply of resource books for teachers, the number of books available for parents and grandparents to read from an educational point of view or for pleasure. Regularly new children's books should be added to the library.

The Junior High Fellowship, the Youth Fellowship and the various adult classes will likely be getting reorganized at this time of year. Care should be given that each organization plan to do its share in the program of evangelism in the local church. Perhaps a training session on how to visit in homes, especially in the unchurched homes, should be given to each organization so each could carry on an effective visitation program. The more genuine interest that can be shown for the people themselves, the more successful will be the visitation program. All people are friendly by nature and most persons will respond to friendship shown to them. Churches who have systematically and seriously carried on this type of program strongly testify to its worth.

The Sunday evening service hour provides an excellent opportunity for the church to carry forward some special effort in various study units or schools of special emphases or in informal worship services. More time could profitably be devoted to hymn singing. A singing church can not help but be an active and successful church in the community.

A child can best learn God's love through love in the family

The Upward Call of God

From home and abroad resounds the constant call of God for builders of His kingdom to move forward, reach outward, press upward. Through the church we can respond to this call by sharing in an expanding Brotherhood program.

Shall we heed the call to share the message of Christ and extend the fellowship of the church in India, Nigeria, Ecuador and Puerto Rico, among the Navaho Indians and in new, growing communities across our nation?

Do the calls that come from hungry children and from victims of war and injustice impel us to broaden our Christian witness in refugee camps, rural development projects, slums, health clinics and through peace training?

Are we alert to the calls to teach Kingdom values by assuring adequate assistance for pastors, missionaries and local lay leaders, by preparing creative study helps and by supporting our colleges and seminary?

Will we Brethren answer these calls? Will you do your share, keeping in mind what God has so abundantly given you? Let us ACHIEVE by September 30 all sacred commitments of our Brotherhood work this fiscal year.

Ira Frantz Describes Attack on Brethren

AN EPISODE happened Wednesday night that will interest you. We had taken a trip that day to the equatorial marker and had gotten home in the late afternoon. Benton Rhoades remarked that he simply must call on a family in a village just beyond the Calderon, who had attended church for several weeks but had not been coming lately. He had not returned at supper time, which was not unusual. A mission staff meeting was to have been held here at their home that evening at eight. When eight o'clock came and the Florys came to the meeting and Benton had not returned, Ruby, Benton's wife, became worried. Finally Rolland Flory, Ruby and I got into the other car and went to Calderon to see what we could find out about him.

Benton had stopped at Calderon and picked up Luis Osorio, the native moderator of the church, and a schoolboy who speaks Quechua and the three of them had gone down into the village of Comun. They had to park their car and walk some distance. There had been a religious fiesta in the village that day, which Benton did not know. A religious fiesta always means that half the population will be drunk. The family they called on told them they would not dare attend the Protestant services for feeling was running high against the "evangelicos." When they came back to the car they found the tires deflated. While they were pumping them up the church bell began to ring. This seems to have been a pre-arranged signal, for immediately Indians appeared from everywhere.

Fearing they would escape with the car the Indians sought to hold them by digging a trench across the side road near the highway. When our men came to this they had to stop and try to fill it. They found an old shovel but before they could do much the drunken Indians were on them. They got in the car and succeeded in getting across but just then a heavy club was thrust through the window barely missing Benton's face. Also someone smashed both headlights. In trying to get onto the main road in the darkness, Benton ran into a bank and stalled. He got out and climbed on top of the car and tried to talk to the mob but they would not listen. They threw clods and stones at him. So he called to the others to run. They all got away without serious injury. A passing car picked them up and took them to Quito to get the police. In the meantime the Indians broke every piece of glass in the car, overturned it and were planning to burn it when passing trucks prevented it. The local police officer got a bus driver to pull the car up to Calderon. When we arrived and learned what had happened Ruby came back home for a couple of the teachers and some flashlights. With a population of 500 or 600 the village of Calderon has no street lights or electricity. Kerosene lanterns with an occasional gas lantern furnish their only light. There was something almost terrifying to be there in total darkness not knowing who were friendly and who were hostile. Ruby mingled with the crowd and talked to them. All expressed friendship for her although a couple of women let it be known rather loudly that their sympathies were entirely with the Catholics.

After a long time a group of ten or a dozen heavily armed men arrived from Quito, followed by Benton. The police would not go down into the village where the trouble had occurred but said they would investigate it "tomorrow." They said the damaged car would have to be taken to the police station in Quito. So, after replenishing the oil that had been lost and finding that the car would still run, they started off, one car with lights leading the way, followed by Benton in the car without lights and the police car bringing up the rear.

Thursday morning Benton went to Quito to file a "declaration." He spent the entire day trying to get the police to act. While he wished to avoid any extreme measures which would make a martyr of anybody, he yet felt that if no action at all were taken it might encourage acts of hostility toward Protestant missions all over the country. He sensed a degree of hostility on the part of the chief of police. Finally about five o'clock they ordered a detail of half a dozen men to come out, but Benton would have to bring them. Arriving in Calderon they found feeling against the Protestants running high. It appeared that the affair of the previous night had been instigated by whites in Calderon. The police arrested twelve Indians and advised Benton for his own safety to leave at once, also demanding bus fare for themselves and their prisoners back to Quito. A mob was forming, threatening to come down to the mission and attack us. Later two other people came down to warn us that the mob was excited and angry and that liquor was flowing freely.

We got all the teachers from the school, a family in Calderon sent their children down for safety, and several friendly Indians gathered in a total of forty people or more. We bedded the children down with their clothes on, turned out the lights and waited, ready to flee by an Indian path across the fields three miles to the highway leading to Quito. Several of the men went up the road to watch. A blast from their shotgun was to be our signal to get away. We waited thus until twelve-thirty when we got word that there were police in Calderon and that the mob had dispersed.

Our people have been threatened before, but this is the first violence that has taken place. What the future may hold we cannot tell. There is evident determination on the part of some influential persons to drive us out of the community. In June a twelve-page pamphlet was circulated in the community denouncing our work. It stated that "they work quietly but with considerable promise of success." Our school has made a consistently high record on the national examinations. The Four-H Club has won honors. Just last week we distributed purebred chickens to twelve Four-H Club boys, four hens and a rooster to each. The farmers are slowly beginning to adopt some of Rolland Flory's ideas for improvement of their agriculture. Faye Koontz, the nurse, has won the hearts of people by her faithful ministrations and people persist in coming to the clinic for help in spite of the threats of some fanatics.

It appears now that we were alarmed unduly. Some people tell us that they think we were in no danger; that Osorio was the man they were after, and they would have killed him. He and his wife escaped by hiding in a chicken coop. Their children were with us. The mob did beat up one old man, a village official and a decided liberal, friendly to us although not Protestant. Ruby went up to the village this afternoon to see how he is but he had been taken to Quito. As soon as she appeared in the village she noticed that the people began to gather in little knots. It looked ominous to her, so she did not stay long.

Naturally we have not enjoyed all this excitement, but I am really glad to have been here when it happened. We only hope and pray that out of it all may come some good, and that a new day may dawn for these poor downtrodden people. We have seen now the price some people have to pay for their Christian faith.

Iris E. Neff

Modena Studebaker
La Grange, Indiana

THE birthplace and home of Iris Euvonne Neff is the family farm home on the beautiful countryside between Goshen and New Paris, Ind. Iris was born Oct. 30, 1929, of sturdy Brethren stock. Her parents, Abe and Fern Neff, and her grandparents on both sides, have been stable, active Christian workers.

Iris was baptized when she was ten years of age at the New Paris church. However, this childhood step was not the crucial turning point in her Christian experience. When she was a young girl of sixteen, during a revival service and after considered judgment, she gave her heart and mind unreservedly to her Savior. At that time she also began to think definitely of foreign mission service. She confided this dream to her sympathetic grandmother.

This same grandmother once asked her husband, "Jake, what do I talk about most?"

Without hesitation he answered, "Why, foreign mission work, I guess, Jennie." So it was in this atmosphere of unwavering love for Christ and his work that Iris developed a deeply devout Christian character.

There were several other influences in Iris' life besides her home which helped her in the decision of her life work. One was that the New Paris church, in which she grew up, has for years been unusually mission minded. Also, two missionary families worked in the New Paris congregation for a time, and transplanted some of their enthusiasm for mission work into her young character.

Iris not only had the privilege of having a splendid Christian heritage, but she also had the fun and discipline which goes with growing up in a farm home with a goodly group of brothers and sisters. Bill, Lois, Betty, Philip, then Iris and Bonnie worked and played together in their beautiful country home.

Iris was ever the out-of-doors girl, interested in athletics and all kinds of animals, from horses to stray cats. For nine years she worked faithfully at home economic projects in the 4-H program, gaining a wealth of experience in that field. Seven of these years she also raised 4-H calves. One day her mother found her upstairs crying bitterly. When questioned why, she replied, "I don't want my steer sold and butchered." Iris and her sister, Bonnie, also had great days at tennis and other active sports.

Classrooms are crowded and hallways are put to use for class purposes in the San Francisco church

San Francisco Story

"You shall be my witnesses in Jerusalem" was the Master's way of saying, "Win men to Christ in your own town and neighborhood." For generations we have done this by preaching, Christian living, and great revival meetings. But today much of our evangelism is based on careful religious surveys. Men and women take time out to visit every home in their community to discover who their unchurched neighbors are. Home visitation follows the survey and is rapidly becoming one of our best ways of venturing for Christ on frontiers near home. Its effectiveness is based on good Christian friendship—a job at which every church member can work.

More than a decade ago, in 1944, the San Francisco church at thirty-fourth Avenue and Noriega Street was organized with Dillon C. Gnagy, the present elder as the pastor. He was succeeded by David H. Studebaker who was the pastor of this community church in the Bay City from 1947 until the coming of the present pastor, Donald G. Holsopple, in September 1954.

To reach a new community with the program and service of a neighborhood church has been the role of the Church of the Brethren in this residential area. Men and women took time out to make careful religious surveys to determine who their unchurched neighbors were. Genuine progress in winning the confidence of the community has been made. However, it must be remembered that the community at first protested through court action our building in the area.

Starting with twenty-six charter members in September of 1944 the services of the organization were held in the parsonage. When the members moved into the new building out of the parsonage in April, 1946, they said, "We'll rattle around in here for years." But as a matter of fact, in less than three years the facilities badly needed expanding. Now already several years beyond the point of imperative expanded need, the church is capturing its opportunity to serve the community by enlarged physical facilities. Every classroom in the building is crowded to capacity. Even the sanctuary is too small.

When the church first started its expanded building program, it had the thrilling experience of even exceeding what many thought was an impossibly high goal of $25,000.

However, this episode and the entire San Francisco story is a story of more than money. In the process of this building fund effort, the status of the church in the eyes and affection of the community was learned. The test of any man's interest in a cause or program is determined when he is asked for money for its support. Almost $11,000 of the total pledged was given by the community people of non-Brethren background who had never heard of the Church of the Brethren before 1946! This is another tangible indication that the San Francisco church has made an impression upon its community. God is in it!

The San Francisco church is making splendid progress. Seven new persons have been added to the membership, four of these by baptism, in the past quarter making the membership approximately 160 in this "new" church.

Church worship attendance has reached an all-time high in the quarter just closed in San Francisco. The previous record had been set in 1952. A young Married People's Fellowship has been organized and an Older Youth Fellowship is being planned. San Francisco continues in its growth.

Brethren, your assistance through the Brotherhood Fund helps build strong San Francisco and other home mission communities.

Iris spent many years getting a well-rounded education. After completing her high school work at New Paris, Ind., she attended Manchester College for one year. Then, having decided that her contribution to Christ's work was to be in serving as a missionary nurse, she entered West Suburban hospital, Oak Park, Ill., for three and a half years. There she received her R. N. degree in 1952. Since this hospital was affiliated with Wheaton College, Ill., she then entered Wheaton and received a double degree in 1954, the B. S. degree in nursing and the B. A. degree in physical education.

Both at home and at school Iris was engaged in many forms of activities, and it has even been known that she got into some mischievous pranks! She has always had a keen sense of humor and of adventure. Yet she worked so diligently when in college that in a graduating class of 350 members she was one of the twelve honor graduates, and was voted by the faculty into the "Scholastic Honor Society."

Since graduation days Iris has done some nursing and church work, and was the recreational director in junior camp at Camp Mack in 1954.

The call of the Master to give her life on the foreign field was very clear to Iris. So it was a joyful day for the Abe Neff family and for the entire New Paris congregation when Iris was appointed to serve in our Nigerian mission field as a nurse. She was consecrated at the Grand Rapids Annual Conference, June 19, 1955, and after a six-week period of missionary training at Meadville, Pa., left for Nigeria, West Africa.

Our loving prayers go with this consecrated and talented young girl. May her years in Nigeria be filled with the rich happiness of sharing Christ and his abundant life with those who do not know him!

Funeral services were conducted by his pastor, Bro. David L. Rogers, assisted by Elder E. E. Neff. Burial was in the church cemetery.—Mrs. Joel Miller, Oakton, Va.

Church News

Colorado

Denver, First—We were greatly inspired by the account Bro. Paul Sargant gave of their European tour. The offering went to Brethren Service. As a result of a membership class conducted by Bro. Paul Wright, five of our young people were baptized and eight persons have been received by letter into our church fellowship since the first of the year. The chapel choir presented the cantata, God's Only Son. Later the choir gave the same program in the Colorado Springs church. The Cherub choir sings for us two Sundays each month during vacation time. Six children were dedicated on Mother's Day. The ladies' aid society recently purchased a movie projector. Just prior to the close of the school year, our young people held a week-end retreat at Camp Colorado. At our council meeting on July 10, Elder H. M. Coppock was with us. We elected our Sunday-school and church officers for the coming year at this meeting. Guy Hudson and Clarence Miller were our delegates to district conference. Our congregation has worshipped in a V.F.W. hall since our organization in August, 1954. We have bought a very commodious church house at 14th Avenue and Birch street and will get possession of the building the first of November. Bro. Paul Wright, who has been our part-time pastor, will then begin full-time service.—Emma Beckner Hamm, Denver, Colo.

First Grand Valley—May activities in our church included a family night, a baby dedication service, baptismal services for three persons, a mother and daughter banquet, and a talk by a Gideon representative. Bro. Earl Frantz also brought a morning message. On June 2 the Goodfellowship class completed the church directories which were distributed to resident, non-resident members and church friends. Vacation church school was held in June. Brother and Sister Lewis Naylor attended family week at Camp Colorado. On June 26 our all church and Sunday-school picnic was held at the Colorado National Monument picnic grounds. On July 17 our church observed our home-coming and celebrated the fifty-fifth anniversary of the dedication of our first building. Music was provided by the children's choir. Recognition of charter members and former members was made by Mrs. J. H. Kelley. Ralph W. Hoover, J. A. Mitchel and O. H. Feiler, all of whom have served the church as pastor, assisted in the worship service. Bro. E. F. Weaver, who served the church as pastor for eleven years and who attended church in the original building as a child, conducted a memorial service in tribute to those who have passed away since 1950. Bro. Lewis E. Naylor, present pastor, spoke on the church of our dreams. A basket dinner was served at the noon hour and the afternoon was spent in fellowship and reminiscences.—Mrs. Paul Mitchel, Grand Junction Colo.

McClave—Bro. Lyman Snyder and his family from Wiley have moved into our parsonage. This is the first full-time pastor we have had living in our community since the fall of 1949. The first Sunday in May Bro. Snyder and Bro. Robert Walters of the Antioch church exchanged pulpits. At council meeting on Sunday evening, June 26 Bro. Snyder outlined the twelve-point program which had been intitiated a year ago. A number of the suggestions of the program have been carried out by our congregation. Since the dedication of our church in 1909, our church has needed very little repairs. However, it has become in need of changes to meet the needs of our church. A work night is held weekly and the congregation is doing the work with necesary materials being the only expense. The young adult group which was organized during the past year has grown until now it is the largest class in our church. Our church is planning to hold in the future "a week with God when a film will be shown each night with old time hymns being used and an opportunity for decisions. On the second Sunday a church rededication will be held for the redecorating of the church. A basket dinner is being planned for the noon hour. On Saturday night after our special week of service a sing will take place.—Mrs. Lee Graves, McClave, Colo.

Rocky Ford—Our church met in quarterly council July 13 and elected Sunday-school and church officers for the coming church year. Bro. Frank E. Nies was chosen elder-in-charge and Bro. Franklin Anderson will serve as general Sunday-school superintendent. The church also decided to select a Gospel Messenger agent, a temperance committee and a combined Brethren Service and peace committee. Franklin Anderson, Henry Wine and Mrs. Nora Andrews were chosen as delegates to district meeting. Our Annual Conference delegates, Brother and Sister Frank Nies, gave reports on July 10 of the Conference. During the absence of the pastor, the church program was carried on by lay members and pastors of other churches in our community. Luke Berkey of the Mennonite church gave a talk on mission and service work in Puerto Rico, and the Mennonite youth group presented a program of music and devotions. The children of our vacation Bible school gave a program at the close of the school. They also presented a Children's Day program. The Sunday-school department presented Bibles to our twelve high school graduates. The annual meeting of the McPherson College Colorado Alumni was held in Rocky Ford one Saturday night with Bro. D. W. Bittinger as speaker for the evening. On the following Sunday morning Bro. Bittinger preached at our church. A father and son banquet was held June 7. Our church has purchased new hymnals. We have received two new members by baptism since our last report.—Mrs. O. C. Frantz, Rocky Ford, Colo.

Northeastern Kansas

Richland Center—Our women attended the district women's work rally at Morrill, Kansas. Brother and Sister Jarboe and some of the teachers attended the children's work institute at the Sebetha church. Bro. Harley Yates of South English, Iowa, held our pre-Easter meeting. The Sunday school held a birthday supper and later in the evening a business meeting. The McPherson College trio presented a program in our church one Sunday afternoon. Our Bible school was conducted by Mrs. Earl Jarboe for a one-week period with two sessions each day. Our business meeting was held June 19 with Bro. Jarboe in charge.—Mrs. Charlie Williams, Summerfield, Kansas.

Topeka—Our CBYF sponsored an old fashioned box supper. The new adult Sunday-school class has adopted the name of J.O.Y. Several women from our church attended the women's work spring rally at the Ottawa church. Bro. W. H. Yoder served us for seven months as interim pastor. Our parsonage was redecorated and necessary repairs and remodeling was done before the arrival of our new full-time pastor, Bro. Floyd N. Biddix, and his family. The McPherson College a capella choir presented the Easter Sunday evening service in our church. The distrist rally of the W. C. T. U. was held in our church. The district minister's retreat was also held in our church. Our council meeting was held with Bro. Milton Early officiating. A baby service was held during the morning service on May 1. A basket supper was held in the church basement in recognition of family night. The district junior high youth rally met in our church. Our vacation Bible school convened June 7-10 at Camp Herman. Our church had a reception and shower for our new pastor and his family. Brother and Sister Biddix attended Annual Conference. Bro. Leonard Lowe had charge of our services in the absence of Bro. Biddix. The homebuilders' class sponsored an ice cream social. Our last council meeting was held July 20. Since the first of April, we have received seven new members into our church.—Mrs. Lucy Black, Topeka, Kansas.

Northwestern Kansas

Quinter—Brother and Sister D. Albert Crist have returned home, having completed their alternative service. The Wings Over Jordon Negro Choir presented a program in our church. For Sunday evening worship services we have used the films, Unto These My Brethren, Village of the Poor, and Empty Shoes. The women's work group has organized a study group. The men and boys had their annual ground hog supper with Richard Schmidt as guest speaker. Our church participated in the county leadership training school for teachers. During our school of missions, the young people gave a play on life in India. We observed the World Day of Prayer. Our young people attended the regional youth conference at McPherson. Bro. Earl Frantz of McPherson spoke to us one Sunday. J. Kenneth Graham, director of music, presented the Fanny Crosby hymn sing. Bro. Edward K. Ziegler, director of evangelism for the Brotherhood, held a week-end institute in evangelism. Improvements have been made in our church basement and in the kindergarten classroom.—Mrs. Melvin Reinecker, Quinter, Kansas.

Southwestern Kansas

Pleasant View—Glenn Swinger and the McPherson College ladies quartet were with us for a special service. At our family night community dinner, Wanda Will, a returned Brethren volunteer worker from Europe, lectured and showed slides of her work with the exchange student program in Kassel, Germany. The Homebuilders Sunday-school class sponsored a community clean-up project for the church cemetery which was followed by a wiener roast on the church grounds. Brother and Sister David Metzler are serving as our summer pastors. Our women's work group emptied, washed and packed fruit jars for overseas relief. A local flour mill donated the first packing barrels. On July 7 the Hutchinson women's work group and our group met for an all-day meeting to pack jars. A new project for the homebuilders' class is the equipping of the church nursery with beds.—Mrs. Melvin Hornbaker, Hutchinson, Kansas.

Texas and Louisiana

Falfurrias—Our Bible school closed July 8 with an average attendance of 100. Bettie Gauby and Jesusita Salinas were chosen as delegates to the district conference.—Mrs. A. Rupp, Falfurrias, Texas.

Northern Illinois and Wisconsin

Cherry Grove—On May 22 the Carroll County Grange members attended our worship service and on May 29 the Lanark American Legion and the Boy Scouts worshiped with us. On June 5 we received forty new members into our congregation, twenty-nine by letter and eleven by baptism. On June 7 the adult Bible class sponsored a family night program with a potluck supper and the showing of pictures of the Holy Land by Rev. Schriver of Chadwick, Ill. Our ladies' aid held an ice cream social. The district CBYF cabinet visited our church July 10. Meetings are being held to plan a remodeling and expansion program for our church. On Aug. 7 our young adult class sponsored a family night program consisting of various pictures shown by Mr. Fay Christian of Mt. Carroll. The Bible, Truth Seekers and young adult classes purchased complimentary six-month Gospel Messenger subscriptions for our new members.—Mrs. Wayne Derrer, Lanark, Ill.

Southern Illinois

Canton—Bro. William Gnagy from Manchester College held pre-Easter services in our church. We held a successful Bible school in June. Several from our congregation attended Annual Conference and the various camps at Camp Emmanuel. Brother and Sister Levi Shively gave a program one evening on their world tour. We held no Sunday evening services during the months of July and August as our church participated in the union services held in the park. Our church has been ably served by Bro. David Waas and family as part-time pastor during the past year. He will continue his studies at the University of Illinois this fall. We are looking forward to the coming of our new pastor, Bro. Paul Thompson, and his family from Lima, Ohio.—Arlene B. David, Canton, Ill.

Middle Indiana

Bethel Center—Bro. Don Ritchey accepted the call to be our first full-time pastor, beginning his services the first of June. At our last council meeting on July 3, the members voted to buy a church farm in the community which would also serve as a parsonage. Our church attendance and offerings have increased during the past year. We held our daily vacation Bible school the week of June 6. Dinners were served daily at the Bible school with the food having been donated by the women of the church and the mothers of the students in Bible school. Our Bible school offering went to CROP. Our women's work group had an all-day meeting at the Mexico Brethren Home. In the afternoon the women presented a play. We have a 100% Messenger Club again this year.—Mrs. Homer V. Huffman, Hartford City, Ind.

Pleasant Dale—Several of our Sunday evening services were conducted by county and government officials. Judge Myles Parrish and Special Agent Dudley S. Harth spoke on activities of the F.B.I. One of our home doctors also was a guest speaker. The primary and junior classes are having a chapter a week Bible reading. Sister Anna Crumpacker, returned missionary, was with us for a morning and evening service. Adrian Leman, mission worker among the orphan children in Alaska, was with us at both a morning and an evening service. Our ladies' aid is preparing a birthday calander. The ladies' aid and the men's work group are also planning to do some remodeling work at the parish hall. The F.F.A. boys of the Adams Central high school were guests at our church for Rural Life Sunday. A planning committee has been appointed to find out the present and future needs of our church. Bro. John Mishler and Bro. Joe Baumgartner were our delegates to Annual Conference.—Mrs. Wilson Mann, Monroe, Ind.

Northern Indiana

Goshen City—Our church, at a special council, decided to call Emory Kintner to serve as youth leader and leader in Christian education, beginning Sept. 1. Worth George has been ordained into the ministry and will be entering Bethany Seminary in the fall. The men's work is sponsoring the 100% Messenger Club again this year. A number of our members helped in the campaign for Manchester College funds. At our last council it was agreed to accept members of other denominations on their former baptism; six new deacons were called; and it was decided that a cablegram should be sent to President Eisenhower in Geneva, stating that the Goshen City Church of the Brethren was praying for the success of the peace talks there.—Mrs. Lewis Dixon, Goshen, Ind.

Southern Indiana

New Hope—Bro. Carnnie Carpenter gave three messages during our pre-Easter services. Ten of our women participated in the area women's work meeting at the Upper Fall Creek church. Special recognition was given to all cradle roll members on Children's Day. Also on the same day dedication services were held for one baby. Sisters Harriet Bright and Inez McCullough were guests of the ladies' aid at an all-day meeting. In the district pulpit exchange Bro. Calvin Bright spoke in our church and our pastor, Bro. Durward Hays, was speaker at the Brick church. Pastor Hays also attended Annual Conference at Grand Rapids. Our Bible school was in session from June 20 to July 1.—Hazel Hildebrand, Seymour, Ind.

Michigan

Beaverton—Rural Life Sunday was observed with Dr. Paul Miller, head of the extension department of Michigan State College, as speaker. During the morning service the various youth groups in the county with their leaders were given special recognition. Our vacation church school was held the first week in June with our pastor, Bro. Ernest Jehnsen, as director. On June 5 we celebrated the fiftieth anniversary of our church with an all-day meeting and a basket dinner at the noon hour. Speakers for the day were Bro. D. G. Berkebile of North Manchester, Ind., and Bro. D. O. Schechter of Detroit. During the morning service, two charter members, Bro. Ira Early and Martha Crowel, were given special recognition. At the afternoon service Sister Olive Miller gave an interesting history of the congregation and Sister Wealthy Long, a charter member of the aid society, gave a history of the women's work in the congregation. Special music for the day was provided by the adult choir and a youth orchestra under the leadership of Bro. William Mercer. The service was closed with a litany of dedication conducted by our pastor. In a special called council meeting, a pastoral call was extended to Brother and Sister Earl Atkinson of Chicago. They have accepted the call and will begin their work the first of September when our present pastor, Bro. Ernest Jehnsen, terminates his work with us to become full-time executive secretary for the district of Michigan. Our Conference delegates, Sister Mary McKimmy and Elma Rau, gave their reports on Sunday, June 26. Contributions were made to the building fund as a memorial to Sister Jessie Ohmart, On Sunday morning, July 10 Bro. Wayne Wheeler of Lansing brought the message. Several of our young people and juniors have attended camp at Brethren Heights. Elma Rau, Beaverton, Mich.

church. A Sunday school has been organized at the Mt. Wilson church.—Sarah Winters, Cleona, Pa.

Hatfield—Our revival meetings were conducted by Bro. Berkey Knavel of Ambler, Pa. The CBYF sponsored an Easter sunrise service with our pastor, Bro. Ralph Jones, as speaker. The Sunday school gave an Easter program with Bro. William Stoneback giving an object talk to the children. The spring district men's work fellowship convened at our church. The spring district young adult fellowship was also held in our church. Sister Sara Shisler, missionary on furlough from Nigeria, spoke at an evening service. Mrs. Daniel Ziegler of the Mennonite Brethren in Christ church spoke at our mother and daughter fellowship. On June 5 the men's work group sponsored Norman Dettra, secretary of the Pennsylvania Temperance League, as speaker for the evening service. A child's dedication service was held recently. Bro. Robert O. Hess of Manheim was our guest speaker on Children's Day for both the Sunday-school hour and the morning worship service. Seven of our members attended Annual Conference. The delegates, Ralph Jones and J. Herman Rosenberger, recently gave their reports of Conference. In the absence of our pastor, Bro. Norman S. Frederick and William Stoneback were in charge of the services. At our June council meeting, Ray Wampler and Earl Nyce were elected to the office of deacon. Three of our young people, Lucy Clemens, Gladys Delp and Annette Royer, have begun a year in BVS. Sister Lovina Clemens directed our daily vacation Bible school with the daily offerings being used to buy a heifer for relief. The heifer was on the church grounds for the closing exercises of the school.—Mrs. William G. Nyce, Lansdale, Pa.

Mingo—The Elizabethtown College a cappella choir was with us one Sunday morning, and we enjoyed a fellowship meal in the basement with the choir at the noon hour. Our elder, Samuel Hess, served as our delegate to Annual Conference and gave a report of the meeting. Sara Shisler and the Merle Bowman family, missionaries to Africa, showed pictures and told of their work. One of our Sunday-school classes support Mrs. Bowman on the mission field. Our revival was held at Mingo for one week with Bro. Curtis Dubble of Canton, Ohio, as evangelist. Six of our women mended and ironed one day at the Neffsville orphanage. On June 18 a box lunch auction was held at the home of Jesse Hoffman with the proceeds going to the Neffsville orphanage. Since our last report two have been baptized into our church. The Indian Creek church junior and senior quartets had charge of the services at Mingo on the evening of July 10 with Harold Jones as the speaker. Bible school was held at both of our churches. Several I-W men and their wives are living in our community and worshiping with us while working at the state hospital in Norristown. A temperance league representative spoke at both of our churches. Our young people sponsored a song fest at the Mingo church on the afternoon of July 10 with several churches participating. — Mrs. Elmer Haldeman, Eagleville, Pa.

West Greentree—Our love feast was held at Rheems with Bro. Ollie Hevener of White Oak and Bro. Harry Enders of Mountville as guest ministers. At the close of our love feast, we had a fellowship covered dish meal. Spiros Zodhiates, secretary of American Mission to Greeks, showed the film, The Man of Macedonia, at Greentree. The women's work has made articles of clothing for relief. A temperance institute was conducted by Bro. James Renz, Brotherhood temperance director, at the Rheems and Greentree Chambersburg—The dedication of eleven children and the presentation of the pageant, It Takes a Heap O' Livin', were the special events of Christian Family Week. We participated in a pulpit exchange program which was arranged by the town ministerium. In the absence of our pastor, Bro. M. B. Mentzer was with us for the services. One Sunday a representative of the Gideon Bible Society told of their work. The last of May a ground breaking service was held for the new sanctuary. Excavating began the following week. The vacation Bible school gave its closing program on June 19. Annual Conference delegates gave reports of the meeting. The temperance film, Any Boy, U.S.A., was shown one Sunday evening. On July 3 Sister Fay Koontz, R.N. gave an interesting account of the work in Ecuador.—Rebecca Foutz, Chambersburg, Pa.

Hanover—Our church had a study on missions in India. Our Bible institute was conducted by Bro. Elmer B. Hoover of Elizabethtown College. Miss Olive Widdowson gave an inspiring message of her work on the India mission field. We participated in the community World Day of Prayer service. At a CBYF meeting Patricia Ann Oyer showed pictures of the work at a Kentucky mission. Our women's work group was guest of the women of the Gettysburg church. The Elizabethtown College a cappella choir presented a program in our church. Our pastor conducted a church membership class during the months of May and June. The twenty-fifth anniversary of the Willing Workers class was observed at a morning worship hour with Bro. Milton Baugher of York, a former teacher of the class, as speaker. There are ten charter members who are still members of the class. A number of children were dedicated at a morning service in May. The junior class gave a program at the Brethren Home at Cross Keys. Robert A. Bagshaw was speaker at a men's work vesper service. Bro. Ron Rowland represented our church at Annual Conference. The CBYF group held their June meeting in the men's work grove with Mrs. Norris as speaker. Our daily vacation Bible school was held in June.—Mrs. Horace E. Walker, Hanover, Pa.

Sebring—Our church is again cooperating with the other churches of the city in union Sunday evening services. Some of our members belong to the Ridge Choraliers. This group presented Olivet to Calvary at Lake Wales. Bro. Robert Goshorn was elected as our elder for another year. Our delegates, Brother and Sister Goshorn, gave reports concerning the activities at Annual Conference. Mrs. Lena Marchand was elected as our Messenger correspondent. Our pastor, Bro. Herman B. Heisey, conducted a consecration service for five babies. Miss Anna Mae Swank is serving on the medical staff in our Brethren Service project in Puerto Rico for a two-year period. Our church helped with the expense of the baby incubator for the Castañer hospital. Recently the film, The Valley of the Sun, was shown. Sister Goldie Swartz gave an illustrated lecture on her work in India. For Me and My House, was shown at our family night social. One evening a farewell birthday dinner was served for Bro. H. A Spanogle on his ninetieth birthday. The Spanogles have returned to their home in the North. Bro. Perry H. Sanger and Harry Swank conducted the services in the Sunnyland church during the absence of their pastor. A number of our group were in attendence both as leaders and campers for the various camps at Camp Ithiel.—M. Lucile Painter, Sebring, Fla.

Baltimore, Friendship—The book, Studies in Doctrine and Devotion, by Kurtz, Blough and Ellis is being used as the basis for our weekly doctrinal study meetings. The men's work group showed the film, The Baltimore Plan, and also pictures of the Pilot House Project. One Sunday morning the district CBYF cabinet brought us the message, explaining the aims and purposes of the CBYF. Eight of our young people attended the regional roundtable at Bridgewater College. Nine of our women attended the district women's work rally at Locust Grove. On Mother's Day dedication services were held for five babies. Since the first of the year there have been twenty-two members received into our church. Our family night was held with an evening of food, fellowship, food for thought and an interesting family film. Eleven from our church attended the district men's work banquet at Dundalk. We were represented at the district junior high rally by five of our junior high people and the pastor and his wife. By May 29 we had enough in our building fund to pay off our building lots which we had purchased by contract last November.—Mrs. Calvin F. Holmes, Baltimore, Md.

Middle Maryland

Stone Bridge—The young people of our church presented a program entitled, Mine Eyes Have Seen Him. Bro. Robert Schreiber of Hagerstown was in charge of our love feast. Special recognition was given to all mothers on Mother's Day. The Waynesboro volunteer quartet presented an inspiring message in word and song at our memorial service. A family night supper was held in the basement of our church. The women's work group has collected soap, clothing, seeds, materials and surgical dressings for the needy of the world. The vacation Bible school began July 18 and continued each evening for two weeks under the direction of Mrs. Wreatha Upole.—Mrs. David L. Mills, Hagerstown, Md.

Welsh Run—Bro. Roy Hawbaker of the Back Creek congregation conducted a two-week series of meetings in our church. As a result of these services, three persons were received into our church by baptism. Roy Hawbaker, David Lehigh, and Omar Nicarry were present for our love feast on Saturday evening. On the following Sunday morning, Bro. Edward Wingert taught the Sunday-school lesson for the entire school and Bro. Hawbaker brought the morning message.—John D. Martin, Mercersburg, Pa.

Oakvale—Sister Elizabeth Broughman of Roanoke, Va., held a series of revival meetings at our church June 19-29. There were thirteen persons baptized into our church by Pastor Raymond Boothe. At the last meeting with Sister Broughman enough money was received to finish paying for the oil furnace that was installed last fall. The church has also built a basement and remodeled the inside.—Jackie Brown, Oakvale, W. Va.

Peters Creek—A home-coming and 110th anniversary service was held on May 29. The pastor brought the message at the morning worship hour, and Bro. C. M. Key spoke in the afternoon on the topic, precious memories. A special offering was received to apply on the parsonage note. One Sunday, June 12, a mortgage burning service was held, marking the achievement of a debt-free parsonage. Our daily vacation Bible school was held June 27—July 1. Our pastor served as delegate to Annual Conference. He brought an interesting and challenging report of the Conference. Since our last report, one person has been received into the church by baptism and two have been received by letter. At a recent council meeting, Bro. Merlin E. Garber was elected elder and Bro. Price Plunkett was elected church school superintendent. L. S. Shepherd, Mrs. C. E. Vinyard and Mrs. G. P. Plunkett served as delegates to district conference.—Mary E. Naff, Roanoke, Va.

Roanoke, First—Our pastor held a special series of four Sunday evening services on the Christian and his vocation. Two speakers, representing different vocations were presented each Sunday. Fifteen babies were dedicated during the morning worship service on Mother's Day. The men's Bible class presented flowers to each mother. In the evening the Bridgewater College Glee Clubs presented a concert in the Jefferson high school auditorium. The pastor and the young people conducted a worship service at Mills Mountain school near Roanoke one Sunday. Two members have been received by baptism into our fellowship. A special music program was presented one evening by the male chorus of our church. Following the worship service, the women and men of the church held their respective mass meetings. During the summer months our Sunday morning worship service was held from 9:45 to 10:40 and church school was 10:45 to 11:30. Our annual church school picnic was held June 5 at Camp Bethel. The Children's Day program was given June 12. Vacation church school was conducted during the week of June 13. Kindergarten and primary classes met each morning and junior and junior high groups met each evening. In the absence of our pastor, guest speakers included Bro. Merlin Garber, pastor of the Central church, Bro. James Flora and Bro. Roy Boaz. Eighteen persons from our church attended Annual Conference at Grand Rapids.—Betty Jordan, Roanoke, Va.

Grottoes—Our revival was held with Bro. Rufus McDannel of Elizabethtown, Pa., as evangelist. As a result of the meetings, one was baptized and one received by letter into our fellowship. Our communion and love feast was held with Bro. I. S. Long officiating. A mother and daughter banquet was held with Mrs. William Willoughby of Bridgewater as guest speaker. Our pastor, Bro. J. Willard Bowman, has turned in his resignation which is effective Sept. 1. Bro. Donald Fancher, a native of Rocky Ford, Colo., has accepted a call to the combined pastorate of the Grottoes and Pleasant Hill churches. Our church cooperated with the Methodist and Baptist churches in a union vacation Bible school. Parsonage Day was observed on June 26 with an all-day service. A basket lunch was served at noon. Bro. John Locke was guest speaker and Brother and Sister Galen Stinebaugh of Bridgewater College provided special music. An offering was received for the parsonage fund.—Mrs. Leon W. Smith, Grottoes, Va.

Pleasant Hill—A special council was held at the church on Friday, July 15, in which the church voted to purchase a house for a parsonage. The ladies of the church sponsored a lawn party on July 16, with the proceeds being used for the yard of the church grounds. Our pastor, Bro. Willard Bowman, completed his service with us in August. Bro. Donald Francher has become pastor of our church. —Mrs. Leon Rankin, Crimora, Va.

Antioch—Our church is progressing under the leadership of our pastor, Carson M. Key. Bro. Carroll Ringgold has been elected elder-in-charge for another year. Clara Harper was a recent guest speaker on a Sunday morning and she also visited the women's meeting. The women of the church presented the play, Ideals of Motherhood, at the mother and daughter banquet. The men recently organized and there were seventy-five men in attendance for the first meeting. On Annual Conference Sunday the men presented the morning service. Two babies were dedicated on Mother's Day. Nine members have been added to our church since our last report. Children's Day was observed in our church with a play presented by the children's department. Fourteen from our church attended a joint district training school for vacation school workers. Our vacation school was held June 27—July 2. Our school offering will help to send Christian workers to the agricultural migrants of our state. The Sunday-school picnic was held in the evening of July 2 followed by a campfire conducted by the vacation school as a closing program. Our delegates to Annual Conference were Bro. C. M. Key and Bro. Riley E. Brubaker. Several of our children and youth have attended Camp Bethel. Bro. Price Hylton was guest speaker when our pastor was away in an evangelistic meeting.—Julia Laprade, Boones Mill, Va.

Bassett—District meeting was held July 26-28 at the Brick church with our pastor, Bro. Wilmer Q. Crummett, as moderator. A two-week vacation church school was held in June. The project for the school was the buying of baby chicks for overseas. Children's Day was observed with the children presenting the dramatization of The Lord's Prayer. The play, House on a Rock, was presented in our church and in five other churches in the district by a cast from our church. This play was sponsored by the home and family life committee of the district and the local church. Clyde Carter and Gloria Smith were our Annual Conference delegates. L. C. Carter served from our district on the Standing Committee. The district young adult banquet was held at the Brick church in the early spring. Mrs. S. A. Lipford was guest speaker for our mother and daughter banquet. Miss Clara Harper, missionary to Africa, visited in our church. Many of our church families enjoyed the all-church picnic in July. The junior high fellowship had a day at camp, using the Parables of Jesus as the subject of discussion for the morning. The primary and junior groups enjoyed a week of day camping.—Miss Charlotte Craun, Bassett, Va.

Red Hill—Our church conducted a successful two-week Bible school under the direction of Mrs. W. H. Overfelt. All four classes of the school followed the theme of Heroes of the Cross. On the closing night the classes presented the new songs and the anthem which were practiced during the school. Handcraft work was also shown at the evening program.—Mrs. W. J. Cornelissen, Roanoke, Va.

Learners in the School of Christ

IN ITS eagerness to use every wholesome method of evangelism the church dare not forget that a majority of its members are products of its educational program. Not only children and young people are brought face to face with Christ, but many parents are won also because of the contacts the church has with their children. For this reason it is significant that Christian Education Week this year takes as its theme the great commission that ties together education and evangelism: "Go . . . teach . . . make disciples of all." This is another opportunity to enlist every member's support of the Sunday school and all other aspects of the teaching program.

Disciples are not only converts but learners. As the picture above suggests, that learning begins early in life. Let us pray that it never stops and that the church can find ways of deepening the discipleship of all age groups. Let us pray that it never rests from the task of bringing new learners into the school of Christ.

Dazzled by the Lure of Bigness?

The continuing reports of increasing enrollments in Brethren colleges appearing in your columns and elsewhere are both gratitfying and pathetic. They are gratifying to the extent that increasing enrollments promise economic stability for the colleges and thereby provide a necessary basis for the achievement of sound educational objectives. There is certainly a point below which enrollment can not drop if a college is to operate economically.

In these reports, however, there is also pathos—pathos because they may imply that colleges have been beguiled by glittering prospects for which they may be surrendering their respect for the facts and their loyalty to the standards of Christian practice. One can feel only pathos when such a surrender is made by an institution which regards itself as Christian and which associates itself with the particular emphases of the Brethren.

One wonders whether behind these announcements there are those who are beguiled into thinking that a bigger institution, no matter what the proportion of increase, is a better institution. One wonders further whether the colleges in turn transmit their delusion to the public, perhaps being as unwitting in the latter case as in the former.

There is no basis in fact, or in logic, for believing that a college necessarily becomes better as it becomes bigger. Indeed the exact opposite may be the result.

The delusion is compounded when it is realized that the increases are due to a growing potential college population and not wholly to the quality of the colleges in question. It is precisely at this point that the issue can be most easily confused. Colleges which in the past have struggled to find enough students to keep going cannot point to the transition from the smallness of the past, which they could not overcome, to the flood tide of the future, for which they cannot wholly claim credit, as a mark of their superiority.

But the problem is not merely one of strict regard for the facts; it is also one of loyalty to the norms of Christian practice. In the past there has been an easy identification of the Christian character of a college with certain well-known prohibitions, certain institutional routines, or certain curricular requirements. Those colleges which deviated from these formalities were regarded unworthy of the support of Christian people.

Beside the present problem those earlier issues begin to seem trivial. Are we witnessing an eager capitulation to worldly standards of success? Are the Brethren colleges dazzled by the lure of bigness: more and more students, which in turn will bring more buildings, a bigger budget, a larger faculty, and more athletic victories? Bigness, numbers, power are certainly in the world's book as measures of success, but one is hard put to justify them by the Gospel of Jesus Christ. Jesus commands us to distinguish between the cultural and the Christian.

There is an "impending tidal wave of students." Of this there can be no question, and many colleges, including the Christian colleges, may be forced to accept more students than they would wish in order that they may survive and in order that certain values may be preserved. But there is a difference between performing a service in the public interest and implicitly claiming for a situation more than the facts will justify and more than Christian virtue will allow.

There is a wonderful parable in the New Testament about a man who wanted to build bigger barns. God grant that the Brethren colleges may not lead the Christian community to identify them with the pathetic figure in the parable.

Do We Honor Our Old Folks?

The Old Folks' Bible class of the Oak Grove Sunday school planned a special dinner for the class at the church one Sunday in May following the morning srevice. All members of the class were invited, but a table was set for all members past eighty and their friends who were past eighty.

We had nine at this table; the oldest was ninety-three. We had invited one sister ninety-five, but she took sick before the day and wasn't able to come. Three or four of the class were not able to be present.

One old brother, eighty-three and a half years old and totally blind, said over and over, "This is the happiest day of my life."—H. C. Spangler, Roanoke, Va.

THE EDUCATIONAL FUNCTION of the Local Church

Russell V. Bollinger

Chairman, Christian Education Commission, General Brotherhood Board

IT SEEMS strange indeed that there was a period in the history of the church when teaching religion was not regarded as a proper activity of ministers or of the organized fellowship known as the church. Preaching, by all means—but teaching, no indeed! The essential nature of religion was conceived to be such as to make it impossible for anyone to communicate it except by preaching, by example, and perhaps by means of deeply moving emotional crises induced by the Holy Spirit in ways difficult for man to understand.

To point out this historical fact is not to question either the reality or the propriety of all these approaches to evangelism and the winning of men and women for Christ and the church. But many of our contemporary Christians do not seem to realize that preaching as we have come to know it was a comparatively late development in the early church. It is probably more accurate to describe Jesus himself, not to mention the early apostles and Paul, as teachers rather than preachers. In any case, much of their public discourse resembled our present-day concept of teaching more than it resembled our preaching.

It ought to be clear that the case for the teaching ministry of the church does not rest, in any event, on the changing and sometimes fluctuating practices of the historical church, but rather on the best judgment all of us can make as to the total effectiveness of the various methods for communicating the gospel.

It seems clear that the church in our generation is committed to the proposition that "Go-teach" represents a major segment of her evangelistic mission. While we shall undoubtedly continue to preach and worship and serve our needy neighbors, our teaching ministry seems certain to grow both in conception and in execution.

For the purposes of the present discussion, it is hardly necessary to reiterate the goals or purposes of Christian education. As Dr. Sockman expressed them in his address keynoting the International Sunday School Convention in Cleveland last July: Christian education fosters the development of the individual through four stages of growth in his relation to Christ. He should grow from being a seeker to become a follower, from being a follower to becoming a friend, and from

Through a meaningful task such as teaching or assisting in church school classes each member of the church fellowship learns that to be a Christian is to have a personal and responsible share in carrying on the group life and program of the church being a friend to becoming a disciple. Perhaps too many have stalled their growth at the "seeker" level or that of the "follower" or the "friend."

If the church has such a teaching ministry, it will need to be largely performed at the level of the local church. Since this is the case, we ought to give a great deal of attention to strengthening the total Christian education impact of the local church on the individual member.

Perhaps we have planned too exclusively in terms of the Sunday-school hour at this point. It is quickly apparent that the local church can and often does render many additional kinds of educational services to its members. The church teaches just as surely and genuinely through its total life and spirit as through its more formal classes and systems of instruction. Since this is true, those responsible for the local Christian education program ought to take stock of its total educational impact on the member of the fellowship.

The church teaches by its corporate life and spirit. It is difficult to see how we could overestimate the effect on its members of Christian fellowship of a high order in the local church. If the quality of the fellowship educates, how earnestly we ought to cultivate and cherish that fellowship! The spirit in which the members function at the business meeting, on the church farm, in the women's work and CBYF, at church socials and in public worship, can surely defeat or establish the best efforts of the teacher and the class. When a pastor makes his appearance or takes his departure, when a new or remodelled building is under consideration, when co-operation with other churches is considered, and when misfortune overtakes a member or neighbor, then the spirit of the church has its inevitable educational impact on each member. Whether the spirit of public worship be profound or perfunctory, flippant or reverent, sincere or superficial, each participant is surely being educated in the ways of religion and of the church.

Minrod

The church teaches by providing camping experiences for children, youth and adults, and by sending representatives to conferences

It must be added that the church also educates through its assignment of work and official responsibilities. If each one has a meaningful task and performs it, he is learning not only how to function, but he learns that to be a Christian is to have a personal, responsible share in carrying on the group life and program of the church. In all these and other ways, the church educates through its corporate life and spirit.

Most persons are much more directly aware, of course, of the formal teaching program of the church, which finds expression in the Sunday-school or church school classes, in discussion groups, and in many other activities to which I shall refer.

The church is attacking its teaching functions directly in all these ways. It seems to many of us that the goals or outcomes for which we are really teaching ought to be more sharply present in the minds of teachers than is often the case. A thoughtful young professional man expressed very recently some unhappiness because his Sunday-school class was chiefly occupied with discussions, often argumentative, on the debatable or controversial aspects of the Christian faith, without setting forth any clear conclusions or convictions. Perhaps they were too readily satisfied with having had a spirited discussion, without having done much effective teaching. Again Dr. Sockman's proposed growth formula—from seeker to follower to friend to disciple—would remind us of our real function as teachers.

The church also teaches, of course, when it shows films, slides, filmstrips or other audio-visual aids. We teach when we select books for the library. We teach when we provide camping experiences for children, youth, or adults. We teach when we

Everyone's Responsibility

NOBODY likes to hang on streetcorners," remarked one teen-age boy who was being interviewed about his part in the slaying of another teen-ager. He was one of the fourteen boys who piled into three cars one night in July. Before the night was over they were all in jail charged with murder.

A Chicago newspaper sent six of its reporters to visit the homes of each of the boys involved in the crime. Their stories offer no simple explanation of what causes juvenile delinquency but they point up a number of factors that help to explain why boys get into trouble.

Nearly all the boys were poor students. They were only a little below average in ability but their records showed lack of interest, even resentment toward their schools. They were often truants and most of them dropped out of school to find jobs.

Most of them lived in a depressing neighborhood, in small houses or apartments surrounded by factories and taverns. In spite of the efforts of their parents to make their homes livable, the houses were drab and crowded. The common complaint of the boys was "nothing to do." Their ball fields and parks were overcrowded. Their parents, even those most concerned for their welfare, had little time to spend with them. A few lived with grandparents or distant relatives. Most of their mothers worked, sometimes on late shifts. In one case both mother and father drank excessively. A few of the parents tried to escape from the neighborhood but because of poverty they could not make the move.

So the street-corner gang claimed the loyalty of these boys, even when they feared it. The gang had its own code: "You have to stick together. If they jump us, we jump back. If we don't they'd call us chicken." Street-corner society, with its demand for conformity, was too strong an influence for these boys to resist. There was some drinking, too. "The older boys buy beer and we drink it."

Perhaps the chief reason these boys accepted the gang's rough code was their own uncertainty about themselves and their future. One boy drifted because his life had no meaning. Another could not decide what he wanted to be, "with the draft and all." Another was always tired. Still another was always "in a fog."

None of the boys, so far as the reporters could learn, had any contact with a church except when one boy lived for a time in an orphanage. If there were active churches in their neighborhood, they made no impact on the teen-age gangs that gathered in their own street-corner society.

But surely the church of Jesus Christ has something to offer teen-agers who get into trouble. Even more important, the church can help prevent their getting into such predicaments. The church can offer a faith that gives meaning and purpose and dynamic to life. It teaches that faith to many children and adults. But somehow it is slow in finding the street-corner gangs, the lonely, idle, confused boys and girls who most need Christian understanding and love, who need wholesome church activities, who need a sense of direction in the framework of a Christian calling.

This is the beginning of Christian Education Week. The next time you look critically at a boy or girl member of a street-corner gang, ask yourself whether you are supporting the program of Christian education that could provide a wholesome substitute for delinquency.

How many excuses have you given for refusing to teach a class, sponsor a youth group or serve on a scouting committee? What was your contribution to the camp fund in your district? When was the last time you brought a neighborhood boy or girl to your Sunday school? When you chase the rowdies off your lawn or out of your shop, where can they go? Must they join a street-corner gang because you neglected to vote for a civic center? Will they find it easy to say, "Older boys gave us beer and we drank it," because you could not be interested in better law enforcement?

Today's headlines merely confirm what we should have learned long ago. Christian education is everyone's responsibility.—K.M.

Is It Effective?

THE church school should be an effective instrument in winning men to Christ. But is it? Do our familiar Sunday-school classes, either through their discussion periods, through the teachers' work or through their fellowship activities actually bring individuals in touch with Jesus Christ? Or do they leave such concerns to an evangelistic campaign?

In order to learn what a few church schools and pastors may be doing, we asked several representative leaders to answer this same question. Their replies appear in the next few pages. Surely there are a number of suggestions here for every church to consider as we seek to "go . . . make disciples of all."—K.M.

Is the Church School Effectiv

PEOPLE respond to institutions that give help to their needs or what they believe to be their needs. The Christian church has always asserted that Christ has the answer to every person's needs. The gospel records attest to the great crowds who sought Jesus because he could help them.

If the foregoing is true, then it follows that the church school is effective in reaching families to the extent that it is able to discern their needs and organize its program accordingly.

The needs of a person are more pronounced in periods of enlarging or changing experiences. While changes take place at every age, they are more concentrated in the young adult period. Certainly they are major experiences. (By young adults is meant those of post high school to married couples in the early thirties.) Think of the things they face: Shall I go on to school? What shall be my life work? Whom shall I marry? How can we be good parents? And there are others: How can I follow Christ in this situation? How much should I do for myself and my family and how much for others?

The church school is in a strategic position here. It is organized on an age-group basis. This means, first of all, that its discussions can seek for truths pertinent to the needs of the group. Finding God's will through the study of the Bible will be central. When life expands our knowledge must expand as well. It is very wholesome to see other experiences of study grow out of classes such as special Bible study sessions and parent-child study groups.

A second reason why the church school can be so effective is that it can effect a supporting fellowship. In this period of expanding life, strong group comradeship is of great importance. Class meetings and other group activities are essential. To these, new people can be brought and interested in the church. Good Christian fellowship is a contagious thing and a wholesome thing.

A third reason for effectiveness is that in class discussions it is conducive for persons to make commitments. While it may not show up at the time, people make decisions largely when they have opportunity to share ideas with others and think it over. Pastors know that the majority of people making a first commitment to Christ have been participating in the church and church school.

The question then is how effective is the church school in helping young adults and their families to better understand life, experience a satisfying fellowship and open their hearts to the living presence of Christ. To the extent it does these, to that extent it will reach out to new families.

Ask the Help of Parents

Helen Michael

WHAT I am about to say concerning the problem of reaching unchurched people in our communities is based on the assumption that the church really has a rich, well-planned, deeply spiritual program to offer. How can we interest others in anything less?

The church school is not as effective as it should be in reaching nonchurch families, and it, perhaps more than any other agency, has the best opportunities to do so. The children's division of the church school can utilize the children's natural interest in other boys and girls to locate the unchurched in the community. When a child comes to the church school, by special invitation or otherwise, the teacher should make a call in the home very soon, while the child's interest is high. This tells the child, as well as his parents, that the teacher is concerned about him as an individual, and also gives the teacher an opportunity to impress upon the parents how much the child needs them in this new venture in order to give him a sense of security and well-being.

Parents need to show the child that they believe church experiences are worth while for him and for them. Many parents will respond favorably if they are convinced that their presence and interest will be helpful to their child. If they do not respond, let the teacher be not weary in well-doing, but rather feel compelled to think of new ways of approach, always keeping in mind that the personal and individual contacts are most effective. It is highly desirable that the teacher enlist others to help her—people such as the pastor, the children themselves, class members in the parents' age group, or persons with similar interests or talents. This impresses upon the parents the fact that the church body, and not only a single individual, wants and needs them.

Sometimes parents' interest can be aroused by an invitation to assist in some activity in the children's division, such as a party, a project, a choir activity or a parents' club. Leaders should be alert to discover special talents and abilities among unchurched people which may be used in some significant way. Let us not be slow in asking for the help of these parents, but let us always be loving and gracious, even if they refuse it.

Humility must always be evident in our attitude as we approach the unchurched, for we must constantly remember that at best we can do very little for children in the church without the help and co-operation of the parents of those children. We do not feel "holier than thou," but we have something good that we would like to share.

The revised Brethren curriculum gives teachers and directors a wonderful opportunity and a challenge to work with unchurched families, once they have established a contact. A teacher may be reluctant about calling upon unchurched people, feeling inadequate and insecure. But with the pupil's book and the Message to Parents in her hand, she has a topic of conversation which is worth while, and one which proves that the church has a well-organized educational plan and purpose. If the children and the workers in the children's division are radiant, sincere, and enthusiastic, they can do much to convince unchurched people that the church school has something rich and inspiring to offer them.

Boys' Clubs Build Interest in the Church

Wilbur M. Bantz

BECAUSE I love boys, I have had some kind of a boys' club in every church I have served. One time I had a Boy Scout troop which brought together eighteen of the finest boys in the community. I find it a rewarding experience. One can usually secure the help of the local YMCA or the Boy Scout organization.

The last eight years the YMCA in Decatur has assisted me with a group in providing recreation and guidance, and our club has had as many as thirty or thirty-five boys at one time. We have also had for a few years an effective girls' club.

It is hard to evaluate the educational advantages, but I have had this experience of working with a number of boys that would never have a friend or anyone interested in them. By my interest in them I have also found a close relationship to the county judge and probation officers. As a result of working with these boys, homes have been opened for the service of the church. I am received as a pastor in nonmember homes. It has been my joy to baptize several of these boys, and in some cases the parents. Where the parents have not united with the church they have a growing interest and respect for the church. It is my conviction that religion is caught as well as taught and there is no better way for children to catch it than to live in a group with some one. In playing together they learn to live together.

Back of One Boy's Decision

Ross D. Murphy

THREE boys and I were fishing a mountain stream when suddenly we were threatened with a thunder storm. Our first reaction was to run for our car a mile away. Since that was out of the question we took shelter under a ledge of rock along the mountain side. Huddled together in close quarters, we talked about the thunder and the lightning as coming from God. In the midst of this setting it was easy and natural to raise the question why God sent Jesus into the world. The boys gave rather intelligent answers.

No effort was made to press for any kind of decision; it was sufficient to create a consciousness of God in the minds of the boys and link with it the thought that he sent Jesus into the world to save people.

Several weeks later after the morning church service one of the boys was waiting in the vestibule to see me. Without hesitating for a moment he said, "I want to be baptized." A bit surprised, for the purpose of the morning sermon was to build souls up in Christ rather than bring them to Christ, I said, "Why do you want to be baptized?" He was ready with an answer, "Jesus wants me to be baptized." What better answer could a boy give? It was basically sound.

Young Adult and Youth Classes Are Effective

Urban and Alma Long

MOST adult classes in our church schools today are organized and have regular monthly meetings. It is through such organizational activities that nonchurch and inactive families can best be reached. For example, here are some of the things the Cheerful Workers class (young adult) of the County Line Church has done recently:

1. We hold monthly meetings with well-planned programs of such activities as recreation, discussion, films, speakers and devotions which we invite nonchurch folks to attend. Cards are sent to regular and prospective members before each meeting.

2. We follow a program of personal evangelism: a. With our pastor we compile a list of inactive and nonmember folks of our age to be visited. b. Our pastor mimeographs and discusses with us techniques to use in lay evangelism. c. A night is set for visitation. We meet early at the church for assignments and prayer and then go out by twos. After our visit we return to discuss our evening and make plans for future visits.

3. We have tried to interest inactive and nonchurch members in our various projects, such as sending a heifer to Germany, having a Lord's acre project each year, packing and sending towel kits to the Navaho Indian mission at Christmas, raising money for a film projector, purchasing and erecting church signs, and conducting a worship service for the county home for the aged.

There are two other periods during the church year which

Eva Luoma

Unchurched youth in the community can be reached through planning provide opportunities for individuals and class groups to do effective work in reaching inactive and nonchurch people.

One of the most promising periods is preceding, during and following the regular Bible school session. Parents of small children who will be attending the Bible school should be visited by members of their Sunday school age group at various times prior to the school. They should be made to feel welcome to attend the regular church and Sunday-school activities. Plan a visit during the Bible school to discuss the week's activities and invite them to the closing program. At the closing program they should be made to feel welcome, be introduced to other class members and invited to take an active part in church activities.

Preceding and during evangelistic meetings lay folks can reach others through lay evangelism. Group and individual prayer periods for individuals along with an organized visitation program preceding and during evangelistic meetings may be able to do as much as the evangelist to interest and convict nonchurch folks of their need for the Christian way.

The regular program for the CBYF offers an effective means of reaching local youth. Parties and programs should be planned with new members in mind and a special effort made to have them attend. Often if these youth find a warm fellowship and are made to feel needed and at home they will want to take an active part in the church school and active CBYF program. It is very important to keep these new folks informed of all youth activities. If anyone is sick or hospitalized cards should be sent by individuals and the group. The above methods have proved effective in our local CBYF in reaching inactive and nonchurch youth.

Challenge More People to Take Responsibility

Mrs. Hershel Oswalt

IF THE church school is to be more effective in making disciples of all, it must have more adults in each church who are willing to become "fishers of men." More people need to hear the call and to have a greater love for those for whom they are responsible in their community. More church people need to teach by experience, example and practice. They need to possess something that will compel them to go teach what they have.

Our Master Teacher enlisted his workers by calling them to become. When they were willing to follow him, they found their work and grew in efficiency. He called busy people, in ordinary walks of life, and trained them in small groups for specific jobs, beginning where they were. He gave them a purpose and a goal. He died and arose; then they were motivated to move out.

The church school, through its pastor and board of Christian education, must challenge more people to accept specific teaching and visitation responsibilities. Plans must be made to help these people to grow spiritually and to develop their leadership abilities. This will mean hard work for a few people but there is no easy way out if the needs are to be met. We are told that from the time we meet one Sunday morning until we meet again the next Sunday morning, in the United States, there are 32,400 new homes established, 7,500 homes broken by divorce, and 82,000 babies are born. What a challenge to the Christian teacher, for people are what they are taught to be!

For whom does God hold you responsible? Some junior high young people in the nonchurch family? Maybe you need to follow them into their homes, get acquainted with their families, ask some other parents to visit too, have a parents' class and discuss problems peculiar to the junior high age group and help them plan parent teacher and pupil fellowship meetings. The success of the church school depends on the degree of family participation. Of course you have studied the interests and needs of early adolescence in general and of your pupils in particular, and are doing all you can to help build a fellowship that will create experiences to meet their needs and develop well-rounded Christian personalities. Now is the time to go—help make disciples of all.

A Continuing Membership Class

Raymon E. Eller

FOR A long time there has been a growing concern for nonchurch families in the Dundalk Community. In evaluating our effectiveness one cannot help but feel a bit frustrated because there is so much to do and so little accomplished. However, there are some concrete evidences where the Dundalk church school has been effective with nonchurch families.

In 1947 two boys, ages 9 and 11, enrolled in our daily vacation Bible school, primarily because their mother was forced to work in order to maintain the home. The school showed special interest in these boys which resulted in their enrollment in the church school. The mother was deeply impressed with our friendliness. A special emphasis in the spring study unit for juniors and intermediates was given to evangelism and church membership. Through careful classwork and follow-up by the teacher and pastor the mother and her two sons were received into the church on Easter.

More adults need to be challenged to undertake the tasks of teaching and visitation in the church and church school

One of our newer members in the fall of 1954 gave the superintendent the name of a young couple because they had expressed an interest in enrolling their first baby in some church. The father was of Roman Catholic background, and the mother was nonprofessing. The superintendent wrote the family a letter and at the same time asked the nursery director to visit them. The contact was made and the child was enrolled in the nursery the following Sunday. The pastor received their names at the morning worship service, on the visitors' cards. The prospect was followed up with several pastoral calls and finally the parents were received into the church by baptism in July.

For the past two years the pastor has taught continuously during the church school hours a class on church membership. As the need arises a special class is provided for the children. How has this been possible? There have been three basic approaches: an evangelistic tone in the preaching program, cultivation through the church school, and consistent cultivation and pastoral follow-up. After ten or twelve weeks in the class on membership a final visit is made to each prospective member's home by the pastor to answer any questions, explain in detail the reception of new members, and finally to secure his commitment. A high percentage of enrollees are received into the church. This class has significance and effectiveness because it enrolls prospects in a regular class during the church school hour; it acquaints them with the life and work of the church, and helps them toward better stewardship of life in our great program of Christian living. Therefore our effectiveness with nonchurch families is measured by their willingness to expose themselves, our message is repeated often, honest effort is aimed at understanding, convictions are established, and final commitment is shared.

The Educational Function

set up vacation Bible schools; or co-operate in community programs of weekday religious education. When we send representatives to workshops, institutes or conferences, we are still engaged in performing our teaching ministry. And, perhaps most significant of all, we teach when we train leaders for the various special responsibilities in the church.

When described in these varied forms the total teaching function and ministry of the church assumes a new dignity and a comprehensiveness of which we had not always been aware. All persons having responsibilities for planning, policy-making, organizing and carrying out this educational ministry of the church ought never to lose sight of its scope or significance.

If the church is to perform its teaching function well, it will need to effect some suitable organization for this purpose. While it is true that we tend to add boards to boards and committees, effective group functioning seldom occurs without a fairly specific assignment of tasks.

Most churches have a board or commission of Christian education. It is rare indeed, however, for this group to conceive its task with sufficient comprehensiveness. Typically, it supervises the Sunday school more or less superficially, and may help set up the vacation Bible school.

The local board or commission of Christian education ought to be charged with responsibility for all that is properly included in the teaching ministry of the church. Management of property, employment of pastor and nonteaching staff, and similar matters belong to others. The first task of the Christian education group is to form an adequate conception of their task. If it is not spelled out by the church, it should be asked for and clearly defined. Well done, this process will unify and fix responsibilities for the whole range of educational activities of the church save the preaching and worship service itself. Leadership responsibilities will be well-distributed, and an adequate budget provided, and plans for trained leadership will go forward if the board or commission of Christian education performs its whole task well.

It is difficult to overstate the significance of this task. Dedicated to the development of committed and ever more Christlike character in children and adults, by means of a total Christian education program that is at once comprehensive and unified, the members of such a group can largely set the tone and determine the effectiveness of the total church in the community. There can hardly be a more challenging, not to say exciting, task or prospect.

The Church Also Must Tithe

Lloyd D. Haag

WE HAVE heard many times what the Church of the Brethren could do in world outreach if all its members tithed. It is estimated that total giving would be over thirty-three million dollars in a year instead of our present eight million plus. Our members are confronted with many pleas, as they should be, to make the tithe the minimum standard of giving.

But one wonders if our churches are asking our people to do something that they are not willing to do themselves. If a congregation challenges its members to vital stewardship of possessions, in order to be consistent it must practice the same in its world outreach. It seems almost hypocritical for a church to demand stewardship of its members and then send only a trickle in benevolence itself, spending the lion's share on its own program. Our local churches must set an example by practicing stewardship themselves!

To be specific, each church should "tithe" in its giving to the Brotherhood Fund. Now a tithe for an individual is ten per cent, but we cannot settle for that in a church, for it is administering funds already given to God. (How many churches could be tried for misappropriation of funds?)

I submit that the "tithe" for a congregation would be fifty per cent of the budget for world outreach, including district, regional and other benevolences, leaving fifty per cent for the local program. Half at home and half away. A few of our congregations may reach and surpass this "tithe" now, but for the great majority it is unthought-of, just as is the ten per cent tithe for so many of our individual members. Nevertheless, one half in outreach should be the "tithe-goal" for our congregations.

Standing Committee presented a challenging paper on stewardship to Annual Conference last June. The paper asks "that we take significant steps to fulfill our intention to Seek First His Kingdom by embarking on an expanded program of stewardship education and life commitment which we could expect to result in doubling the current Brotherhood Fund goal in the year beginning October 1, 1958."

Among the steps is a call to each district to allocate definite responsibility for reaching suggested goals for every individual and every church.

Among the goals for the individual is, of course, the tithe as a minimum standard of Christian giving. Much could (and should) be said on personal stewardship in order to educate our "token givers" who put a dollar or two in the basket, when they happen to be there and feel that they have discharged their duty to God; but that is not the purpose of this item. This is directed to the churches regarding the use of the money they do receive.

Now, among the goals for every church is: "Give as much or more in outreach as is spent locally." There is the church's fifty per cent tithe. We have it on paper, but unless this idea comes to life in church boards and church budgets it will be stewardship on paper and the Brotherhood Fund goal for 1958 will not be $2,600,000 but a warmed-up $1,350,000.

It seemed that Conference accepted this challenge a little too easily in view of the chasm between present giving and the goal. Brotherhood Fund giving last year was about $1,200,000 out of a total giving of over $8,000,000; or about fifteen per cent (plus district, regional and other benevolence). Quite a gap between perhaps twenty and fifty per cent. Brotherhood Fund giving has not kept pace with increased general giving. Since 1946, total giving has increased nearly 300% while Fund giving has increased only about twenty per cent. Thus the churches' "tithe" for outreach has dwindled from about 32% to 15% in these ten years. This is not an example likely to inspire individuals to higher stewardship.

There are too many of our congregations with budgets of over $10,000, which send about $750 to the Brotherhood Fund or seven and one-half per cent. They pull down the average of those that try to do better. Not even a necessary building program justifies a church to decrease its proportion of giving to outreach!

Every local church is confronted with the question of what proportion of its people's giving shall go into world outreach. It is an important link. If our people doubled their total giving to $17,000,000 but the churches kept $15,700,000 at home the Brotherhood Fund would still have only $1,300,000.

Yes, the Brotherhood Fund should be doubled and could be doubled by 1958. The world is full of opportunity for increased ministry: Nigeria, Ecuador, Brethren Service, home missions. We were told at Conference that we could get the personnel if we had the funds.

Every church should "work toward" the goal of one half in outreach. As a good step forward, let every church set a minimum of one third in outreach for next year. If our churches averaged one third in outreach, the Brotherhood Fund would be doubled next year.

Every congregation, whether it has a budget or not, might compare its Fund giving with its total receipts and then revise and act as necessary to bring outreach giving to at least one third of total.

As we look toward achieving our present goal at the close of the year, and more especially to next year's budgets, remember that the church, too, must tithe! Let's bring our percentage of Fund giving back to the 1947 level. Let's double the Brotherhood Fund giving by 1958!

World Council of Churches

The Central Committee of the World Council of Churches hears a report from Dr. Franklin C. Fry at its meeting at Davos, Switzerland

The Report of the Central Committee

M. R. Zigler

THE Central Committee of the World Council of Churches functions in many respects like the General Brotherhood Board of the Church of the Brethren. The Central Committee has the responsibility to carry out the decisions of the General Assembly, the last one of which was held at Evanston last summer. It has a membership of ninety. Meetings are held annually. Last year it was held the week following the Evanston Assembly; this year it met in Davos, Switzerland; next year it is planned to meet in Hungary. The next two years it will be held at Yale University and in Rhodes, Greece, respectively.

Davos, Switzerland is a very old and small village high in the mountains. Here many people come for health and sports. It is really cold in the summertime. The altitude seemed to make it easy to work. There was not that tired feeling that comes so often in meetings where there is no slowing down for rests. The regular meeting of the Committee was preceded by many subcommittees preparing for the plenary sessions. Obviously a large docket of business is necessary for a world committee dealing with the total Christian enterprise on this earth.

Dr. Franklin Fry, a Lutheran churchman of America, presided over the meeting in a very friendly and effective manner. There is a unity of purpose and spirit that prevails among Christians which makes such meetings inspiring and fills one with the hope that sometime this same spirit may become the ruling spirit of all men in church and state.

It is difficult to decide the items that should be mentioned in a very brief report. A full report will be available in the near future for those who want to study carefully the actions of this body. It is important for those who want to keep an intelligent, up-to-date understanding that they read and study the official documents for they are carefully prepared and have far-reaching implications in the life and work of the churches. It is important to study the points of difference and where there is substantial agreement.

One of the most important reports to the Central Committee was that of its Executive Committee that meets several times each year. Its next meeting will be held in Australia. It implements the actions of the Central Committee not assigned to special committees. At Davos two major themes were considered outside the normal business and usual subjects. Or it may be better stated that some very old subjects were treated more thoroughly than heretofore. The first theme was in connection with Division of Inter-Church Aid and Service to Refugees, giving special attention to the Christian responsibility in meeting human need around the world. A special study had been made and a report prepared concerning the needs in Asia and Africa. It became very clear that the Christian churches must face the total needs of the world.

The second major theme was the nature and content of Christian unity. Organic unity of all the churches was not considered in this issue. The purpose was to discover the oneness of the church as we face the pressures of the world and to unite our resources in common tasks that we cannot accomplish separately.

The Church Commission on International Affairs made a vigorous report regarding its activities among churches and governments during the last year. A report on disarmament was approved which will likely be printed in the Gospel Messenger. Though it does not advance all the elements Brethren would desire, it is superior to anything the churches have ever said together. The Central Committee met at a time when it was natural to speak on this issue, since the heads of governments have spoken so openly at Geneva.

Very interesting discussions developed on the use of young men and women on a sacrificial basis in government positions as well as in volunteer service in church activities. Many participants could not see their way clear to make a strong call for service until there would be plans laid sufficiently well. Few members of the Committee had such experience as Brethren have had in Civilian Public Service, in Brethren Service work, with sea-going cowboys, with exchangees of all sorts and the volunteer program. The churches together could place in the field a large number of people, and there might be the possibility that governments might be willing to utilize the resources saved by disarmament for this program of the churches. A committee was appointed to follow the discussion with appropriate action.

The question of evangelism and the missionary program of the church consumed much time. It is so clear that due to many reasons the type of missionary work we have been used to is changing. There is a deeper need to study carefully our programs so that an interplay between nations will continue and missionary plans may go forward with renewed vigor.

At Evanston a special letter regarding disarmament was authorized to be transmitted to the leaders of the church in Russia. This was done. An answer was received. At this Central Committee meeting another letter was sent forth by cable and given to the press agencies of the world. The effort is to open ways of consultation with the churches of the East in the interest of peace.

Every morning of the Conference, worship services were held in the local church. Bishop Dibelius of Germany and Bishop Sherrill of America preached the sermons to the community of Davos and the Central Committee members on Sunday morning. Each evening special intercessory prayers were conducted. The spirit of the Conference was one of urgency.

It will be my purpose as representative of the Church of the Brethren from time to time this year to report other developments in the World Council of Churches and the implementations of program that are in the planning stage. The Central Committee considered a larger number of interests vital to the Church of the Brethren than most interdenominational meetings do. We can now predict that the World Council of Churches will give much more time to the subject of peacemaking than heretofore, and also to the meeting of the human needs through the churches. It was a very high opportunity to present personally the gift of the Church of the Brethren of $3,000 to enrich the Peace Library of the World Council of Churches. We will now give undoubtedly all the energy we can to help advance the cause of peace through the churches.

It Takes Courage

MILDRED ALLEN JEFFERY

Not afraid to be what you are,
Not afraid to live your convictions,
Not afraid to speak the truth,
Not afraid of popular prejudice.

Not ashamed of work or class,
Not ashamed of body or age,
Not ashamed to live within your means—
But afraid to lie or cheat.

Not ashamed of family or home,
Not ashamed of race or color,
Not afraid to remain silent
Before a foe's cruel slander.

Not afraid to tithe while poor,
Not afraid to witness before men,
Not afraid to say just a plain "No,"
But afraid to disobey the Lord God Almighty.

No One Lives to Himself

J. M. Blough

NONE of us lives to himself, and none of us dies to himself" (Rom. 14:7). This verse occurs in the middle of a paragraph which teaches consideration of the weak and urges us not to judge others or condemn them. The common interpretation given to the verse is that we do not live to ourselves, but to others, that is, that as we live in society we influence others and are dependent upon them. If we read on in the paragraph we readily see that this is not Paul's meaning at all. He is presenting two other truths.

We Are the Lord's

Verse 8 makes this plain: "Whether we live therefore, or die, we are the Lord's." Yes, that is it; we are not our own; we belong to the Lord. He is our owner and our master, for has he not bought us? Therefore, we cannot live to ourselves or please ourselves, for we belong to somebody else and are under obligations to him. His will must be our choice; his glory must be the motive of every action. Our constant prayer must be, "Lord, what wilt thou have me to do?" Therefore, we cannot live to ourselves or to others; we must live to the Lord whose we are.

Verse 9 says that Christ is Lord both of the dead and the living. When we live we are his, and when we die we are still his. His ownership continues; we are not free. Christ died and rose again so that he might be Lord both of the dead and the living. If we live to the glory of the Lord we can also die to his glory. Death will not separate us from him; we belong to him forever.

What a gloriously comforting thought it is that we belong to the Lord of heaven! What a blessed relationship! Since the Lord owns us we need have no anxiety at all for he will ever protect us. Will not he who cares much more care for us? Our eternal welfare is his pleasure, our salvation his joy. No enemy will be able to claim us or snatch us out of his hands. Safe, eternally safe. We are his.

All Are Accountable to the Lord

Verses 10-12 make it very clear why we do not live to ourselves, "for we shall all stand before the judgment seat of God," and each of us shall give account of himself to God." We are not independent creatures without responsibility; we dare not live our lives just as we please. We have a master who will call us to account. Judgment lies ahead, but the judge is not a man. He who delivered to us the talents will demand an account of our stewardship. Yes, we have to do with the Lord of the universe; we cannot avoid him or escape his judgment seat. On that day every knee shall bow and every tongue confess. His are the power and the kingdom and the dominion forever.

Since the Lord has formed us, since he has sustained us, since he has redeemed us, since he has called us into his service and equipped us for it, is it not right that we should face a day of reckoning? If not now, surely at the judgment men will understand why they dare not live to themselves. The Lord is supreme, and before him we stand or fall. We are not responsible to other masters, but all of us alike are accountable to the same Lord and Master.

Therefore, we should not judge others or despise them, for we are all brethren of the same Lord and members of the same body of Christ. The strong must not pass judgment on the weak, but rather love them and help them. No one should put a stumbling block in his brother's way or any occasion of falling, but let each one follow the things that make for peace and brotherhood. Self-denial on our part and forbearance toward our brethren are fundamentals in Christian living. "Judge not, that ye be not judged."

But you say, "Must Christians stand before the judgment seat?" Does this make you tremble? Look at him who sits on the judgment throne. It is your blessed Lord who loves you, who died for you and gave you eternal life. Afraid of him? To the true Christian this is not the judgment of condemnation, but the judgment of reward. "Who shall lay anything to the charge of God's elect? It is God that justifieth; who is he that condemneth?" There can be no one, for Jesus himself is there making intercession for us. If we are faithful we need

Naomi Will H. K. Zeller, Jr. Jesse Ziegler

The Family Counselor welcomes letters of inquiry. They may be addressed: Family Life Department, General Brotherhood Board, 22 S. State St., Elgin, Ill.

Dear Counselor,

Our children quarrel a great deal partly because they are always "telling on each other." I notice that in school they get the idea that a tattle-tale is a nuisance and somebody who breaks the code of the playground is unpopular: but at home we don't have a code. As parents we often do get insights into problems we wouldn't otherwise know about: so, where is the middle ground?

Parent

Dear friend,

Homes ought to have some code, even as the playgrounds do! The discerning parent does not need to rely on tattle-tale information for character insight. Moreover, the tattler is often seeking attention rather than trying to convey information. If the practice continues after proper parental discouragement, then all concerned — both children and parents — should sit down and discuss the matter. The "injured" child should have an opportunity to tell how he feels handicapped when his parents allow his brother to tattle on him. For their part, the parents ought to make it clear that there is no preference among the children and no reward for unsportsmanlike conduct.

Harry K. Zeller, Jr.

have no fear to stand before the Lord. It will be the time of great rejoicing as we receive our eternal reward and hear the welcome words, "Well done, good and faithful servant; enter thou into the joy of thy Lord."

The Cause and Cure of Worry

C. C. Cripe

WORRY is one of the most common experiences of life today. It is the cause of much trouble, sickness and even death. Nothing disturbs one's happiness, or the happiness in the home more quickly. What is worry? It is overconcern or anxiety or fretting about matters of life's experiences. It is to anticipate the worst that can happen to us. It is caused by trying to carry all of the burdens of life ourselves without seeking outside help.

What do we worry about? How we can get enough to eat or clothing to wear; what folks will think of us; getting more money; our health; what the unknown will disclose; what the cold war will result in; the A-bomb, H-bomb and now the C-bomb. What does worry do to us? It makes us fretful, gloomy and unhappy, as well as destroying the happiness of others; it may lead to sickness, desperation, insanity, suicide or even murder, unless it is halted in some manner.

An incident in my own life may help someone. When I was a young man I taught in the public schools for a number of years. The first school I taught was a one-room, country school. It had the reputation of being the worst disciplined school in the county, though I did not know that until I had been teaching there for some weeks. But the longer I was there, the worse conditions seemed to become, and I had no experience on which to rely. I worried so much over the situation that I lost my appetite, could not sleep well and became very nervous, so that I could not lift a glass of water to my mouth without spilling some of it. I went to a doctor for help. He at once was very much concerned. Without my knowledge or permission he contacted a specialist in Chicago and arranged for an operation for tumor on the brain. But then he asked me, "Do you worry?" I answered, "Yes, I do." He said, "What do you worry about?" I told him about my school experience. Then he said something I have never forgotten and was the first cure for my worrying. "Don't you know that a Christian can't worry? The minute you begin to worry, you take your trust away from God and put it in yourself." Well that was a great help to me, and I finished that year of teaching and a number more and never needed an operation for tumor on the brain. I do not know whether or not that doctor claimed to be a Christian, but he certainly taught me a lesson.

Cure number two for my worrying came some years later while reading and meditating on the Bible. There were two passages of Scripture that caught my attention and completely cured me of worrying. One is Isa. 26:3: "Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace, whose mind is stayed on thee: because he trusteth in thee." Many years later while I was pastor in a certain community, I visited one of my parishioners who was in a hospital. Before leaving I quoted this scripture and offered prayer for him. A bit later his nurse came to me and asked, "Where is that scripture you quoted to him? It was wonderful; I want to read that again." I told her. The other scripture is found in Phil. 4:6-7: "Be careful for nothing, but in every thing by prayer and supplication with thanksgiving let your requests be made known unto God. And the peace of God, which passeth all understanding, shall keep your hearts and minds through Christ Jesus." These two scriptures have helped me many times since when I have had perplexing experiences in my life, or in the family, that could have led to desperation. Bible reading and meditation, prayer and regular church attendance will cure anyone of worrying.

Here are some quotations from various authors that may help you as they have helped me:

"Never worry over what you can't help, for it won't do any good. And never worry over what you can help, for if you can help it you should do so."—Unknown.

"It is not work that kills men; it is worry. Work is healthy; you can hardly put more on a man than he can bear—but worry is rust on a blade. It is not movement that destroys machinery, it is friction."—Henry Ward Beecher.

"Sufficient to each day are the duties to be done and the trials to be endured. God never built a Christian strong enough to carry today's duties and tomorrow's anxieties piled on top of them."—T. L. Cuyler.

"Worry not about the possible troubles of the future; for if they come you are but anticipating and adding to their weight; and if they do not come your worry is useless; and in either case it is weak and in vain and a distrust in God's providence."—Tyron Edwards.

"How much have cost us the evils that never happened."—Thomas Jefferson.

"Do not anticipate trouble, or worry about what may never happen. Keep in the sunlight."—Benjamin Franklin.

Reviews of Recent Books

Modern Christian Movements. John T. McNeill. Westminster Press, 1954. 197 pages. $3.50

In this book you will find the story of significant movements within the church during modern times—the seventeenth century to the present. The movements discussed are revealed in the chapter titles: English Puritanism, German Pietism, The Evangelical Movement, Tractarianism and Anglo-Catholicism, The Ecumenical Movement in Historical Perspective and Modern Roman Catholicism. Here you will learn what happened after the Reformation had largely spent itself as a general movement without bringing all the changes that the passing of time made seem desirable and even necessary to some of the more sensitive religious leaders. Here you will find interesting memoranda on your own spiritual ancestry. You will also gain understanding of certain tendencies in the church of today. For example, the trend toward open chancels and the use of lighted candles is an outcome of the Oxford Movement of the 1830's. As the author puts it, "While we repudiate one another's viewpoints, we silently interchange spiritual goods." Brethren will be particularly interested in the chapter on German Pietism. This book will help you fill in the gaps in your historical knowledge and add to your understanding of current religious life.—C. Ernest Davis.

News and Comment From Around the World

Mennonites Learn of Russian Church Groups

Mennonites have learned from Soviet Baptist leaders that there are about 20,000 of their co-religionists in Russia. Most Russian Mennonites now live in the territory of the Ural Mountains or east of the Urals. According to the Baptists, the Mennonites in Russia are still prosperous farmers. The Mennonites have close relations with the Baptists and are considering joining the All-Soviet Council of Evangelical Christians. According to the Baptist leaders, American Mennonites may soon be able to make contact with Russian Mennonites. There are approximately 500,000 baptized members of the Mennonite church throughout the world.

Refugee Act Unchanged; Still Hard to Administer

Congress adjourned without enacting any of the amendments aimed at easing the 1953 Refugee Relief Act recommended by President Eisenhower and urged by religious agencies concerned with speeding the flow of prospective immigrants to the U.S. It appeared doubtful that the amendments could be pushed through Congress at its next session which begins in January. Church groups may have to continue working under the present regulations for at least another nine months.

One of the recommended amendments would have permitted religious agencies to file blanket assurances for groups of qualified refugees seeking to come to the United States. President Eisenhower had commented that the law is "very restrictive" and "very awkward to administer."

NSBRO Names Metzler Acting Secretary

Edgar Metzler, a Mennonite minister, has been named acting executive secretary of the National Service Board for Religious Objectors. He succeeds A. Stauffer Curry, who becomes editor of church school publications for the Church of the Brethren. Mr. Metzler, who has been serving as associate secretary, prepared for the ministry at Goshen, Ind., Biblical Seminary. A permanent executive secretary will be chosen later by the board.

White House Conference to Include Parochial School Delegates

Representatives of Roman Catholic, Protestant and Jewish parochial schools will take part in the White House Conference on Education to be held in Washington, Nov. 28—Dec. 1. The conference is slated to be the largest meeting of its kind ever held by leaders of American education. Two thousand voting delegates are to attend. Fourteen hundred of them will be appointed by state governors. Privately-supported schools, which enroll one-eighth of all students in the United States, will be assured of representation through the 300 special delegates.

Superintendents Stress Importance of Religion

Public school superintendents from thirty-five American cities adopted a resolution urging that schools make a greater effort to help students understand the importance of religion in their lives and aid them to build and live by a "system of moral and spiritual values." The resolution was part of a statement drawn up by the fourteenth annual Work Conference for Superintendents of Schools sponsored by Columbia University's Teachers College.

The superintendents said, "Although the public schools—as an agent of the state—are committed to no particular religious doctrine or sect, they are vitally concerned with the positive influence of the religions of our people."

Anglican Bishop Asks International Co-operation

Dr. George K. A. Bell, Anglican Bishop of Chichester and honorary president of the World Council of Churches, has warned that the push to develop atomic power "even for peaceful uses" may easily develop intolerable tensions unless international cooperation replaces competion. He spoke at a Service of intercession for the United Nations conference on the peaceful uses of atomic energy. The bishop said that "mankind needs to make atonement for the terrible cruelties inflicted on human beings" during the last twenty years. "These cruelties," he said, "need atonement by acts of special beneficence involving sacrifice."

Why Did Compulsory Reserve-UMT Bill Pass?

After a long and arduous road the Compulsory Reserve-UMT bill was passed by Congress and signed by the President. Why did this proposal which was defeated in Congress in 1948 and again in 1952 finally pass in 1955? The August Washington Newsletter of the Friends Committee on National Legislation gives the following answer.

"Perhaps the main lesson to be learned from the above legislative history (of the Compulsory Reserve-UMT Bill) is the fact that public apathy can never be a match for pronounced determination on the part of the President, the Pentagon, and the leadership in both houses of Congress. Pentagon officials and the President himself pushed vigorously for passage. The President, who very seldom has taken such an active part in guiding his program through Congress, wrote to Representative Powell asking that he not continue to insist on the anti-segregation amendment, as the bill was too important to be blocked in such a way. Not only the Chairmen of the Armed Services Committees, but House and Senate leaders themselves, were active in smoothing the way for consideration and passage before adjournment.

"In marked contrast, the church, farm, labor and citizens groups were less active in opposition than they had been in 1948 and 1952 when their work was so largely responsible for the defeat of UMT in those years. Even at the latest stages of the campaign many Congressmen reported very little mail or visits from the public at large opposing the bill. One midwestern Senator's office reported receiving only about 100 letters in opposition during the entire campaign.

"As a result of this public indifference, the United States has taken one long step, in the opinion of the Editors of this Newsletter, in giving the military great control over the lives of individual citizens—at a time when the hopes of the world have been freshly aroused for the achievement of peace, and in an era of weapons of mass destruction which many military experts feel make such a program largely obsolete."

The Peace Committee of the Philadelphia Yearly Meeting of Friends has prepared a "Guide to Teaching World Understanding" which is to be distributed to all Quaker schools. The guide puts in modern terms the expression of John Woolman, early Quaker leader, that "the world is but one great family."

Echoes from the Sunday School Convention

MORE than 7,000 church school teachers and leaders, bound together in the nation's oldest ecumenical movement, gave historic proof the last week of July of the ever renewing vitality of the Christian faith. Meeting in Cleveland, Ohio, delegates to the 23rd International Sunday School Convention made it plain that

1. Christian education—the only instrument for perpetuating the faith—is definitely on the upswing, and

2. Through the alert use of modern approaches and techniques, dedicated thousands in the Sunday school movement offer today's one great challenge to the cultural and moral crisis of our time.

These two facts came out in remarks of speakers and convention leaders. They were evident in the vast array of exhibits and the throngs that viewed them. Most of all they showed in the enthusiasm of those attending from the United States and Canada chiefly, with a liberal sprinkling from lands overseas.

"Teach Christ Now" was the theme of the great meeting. The urgency of the task was sounded on opening night by Harold E. Stassen, Secretary for Peace in the Eisenhower Cabinet, and president of the Convention since 1942.

The note of urgency was again sounded toward the close of the five day convention in a message adopted by voice vote from the floor. Declared the unique pronouncement:

"As Christians . . . we have a special responsibility. The warm heart of Christianity cannot long tolerate a cold war. There is no Iron Curtain in the Gospel."

In the convention's strongest statement of concern, Dr. Paul Calvin Payne, of Philadelphia, told delegates that man's best hope in the atomic era is to "produce in a short time the kind of men and women who can be trusted to use fantastic powers for some better purpose than to make fantastic weapons, or to commit fantastic sins."

C. Ernest Davis, the Executive Secretary of the Christian Education Commission, is in earnest as he directs one of the discussion periods where approximately 120 Church of the Brethren delegates to the Sunday School Convention met together in the Cleveland Church of the Brethren. The Brethren spent three afternoons and one evening together seeking to find ways of improving our own education program

To do this job, "We must swiftly commit and train a great army of volunteer teachers both in the home and the church."

Dr. Payne also stressed the urgent role of the home in giving children a religious upbringing.

"We must no longer encourage parents to believe that they can shunt off their responsibility . . . to public institutions or to the church. The only religion that is any good is home-made religion."

He called on his fellow Christian educators to "reverse the current practice of regarding Sunday church school as the primary resource." They should concentrate on building a program for the home, a program to be conducted by parents who are "aided, inspired, guided and supplemented by the church school."

Keynoting the opening session, Dr. Ralph W. Sockman, famed preacher on NBC's National Radio Pulpit program, declared the churches must work to turn America's mounting spiritual hunger into a real spiritual revival. Religion has become the great vogue in America, but a vogue is not enough.

"Our best hope of a great religious revival is through the pew rather than the pulpit. We have not enough preachers . . . we must count on laymen to do the evangelizing."

Church must reach youth and homes

Dr. Sockman, pastor of Christ Methodist Church in New York, said top priority must be given the task of reaching American youth and religious instruction in both church and home.

With the help of such media as radio and TV, Dr. Sockman said the modern home can be a better training ground for religion than the old-fashioned one. He urged the daily use of the Bible in the home, observing that "scholars have given us a Revised Standard Version of the Bible in the language of our day. Our people must now adopt a revised standard of reading the Bible to put it into the life of our day."

This note on family responsibility for the teachings of Christ ran as a thread through many sessions—with the parallel thought that it is often the duty of the Sunday school to awaken the family to this responsibility.

Underlying all Christian teaching, several leaders emphasized, must be an intelligent understanding of the Bible.

Citing the tremendous rebirth of interest in this world's all-time best seller on the part of scholars, Dr. Donald G. Miller, professor of New Testament at Union Theolgical Seminary said that the Bible must now move from the scholar's study into the lives of the people. Bringing this about is the "basic function of the church school as a teaching agency."

Charges against Sunday Schools

Present-day methods of teaching in Sunday schools came in for some strong criticism from Dr. F. Eppling Reinartz of New York, who feels that these schools are conveying "sweet bits of morality" to America's young people in an era when the college population outnumbers only slightly that of our penitentiaries.

Dr. Reinartz, secretary of the United Lutheran Church in America, said he had agreed to the role of a friendly prosecuting attorney because he believed that the Sunday school, like political parties and the public press, should be brought to court at intervals and tried on their performance as sentinels of "community righteousness."

He listed three indictments against the 250,000 Sunday schools in which more than thirty-two million children learn the rudiments of a Christian way of life.

He charged that:

1. Our schools do not typically appraise the worth of a person in a way comparable to the value at which Christ prices each and every soul.

2. The theology of our whole church school life tends to be shallow and confused.

3. We do not reckon with the strength of the individual and social resistance to righteousness; we count insufficiently on the active aid of God.

Although Dr. Reinartz found much to praise among church schools for "their understanding and their use of wise and broadly tested pedagogical theory" and of modern teaching materials, he found "there is still too much heartbreak in the inadequacies of our materials, means and methods."

In answer, Dr. A. L. Roberts of Chicago called upon the Sunday schools to meet the challenge of the indictment.

"Faced with the facts of our confused culture and our population growth," Dr. Roberts said, "the task is staggering. Yet we will be discouraged only as we fail to see it in its true perspective."

The general director of the National Council's Commission on General Christian Education, highlighted in a visual-dramatic presentation what must be done to maintain a Christian America. He conceded that the schools only reach 37 per cent of the children, 24 per cent of youth and 14 per cent of the adults, and that a lusty crop of 82,500 babies are born in the United States and Canada each week, who are destined to live twenty-five years longer than the 1900 population. To keep pace with them, 1200 new Sunday-school teachers must be added each week and 400,000 new classes organized weekly.

A sixteen-foot Christ in the midst of the two groups in similar proportions was the focal point at the front of the huge auditorium in Cleveland. All through the Convention Christ seemed to beckon the Sunday-school teachers to serve him by teaching his word in all homes

A Challenge to Teachers

"We've only been doing half the job committed to us," said Dr. Roberts. "Now we must do the whole job," and he outlined a five-point program for the Sunday-school teachers of America and Canada. It included: (1) Improve your teaching; (2) relate it more closely to the home; (3) relate it to the experience and needs of the students; (4) avail yourself of leadership and laboratory schools and of training opportunities provided by the denominations and councils of churches; (5) enlist teachers who have the best qualifications—train them and keep close to them after they begin their work.

The concluding session was marked by the solemnity of prayer of rededication to the teaching tasks. More than 7,000 men and women, with heads bowed and eyes closed, joined in the prayer in the vast darkened auditorium before the shining figure of a giant Christ on the stage.

For this final session, Dr. Charles B. "Chuck" Templeton, noted evangelist, and Dr. Gerald E. Knoff, executive secretary of the Division of Christian Education, dwelt upon the impossibility of freedom apart from God.

"The Christian faith is meant to deal with this world," Dr. Knoff said. "It does have an answer to man's deepest needs and fulfills his highest hopes. It can never fail because it embodies the eternal purposes of God. But it can be thwarted, frustrated and postponed because we don't act as if it were true.

"How futile and pathetic have been our delusions about the way to capture the future for Jesus Christ. We have depended upon piety as a substitute for skill. We have benevolently catered to the variable whims of our classes and substituted cheap fellowship for disciplined Christian living."

In summary, Dr. Templeton pointed out that a knowledge of the Christian faith provides the background for life's fundamental choices and equips people to live in these tumultuous times in relative serenity and increasing usefulness. "No one serves the Christian cause well who brings to it zeal alone," Dr. Templeton closed. "There must be a new dedication of the mind if there is any hope of capturing this generation."

The Church Abroad

Agriculture is the basic vocation for three-fourth of the people served by the churches in their world missions

That Men May Plow in Hope

Ralph A. Felton

WHEN a suicide plane struck a small boat in the waters of the Philippines, a farm boy from Indiana was one of the eight rescued. Two months in a hospital gave him time to think about his future. Steel plows or steel bayonets? Eight years to the day after he left the Philippines in uniform, he was back there, trained to begin service as an agricultural missionary. Today he says, "It's great to work where you're needed; to feel that the people at home are with you."

This world's food is both an economic and a moral problem. No one realizes this more clearly than the peasant farmer under the millstones of landlordism, usury, and low-crop returns. Agriculture is the basic vocation for three-fourths of the people served by the churches in their world missions, and there is need for a ministry through agriculture developed and pursued with the same skill, insight, and spiritual devotion that have characterized our preaching ministry. A better life for millions of people awaits basic improvements in agriculture, but enduring success depends also upon man's relationships to his neighbor in the stewardship of resources which are God's. There is little gain in promoting a technology whereby the rich may become richer and the poor poorer, or in merely replacing one form of materialism by another. The agricultural missionary is in a unique position for assisting people technically to a better level of life, and for helping to provide the moral and spiritual climate in which the more abundant life can be realized.

At the base of the political revolution sweeping much of Asia today is a hunger revolution. Millions of oppressed people are coming to realize that their families were not predestined to a life of misery and want. Missionaries, by their emphasis on the fatherhood of God and the application of Christ's teachings, have helped to generate this rising hope. Now the legitimate demands of underprivileged millions for a larger measure of social and economic justice constitute probably the greatest challenge in the long history of missions.

The people are moderate in what they ask: not power, or luxury, but some land to work, and food and shelter for their families. They are grateful for the help of any who join with them in achieving this goal. The agricultural missionary identifies himself with this common cause of nearly half the people of the world. In the presence of political unrest, he works toward a solid foundation of mutual self-help, stable home and family life, land reform, and improved farm practices.

In Ecuador

On the thirsty slopes of the Andes, agriculturally trained Bruce Beardsley at Picalqui and Rolland Flory at Bella Vista are working with the landless Indians who comprise 60 per cent of the country's population. They are giving their time mainly to the Indian peons, where the agony of poverty and need is greatest. They know that land is the key to the Indian's heart, and through their efforts Indians long deprived of their land may become owners again. The Indians appreciate humility, and love from those who come to aid them. Bible teaching provides spiritual values needed for a more abundant life.

In India

You will find Cornell-trained Gifford Towle in western India. With Indian colleagues he serves the farmers on a large pilot area where the soil is poor and famine is common. But Towle does not believe in just giving out famine relief; he also helps the farmers deepen their wells, so they can irrigate their land and get better crops. His Indian colleagues and the government officers who work with him are proud of the part they have. "Service in agriculture," says Towle, "gives us an opportunity to express the spirit of Christ as we help distressed people in their struggle against hunger and want."

John Patterson of Kansas has developed at Vikarabad, India, what he calls "the Village Center Plan." There are sixteen village centers, each with an Indian pastor, a teacher, and a health worker. Each team of trained workers serves some fifteen villages, where they work to improve health, agriculture, and home life as a devoted ministry service of the church.

Helen Fehr went out to teach in a girl's high school, but she saw at once that "on the lower rung of the ladder are three-fourths of the people, who live by agriculture and village crafts. They are the overworked and underpaid class. Their common legacy is hunger and disease. Religion must reach the common people in the home and out where they earn their living."

So in the little village of Seonaguada, in Central India, seventy miles from the railway, Miss Fehr has pioneered in "training men and boys on their farms, and the women in their homes." Demonstrations, exhibits, and short-term classes for adults in the villages are her favorite methods. "Ours is really not a school," she claims, "but a spirit of cooperation in which the people try improved methods in the home, in the gardens and fields, and teach each other." This means better homes, schools, and churches.

In Africa

Fenton Sands observed the needs of people in other lands, so he applied to his church board to send him to Africa. The holder of two degrees in agriculture from Cornell, he and his wife, a home economist, are working to improve life in a large corner of Liberia. Sands helps to operate three school farms, but his chief concern is moving the rice down from the hills to the swamp lands where it belongs. In its place, cover crops on the slopes will help to check erosion. The Sands are working to improve the diet and health of the people by helping to produce eggs, meat, and soya beans.

Changed home and farm practices make for self-supporting churches. Seminary students in Cuttington College are taught agriculture, so the young clergy may see how to improve all of life at the same time, economically and spiritually.

A Dakota farm boy, Alex Overold, came home from military service in Africa unable to put the needs of the people there out of his mind. After graduation from agricultural college, his church at his request sent him to Zululand. This agriculturist says the soil there needs three things, nitrogen, more nitrogen, and still more nitrogen; and the people need Christian homes, and self-supporting churches.

His students come to school by families. There are now eighty families living on a two hundred acre farm while they go to school.

Special needs

The agricultural missionary usually follows a balanced program to include all of life, but some needs call for special attention.

Mass hunger in the world today presents a grave problem. Our world sets a lopsided table. A few countries are better fed than before World War II, but in nearly all lands where foreign missions serve, hunger has greatly increased. Japan is trying to live today with a fourth less food than was her meager diet before the war. Studies by the United Nations showed Korea to be the most poorly fed country in the whole family of nations. Even before the recent tragedy there, the Korean people had 1458 calories per person compared with 3250 calories in the better fed countries.

Most Africans still believe that evil spirits or devils bring on their diseases. Here they are: tuberculosis, pellagra, rickets, kwashiorkor, scurvy, and skin diseases. Plenty of devils! Preaching alone does not help much. The agricultural missionary deals with all of life as he helps the people improve their soil and grow better food, as a part of Christ's way to more abundant life.

Usury and credit are another problem. When Allen Huber reached the Philippines, he found capital scarce and small farmers struggling to pay interest of 60 per cent on borrowed money. Farmers who borrowed grain paid back at the rate of two bushels for one. Poverty was everywhere. The people were discouraged, and so were the rural pastors. In 1938, Huber helped to organize the first credit union. Since then, 125 such cooperatives have been started.

By this means young people have been educated; homes have been built; rice lands have been purchased; medical help has been secured; and self-supporting churches have been built. In all of this, the members have relied upon their own efforts and on sympathetic counsel, not on government or mission aid.

Land Hunger

Statistics do not convey the pangs of hunger nor the pain of poverty, but we must not ignore them. The Indian Famine Commission in its monumental report estimated that under present methods of cultivation, 1.5 acres of crop-land per person are needed to provide a minimum adequate diet in Asia. But what do we find? Japan has but .3 acre per person, Korea .6, China approximately .8, and India has .8 acre. At the turn of the century, India had 1.2 acres of crop-land per person, but with the steady rise in population, that amount has declined to the present figure of .8 acre.
